The gymnasium classes at the Y.M.C.A. have increased to such an extent that it is quite impossible to place the use of the floor and equipment at the disposal of the hockey players. The only solution of the difficulty is to provide the players with membership tickets, thus enabling them to join the regular classes.

Earl Is Moose Hunter.

The Earl of Kingston, who came to Canada from the old country for his second big game hunting trip in New Brunswick recently, emerged the other day from Miramichi woods. The earl was successful in shooting a big moose, the animal's antlers spreading 65 inches. The earl will return to the Miramichi woods with his veteran guide, Henry Braithwaite, and plans to spend the winter there.

CUTTING THE BASES.

Mike Kelly Once Scored From Second Through the Pitcher's Box.

Writing on "Take a Chance Versus Play It Safe" in baseball in the American Magazine, Hugh S. Fullerton tells the following story about Mike Kelly, the great Chicago ball player of a generation ago:

"The chances Kelly took were the marvels of his era. I have seen him again and again cut straight across the diamond from first to third base or from second to the home plate and land in safety because the umpire failed to see his reckless move.

"One day Kelly cut from first to third on a slow infield bounder. He ran past the umpire, who was racing toward first, screaming at him to watch the play, and, swinging straight across, he tore for third. 'Gaffney called the runner out at first and whirled just in time to catch 'Kel' going into third, then called him out. Kelly walked to the umpire, protested an instant; then, knowing Gaffney had caught him in the act, he remarked, 'All right, Mr. Umpire; I've never been on these grounds before and didn't know which was second base.'

"Two innings later he scored from second base through the pitcher's box and was not seen."

Curious Ear of the Catfish.

The catfish uses his lungs as an organ of hearing. The needless lung becomes a closed sac filled with air and commonly known as the swim bladder. In the catfish, as in the suckers, chubs and most brook fish, the air bladder is large and is connected by a slender tube, the remains of the tracheal, to the esophagus. At its front it fits closely to the vertebral column. The anterior vertebrae are much enlarged, twisted together, and through them passes a chain of bones, which connects with the hidden cavity of the air. The bladder therefore assists the ear of the catfish as the tympanum and its bones assist the ear of the higher animals. An ear of this sort can carry little range of variety in sound. It probably gives only the impression of jars or disturbances in the water.

Sure.

It was the third day at sea, and the Boston man who sat next to the Chicago man in the diner of the steamer was sick and irritable.

"Why do you bolt your food in that manner?" asked the Boston man as he watched the Chicago man eat.

"To keep it down," replied the Chicago man.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

AN AERONAUT

By FRED L. YOUNG

When the steamer Orinoko, on her way from Naples to New York, stopped at Gibraltar a man came aboard with a number of boxes, which were marked "Machinery." He was a pleasant spoken, hail-fellow-well-met sort of person, who made acquaintance rapidly with the other passengers. He bet freely on the daily run of the ship and if he won opened wine to celebrate his good luck and if he lost opened wine to celebrate the winner's luck. In either case he opened wine. Billy Mickleton, the gentleman referred to, soon became known as the best fellow on the ship.

"What's in all those boxes, Mickleton, you brought aboard with you?" asked a passenger.

"When we approach the Atlantic coast you'll all know. I'm going to make an experiment that will attract the attention of the world."

"Why not tell us now?"

"I'm under contract with a New York newspaper to keep the secret till the last moment. The paper is to have the exclusive rights of publication."

Nothing so absorbs people as curiosity, and the Orinoko had not long passed Madeira before everybody was talking about Mickleton and the experiment he was going to make. Some believed it to be a trial trip of a new kind of boat, whose parts were packed in the boxes. Others guessed that he had invented a light submarine to be managed by one person. He would put it in the water when the ship was off Sandy Hook and, moving under water, beat her to her dock. A third crowd guessed that Mickleton intended to be shot out of a mortar from the ship's deck and come down with a patent parachute.

When the ship was 500 miles from port Mickleton secured the permission of the captain to remove the contents of the boxes to the upper deck. When they had been unpacked and carried to the deck Mickleton set to work and put together an aeroplane. The passengers gathered about him to watch, some who knew something about aeroplanes curious to see the machinery put in. But Mickleton waited till they all turned in for the night to do this work, and when they came on deck in the morning they found the aeroplane concealed under a canvas cover.

The captain kindly ordered the ship's carpenter to make a passage for the machine by taking down the stern rails and otherwise render a start possible. When all these things were done and the passengers had nothing to do but wait they crowded around the aeronaut and plied him with questions. "Is it a new power you're going to test?" "Are you going in ahead of the ship or going to make a transatlantic flight?" "Is it to break a record for speed or for height or for distance?"

Mickleton said that it grieved him not to be able to satisfy them, but that he was dependent on the newspaper with which he had made his contract for funds to carry out his experiment and if he let out anything he would forfeit a small fortune. When a man became too persistent Billy opened a bottle of wine.

Fire Island was sighted at 9 o'clock in the morning. At 10 Mickleton was ready for his flight. The last article he put on his machine was a small box. He opened it and showed provisions. From the size of the box it might contain food and drink to last a week. It was evident from this that the flight was to be a long one, and it was the opinion of most of the passengers that Mickleton was intending to make straight across the Atlantic back to Gibraltar. If necessary he would have stopping points at the Azores and Madeira.

Just before starting Mickleton went to the wireless office and sent a message in cipher to a New York newspaper. If any one had any doubts as to the truthfulness of the aeronaut's excuses for not telling his intention this removed them. Leaving the wireless office, he returned to his aeroplane, went under the canvas, made a final inspection of the parts, then, removing the cover, got aboard. Sailors on a run pushed him along the deck; he caught the air, hardly striking the water surface, then rose gradually.

The ship was steaming westward along the Long Island coast. The aeroplane, rising, turned toward the land, passed over the eastern end of the island and gradually passed out of sight. The Orinoko reached Sandy Hook about noon, but, being delayed at quarantine, was not docked till the next morning. Every passenger was on deck and eager to read the account of the aeroplane flight, the start of which he had witnessed. Not a single newspaper mentioned it.

Mr. Mickleton passed out of the minds of the passengers of the Orinoko as he had passed out of their sight over Montauk Point and was forgotten. But the time came when they read the newspaper account, which was a very different one from what they had been told about. It reported how the slickest smuggler working between Europe and America, who had long evaded customs officers, had been caught red handed. Among his smuggling devices the article gave an account of his getting a million dollars' worth of diamonds in free of duty by means of an aeroplane from the deck of a liner.

Sometimes a woman can flatter a man by telling him that she can't.

PREMIER SCOTT'S DIP.

How the Saskatchewan Legislator Hit the Air Whirlpool.

Higher and higher soared the biplane like some gigantic bird. The woman with the lever in her hand smiled happily. She knew they were now over four thousand feet up in the air. The rather heavy set, eld[illegible] man passenger who had craved the [illegible] in an airship sat tightly, as he [illegible] been told, but with firmly compressed lips. He inwardly hoped that this outward appearance indicated a real enjoyment of the sensation of flying. Never for a moment did his eyes swerve from the slight, girlish figure of the woman before him. How cleverly she managed the great, flapping machine! One false move of the lever and——

The man's reflections ceased abruptly. He became suddenly obsessed with the idea that something out of the ordinary had occurred. He leaned forward breathlessly. The young woman at the lever held his life in her hands. Surely the smile on the face of the golden-haired aviatrice was just as bright, but, even as the man looked, her blue eyes seemed to become keener, her slight form more alert. Her trim-gloved hands moved quickly from lever to lever. There came an almost imperceptible jar as the ship seemed to be swinging around. The air currents changed. The man gasped again. It was no imagination. Something was really happening. The ship was surely turning around, now slowly, now faster, again and again. The man passenger who had wanted thrills was getting them.

"Are you frightened?" asked the woman at the levers.

"No, n-n-not at all," gasped the man as he felt himself being whirled faster and faster through the air.

Down, down, around and around, down again, even circling, swifter and swifter went the machine, while the man held tight and gasped and the woman gazed off into space with those keen blue eyes that are so unfathomable and smiled.

"We just encountered an air whirlpool," she observed nonchalantly as she helped her much thrilled passenger to alight, "and I had to start the spiral dip, that was all."

All! Just a sudden little whirl of four thousand feet to earth. And this woman spoke of the matter with the calm indifference with which any other woman might say she dropped a hairpin.

"I'll rest for a few moments and think it over. I feel a bit dizzy," said the man.

Was it any wonder?

The man was Premier Walter Scott, of Saskatchewan, Canada, and the woman who whirled him from the skies in a $6,500 Wright biplane was Miss Ruth Bancroft Law, called the most daring woman aviator in the world.

"There was really nothing to be afraid of," remarked the young woman when telling of the experience. "All I had to do was to keep the machine under control. Had it once got to going too fast in that mad whirl the air pressure would have ripped off a wing. The secret of safety in the spiral dip is to pull up slowly enough to get out without any sudden change. It is perfectly simple."

"Of course," she explained, "Mr. Scott did not know we were in a whirlpool. He only knew we were going like a merry-go-round, and I guess he held his breath a bit. He told me afterward that for many days the earth seemed to him to be an incline plane upon which he had great difficulty in walking."

Booze In Rain Barrel.

Some very funny hiding places have been found by the provincial police in Northern Ontario for the "booze caches" of "blind piggers," but Provincial Constable R. J. Stallwood, of Gowganda, has just had one of the cleverest concealments revealed to him.

When Supt. Rogers of the provincial police, was in Gowganda a little while ago, he issued orders that one J. Cohen, who was suspected, must be apprehended. As it was useless to try the "spotter" method, Stallwood learned that Cohen always went out the back door for the liquor. On a recent Wednesday night the constable concealed himself in the rear of the shanty and waited for him to come out. The night passed off, and one after another of the early hours came and went, leaving the officer shivering, but still determined to finish his work. At a late hour in the morning Cohen issued from the back door, and going to the rain barrel lifted out a bottle.

Stallwood sprang out of the thicket in which he had been hiding and arrested the man. The next day in court Cohen was fined $200 and costs.

Bradshaw and the Months.

Although the provision "D. V." has never figured on railway time tables, a close examination of Bradshaw reveals a trace of strong religious feeling. On the cover the months are referred to by their numerals—"1st mo." for January, "2d mo." for February, and so on. Bradshaw as a Quaker objected to taking the names of the months from heathen emperors and deities, and this prejudice has been perpetuated since the first issue of the time table in 1841.—London Answers.

GARDENERS MEET.

Several Speakers Participate In Horticultural Congress.

TORONTO, Nov. 21.—Hon. W. H. Hearst gave a hearty welcome yesterday afternoon to the delegates to the eighth annual convention of the Ontario Horticultural Association at the Parliament Buildings. He pointed out the great scope for interesting experimentation along horticultural lines afforded by the settlement of northern Ontario.

At the morning session, the president, Rev. A. P. Scott, Perth, said that there were evidences on every hand throughout Ontario of increasing interest in gardening, and especially with respect to the culture of flowering plants.

Other phases of horticulture were described by F. E. Brick of Ottawa, R. B. Potts of Hamilton, Park Commissioner Chambers of Toronto, Morley Pettit of Guelph, H. J. Moore of Niagara Falls and C. W. Nash of Toronto.

Danish Expedition Sets Out.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 21.—A Danish scientific expedition headed by Dr. Mortensen started from here yesterday on a deep sea exploration and biological and zoological investigations. The expedition will first visit the Philippines, and from there will proceed to Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Hawaii, Vancouver and the Gulf of Panama, and will return by way of the United States. It will occupy two and a half years in the work.

Verdict Against Clairvoyants.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21.—A verdict of guilty against James Ryan and C. P. Bertsche, leaders of the "clairvoyant ring," was returned in Judge Walker's court here yesterday. They were charged with swindling Mrs. Hope L. McEldowney of New Salem, Wis., out of $15,500.

In the aggregate the profits of the "ring" were more than a million dollars.

LACK OF EXERCISE
Brings on Troubles which are Best Corrected by Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills

Sedentary Habits Develop Constipation

Man was intended to live an active, outdoor life, and his digestive system was modelled accordingly. Indoor work with hands or head, long hours sitting or standing still, especially in air that's none too good, slow down the healthy activities of stomach, liver, kidneys and the millions of tiny skin glands.

Constipation, headaches, indigestion, biliousness, rheumatism and similar troubles follow.

Then the worth of that good old reliable family medicine, Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, is appreciated. Though it has been in use for over half a century, modern science has not been able to devise a safer or better cleanser for the whole system.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are largely vegetable in composition, free from any harmful drug, and mild yet most effective in their action. They are "Mother's standby" in hundreds of homes because they nip in the bud so many of the common ailments.

$20 AT CONCERT.

Over $20 was realized from a benefit concert held last evening by the St. George's Society in the W.O.W. Hall. The benefit, which was in connection with the late Great Lakes Disaster, although prepared at only a few days' notice, was a splendid success. The large audience was delighted with the short musical program which was rendered by the following: Messrs. W. McLaren, H. Carter, W. Theobald, B. Hartshorn, T. Heafield, J. John and R. Heafield. Walter Stocker, President of the Society, was in the chair.

The money derived from the concert, at which only a silver collection was taken, will be sent as aid for the orphans and the widows.

Refreshments were served at the close of the concert.

MUSICAL TREAT AT ST. ANDREWS

Herbert C, Treneer A. T. C. M. Organ Recital

A musical treat was given last evening to those who gathered at St. Andrew's Church to hear Mr. Herbert C. Treneer's organ recital. St. Andrews possesses one of the finest organs in the district and certainly one of the finest organists. Whatever Mr. Treneer has lost in the world of sight, he has great compensation in his delicate sense of touch and sound. He puts his soul into the instrument and lifts his hearers to a loftier plane of vision than that which comes through the eyes.

Mr. Frank H. Burt, Mus. Bac., of Toronto, assisted Mr. Treneer with vocal contributions. Mr. Burt has a voice of considerable range. His rendering of Handel's "Honor and Arms" was particularly fine.

MODERN ELECTRICAL APPLIANCE INSTALLED AT THE ROY STUDIO

Owing to many inconveniences of the arc light and the flash light in the world of photography, Mr. Fred Roy, the well known Hunter street Photographer has just installed a large electrical appliance with a candle power of 3000 volts.

It is the only one in America and as such will be a valuable asset to the studio equipment. While Mr. Roy was successful in his work with the flashlight in use, he has remedied several defects by the introduction of the new device.

Evening sittings are made as simple as those in daylight and at the same time, the blinding flash of the flashlight and the sputtering of the arc are done away with. Also a negative can be taken on the dullest day with the same success as on a day of bright sunshine.

Children will not be inclined to restlessness as under the old sytem as the time of exposure is lessened to one fifth of a second. The results altogether are more satisfactory.

FATHER GALVIN LECTURES ON CATHOLIC MEN OF SCIENCE

A Large Audience at Meeting of Ladies' Literary Society At the Lyceum

The meeting of St. Peter's Ladies Literary Society held last evening in St. Alphonsus Lyceum, was marked by a very eloquent address. It was delivered by Rev. P.J. Galvin, Principal of the Continuation Classes in connection with the separate schools, and his subject was "Catholic Men of Science."

Rev Father Galvin in his his introduction gave a brief autobiography of Father Kercher's life. He was born at Geisa on upper Rhone in A.D. 1606. At the early age of [illegible] years he joined the Society of Jesus and was ordained a priest at 27. He was appointed professor of ethics and mathematics at the University of Wyrsburg and soon became very prominent, being an expert in deciphering Egyptian hieroglyphics. He also won fame for his knowledge of the relations between languages and lectured in a Roman College on physics and Oriental languages. He made special study of volcanic phenomena and as an evidence of his knowledge of medicine he was the first to suspect the existence of bacteria in organisms. He perfected the speaking tube and Aeolian harp and invented a counting machine and magic lantern. "His versality and wonderful attainments," exclaimed the reverend speaker "were the admiration of his day and despite all his occupations he never lost sight of the one thing necessary—the salvation of his soul; to the last he retained his piety and humility."

Rev. Father Galvin then established a parrallel between the life and work of Father Kercher and the life of the Roman [illegible] Church. What Father Kircher was to his day and generation the Roman Catholic church is to the entire world and has been to all generations since she first came into existence. She attends to the one thing necessary—the salvation of souls—but with that occupation she couples a number of others and so well does she acquit herself of these occupations that she deserves the gratitude of humanity. He stated that it was not his intention to refer at length to the services she has rendered to civilization along the lines of education and fine arts but rather to devote some little time to a consideration of what the Roman Catholic church and the sons of the church have done for the advance of sciences considered by the world as strictly modern.

The speaker remarked that next to the study of theology is ranked the study of astronomy, for when one is studying the heavens he is given great cause to greet with much admiration the wonderful works of God whose wonderful power governs the masses of stars and planets. Closely connected with astronomy is the name of Galileo, a Catholic priest, and Father Copernicus, who was born in West Prussia in 1473. The latter was the sole originator of the true theory concerning the solar system and also computed the distances of the planets.

Learned men of the sixteenth century came to an agreement that the world was ten days behind. The old Julian calendar, which had been recognized as correct since the time of Caesar, was therefore proved to be wrong, for if the same conditions prevailed the climate customary for the various seasons would not remain the same. Pope Gregory set four learned sons of the Church, namely, Clavius, a German Jesuit; Chacon, a Spaniard; Danti, an Italian, and Ghilardi, another Italian astronomer, to the task, and as a result we have what is now known as the Gregorian Calendar, excepting that every year, the number of which is divisable by four, and every century, the number of which is divisable by four hundred, a day is added. About 150 years later England adopted this calendar so really it was a Catholic Pope who gave the Orangemen the correct day to celebrate, for the Battle of the Boyne was fought on July 1st, and it is celebrated on July 12.

In reference to medicine Father Galvin named various sons of the Church in the sixteenth century, such as Vesalius, Fallopius, Realdo [illegible] and [illegible] were well versed in this art. These men were pioneers in their work, but modern men are apt to smile at the limited extent of their knowledge. They, however, were probably as successful in their day as the medical men of to-day are, for have we not, despite great medical knowledge now afloat such incurable diseases as asthma, rheumatism and tuberculosis. The use of red light and red surroundings for small-pox patients, which was recently hailed as a great discovery, was centuries ago discovered by Gilbert, a son of the Catholic Church.

Coupled with the study of electricity do we find the names of such devout Catholics as Galvani, Volta, Ampere and Roentgen, the discoverer of the X Ray, and of more recent date the well known Marconi, inventor of the wireless system. The part played by Catholics in the study of evolution is the great question of the day and we find connected with this study the names of Lamark and Rev. Gregor Mendel both pious Catholics. Away back in the 13th century do we hear of Roger Bacon who was experimenting with explosives and he exclaimed that some day horseless carriages would be driven by their powers and that statement has come true for we have at the present time automobiles etc., driven by that powerful explosive gasoline.

In closing Father Galvin referred his audience to the reading of Dr. Walsh's works which will enable them to arrive at the same conclusion as Wm. Gladstone, the great English statesman, who once remarked: "The Catholic Church during the past 1,500 years has marched to the head of human civilization and has driven harness to her chariot, the chief intelectual and material forces of the world. Her art is the art of the world; her genius the genius of the world; her greatness, grandeur and glory have been almost all that in these respects the world had had to boast of." These were remarkable words coming as they did from a man outside the Catholic Church.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered to the speaker for his instructive address to which he made a short reply.

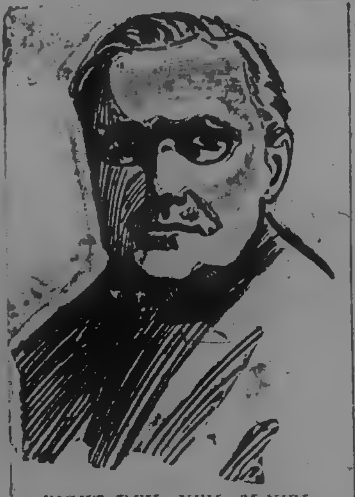
ESTABLISHED 1879. PETERBOROUGH, ONT., MONDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1913 TEN CENTS PER WEEK.



RIGHT REV. NEIL McNEIL
Roman Catholic Archbishop of Toronto, who has inaugurated a program of social and charitable work.

CHARITY PROGRAM

Archbishop McNeil Inaugurates Extensive Social Service.

TORONTO, Nov. 24—A pronouncement from Archbishop McNeil, ushering in a new era of charitable work among Roman Catholics, was read in all the Roman Catholic churches in the Archdiocese of Toronto yesterday. After drawing attention to the modern trend away from individualism and towards co-operation, the archbishop outlined a program of social and charitable work, which will involve collection and distribution of more money than the church has devoted to social service in previous years.

A special Sunday will be appointed next year and called Charity Sunday, and on that day a collection will be taken up sufficient to finance the charitable works of the diocese throughout the year, without any collections on the part of sisters. A special collection is also to be taken up in every parish of the diocese during December of this year, at which $6,000 will be raised for charity work. This amount will be independent of the charity donations received through regular collections.

Five hundred dollars of the special December collection will be handed over the relief of the widows and orphans of those who perished in the great lakes storm.

The archbishop remarked on the work of the National Sanitarium Association. He emphasized the duty of Roman Catholics to unite with others in support of the association, as it is impracticable to build a Roman Catholic hospital for the care of consumptives.

Recovery Is Satisfactory.

TRAPPER RETURNS HOME TO FIND FAMILY DEAD

Tragic Story is Revealed in Death From Exhaustion of Mrs. D. Pilon and Her Son and Daughter on Trail Along Which They Had Evidently Gone For Aid When the Father Failed to Get Home.

PEMBROKE, Ont., Nov. 24.—Stories of the death of Mrs. P. Pilon and her two children, who was reported to have perished in an attempt to secure food for herself and her two children at Des Joachims, a point on the Ottawa river, west of this town, have been corroborated by later information, and a terrible tragedy of the woods is revealed by the facts. It has been ascertained that Mrs. Pilon became anxious over the non-return of her husband, a trapper, who was on a hunting trip, and died searching for him.

Pilon left home a couple of weeks ago to make a round of his traps. Last Monday he returned and found that his family was not at home. Becoming alarmed, he formed a search party and set out to hunt for them. It was evident that Mrs. Pilon had become alarmed over her husband's prolonged absence, as he had only intended being away on his trip a few days at the outside.

One of the search party found Mrs. Pilon's body about ten miles from her home, near a lake on the Du Moine river, where it was evident she had died from exhaustion. Some of the children's clothing was found nearby but the bodies of the children were not found until Tuesday morning. The daughter was found on the trail to Pilon's camp and the boy was found partly lying in water on the shore of Sherway Lake.

Mrs. Pilon was in a poor state of health for such an experience and it is believed that the horror of the situation during Sunday night's storm deranged her mind. The children must have gone with her to seek aid, and pushed on ahead for assistance when they saw their mother collapse, only to perish themselves in their turn.

The bodies were taken to Point Alexander, where the funerals took place Friday last.

CURRENCY BILL IN THE SENATE

Debate on Fiscal Bill Begins in U.S. Upper House To-day.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Nov. 24.—The administration currency bill, with the amendments, proposed by the divided Senate banking and currency committee, was laid before the Senate Saturday and debate on the measures will begin to-day. The two factions of the committee headed by Senator Owen and Senator Hitchcock, filed their divergent views on the measure and the bill passed by the House was made the unfinished business of the Senate.

Senator Owen will fire the opening gun in the debate for the administration forces. His speech probably will occupy the entire day. On Tuesday, Senator Hitchcock will begin the attack on the administration's proposals in a speech setting forth the position of his faction of the committee. From Monday until the end of the special session a week-off, Senators will make set speeches discussing the currency reform problem.

Col. Joseph Pattison Dead.

OTTAWA, Nov. 24.—Col. Joseph Pattison, a veteran of the Fenian raids of '65, '66 and '70, died in a local hospital Saturday night, of heart failure. He was prominent among the men who served Canada in the three uprisings, and of late years led the movement, urging the Government to recognise the veterans, finally securing a grant of $100 for each.

LARKIN NOW A FORCE IN BRITISH POLITICS

London Papers See in Organizer of Dublin Strike a Powerful Factor in Labor Situation—In Speech at Cardiff He Scores Lord Aberdeen.

LONDON, Nov. 24.—[illegible] was given an enthusiastic [illegible] at Cardiff yesterday afternoon. Addressing a large meeting, he denounced the low wages of many shop assistants. Speaking of Dublin as the richest town in Britain, he said that they had at Head Castle a clique, Earl Aberdeen and his good lady, who got $25,000 a year. Their only function, as far as he could gather, was in calling meetings and having exhibitions. At the exhibitions they had lecturers who were paid five and ten guineas to show how to feed a family of seven on eight shillings and sixpence a week.

Larkin is the man of the day. Tens of thousands listened to his fiery and rude eloquence in Albert Hall and other huge buildings incapable of accommodating the would-be audiences last week, and hundreds of thousands more have read the newspaper reports of his speeches. A labor paper which is printing them has found its circulation going up with such leaps and bounds that its affairs have been transformed in one week from the verge of bankruptcy to comparative affluence. Organs which generally make an appeal to the conservative class have been found speaking of Larkin in terms of high praise. "He is the will and the fate to the multitudes," wrote The London Times, adding "this rough dock laborer has fascinated idealists and poets and the followers of the high ideal and the heroic."

"Whether we like it or not," says another London paper, "Jas. Larkin is the man with whom we have to reckon. He drops his 'h's' and uses violent language. He talks a strange dialect, half Lancashire, half Irish, and all his own, a crude, unlettered dock laborer in fact, but you cannot listen to him without being conscious of unusual force. You forget the roughness of his speech in the fierce energy that blazes through it. You [illegible] murmurs of poor strug[illegible] [illegible]rance, and if the utterance is defiant and challenging, [illegible] that of a mere tub-thumper. It has sudden flashes of insight, swift and unexpected transitions, a certain largeness of motive and at times a generosity of statement that suggests something more than a firebrand. He is not at the mercy of his audience like the demagogue who follows the line of readiest cheer. He is its master and snubs its shallower humors."

Larkin is the man upon whom it is no exaggeration to say that the whole course of British politics seems to pivot. Time alone will show what influence his personality will exercise upon the nation whose destinies he is now shaping, but, judged by present appearances, it is likely to prove deep and real. The revolt of the rank and file against what it called "red tape officialism" of the Labor party's Parliamentary leaders has grown apace in the past week.

NATIVES ARE UNRULY

Police Had to Use Firearms—Three Were Killed

Canadian Press Despatch.

PRETORIA, Nov. 24.—Five thousand natives at Premier Mine got out of hand to-day and attacked natives in another compound. The police were unable to restore order without resorting to firearms. After two volleys were fired the kaffirs returned to their habitations, three men having been killed and twenty-two wounded.

OTTAWA, Nov. 24. — Sir Lomer Gouin, Premier of Quebec, was invested with the order of K.C.M.G. by the Duke of Connaught at Rideau Hall on Saturday.

IMPRESSED WITH METHODS IN U.S. PRISONS

Regarding the Treatment of Youths and Children

Canadian Press Despatch.

KINGSTON, ONT., Nov. 24.—The Prison Reform Commission, who have returned from an inspection of prisons in United States, and will resume the inquiry on a day to be named next week, were greatly impressed during their trip by the reformatory character of American prisons, and especially by the length to which this principle is carried out in the treatment of youths and children. The Commission will probably hold sessions at Toronto and Guelph before concluding.

HAS BULLET IN BRAIN.

Man Is Still Living After Terrible Wound.

SARANAC LAKE, N.Y., Nov. 24.—his head pierced from temple to temple by a revolver bullet, Knight E. Rogers, 38 years of age, a manufacturer of South Manchester, Conn., is alive to-day, 48 hours after he shot himself.

Rogers, who is an invalid, came here last July in search of health and has been living with his wife at an expensive apartment hotel. He went for a ride alone in a hired Victoria Sunday morning, [illegible] about two miles from [illegible] bullet into his brain, aiming the revolver by the aid of a hand mirror he had brought with him. The driver galloped his horses to a local hospital, where surgical attention was given, but Rogers' recovery is considered impossible. The bullet passed completely through the front lobes of his brain.

French Miners' Strike Over.

DOUAI, France, Nov. 24. — The great strike of miners in northern France was settled Saturday night, the association of mine proprietors agreeing to an eight-hour day until the bill, fixing an eight-hour for workingmen, which is now before the French Parliament, is passed and promulgated. The union leaders decided to call off the strike, which had already involved 40,000 out of 200,000 coal miners in that district.

Greece Stills Holds Prisoners.

SOFIA, Nov. 24.—Minister of Foreign Affairs Guenadieff has proposed to the French charge d'affairs here that the differences between Bulgaria and Greece concerning prisoners of war be submitted to arbitration by President Poincare. M. Guenadieff said Bulgaria would accept M. Poincare's decision unreservedly.

Bulgaria complains that Greece still holds and refuses to release Bulgarian prisoners of war contrary to international law.

Swallowed 17 Needles.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—The deportation of Bessie Rymarzcuk, 18 years old, who swallowed 17 needles in an attempt to commit suicide, is being considered by the United States immigration authorities. They believe she is mentally unbalanced. The doctors attending the girl report that they have recovered seven of the needles.

SYLVIA IS IMMUNE

With Aid of Her "Army" Suffragette Escapes Arrest.

LONDON, Nov. 24.—Supported by a large force of her "people's army," Miss Sylvia Pankhurst addressed a meeting at Bow last evening and then marched under the escort of the army from the hall to her residence. No attempt was made to arrest her. The strictest precautions had been taken to exclude detectives from the hall.

Incendiary outrages by the suffragettes occurred on Saturday, the boathouse at Eastville Park, Bristol, and a portion of the grandstand in the sports ground at Blackburn being burned.

The police have not sought to arrest Sylvia, who is still at liberty, though her "cat-and-mouse" license expired four weeks ago. The mystery of Scotland Yard's apparent inefficiency is cleared up in a statement that the detectives were cautioned by headquarters not to run the risk of getting into a fight with the armed bodyguard nicknamed "Sylvia's east end army." That the so-called army is no myth was admitted by a Scotland Yard official, who, however, said there was no ground for taking much stock in stories about "well-drilled battalions numbering thousands." The army, he declared, consists of a gang of toughs, some hire and others attracted by the hope of an affray with the police. According to Scotland Yard, the army probably does not exceed 400. Both sexes are enrolled, and the amazons inspire the detectives with even more nervousness than the men, although the latter are said to be armed with whalebone staves loaded with lead on the end.

ANOTHER BODY FOUND.

Unidentified Corpse Washed Ashore From Hydrus of Cleveland.

GODERICH, Nov. 24.—Slowly and stubbornly Lake Huron is giving up the victims of the wrecks of the vessels lost in the recent great storm. To-day another body was found by an Indian fourteen miles to the north of Southampton. The body was circled by a lifebelt bearing the name Hydrus, a Cleveland steamer, and so far it is the first victim found from that steamer.

The Indian, with the superstitions of his race, would not touch the body, but he willingly went to the authorities and told of his find.

There will doubtless be many bodies found within the next few days. A strong northwesterly wind has been blowing over the lake since Saturday night, stirring up the waters, and the Government steamer Lambton and the tug Horton started this morning on a patrol.

One Killed at Crossing.

MONTREAL, Nov. 24.—Israel Cardin, a farmer, and his horse were killed and Alphonse Michaud, father-in-law of Cardin was severely injured yesterday when a carriage in which they were driving was struck by a G.T.R. train at a crossing within two hundred yards of their home, two and a half miles east of Danby, Quebec.

PRESIDENT HUERTA IS SAID TO BE IN TIGHT FIX

Between Lack of Money and Inroads of Constitutionalists, Provisional Government is in Desperate Straits and Gen. Huerta Knows it.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 24.—Resigned apparently to those conditions which make it necessary to carry on a dilatory campaign against his enemies, President Huerta and his official dependents appeared serene yesterday, convinced that the United States will not take more drastic measures toward the Mexican Government than those already taken.

It has been rumored that Congress would not continue to meet; that it would be automatically dissolved, and that Gen. Huerta was about to quit office. All these have been disproved by Congress launching itself into what promises to be a prolonged session. It is expected that to-day Congress will take up the ratification or nullification of the Presidential elections, and it is understood that these will be annulled, that new elections will be called and that President Huerta will remain at the head of affairs.

According to his intimates no one realizes more fully than Gen. Huerta the desperate straits of his Government, but he has reiterated his intention of pounding away at his enemies until he or they have won.

The financial situation is the most serious that Huerta is facing. The fact that the national treasury is practically empty is not hidden even from the most ignorant peon in the city, and that measures recently adopted to obtain funds have been such as are calculated to remove any doubt remaining. The new stamp tax, which will go into effect Dec. 1, will practically double the revenue from that source. Special taxes have been imposed, and the taxing of articles imported by parcel post is being discussed.

The military situation throughout the country is little understood in the capital. It is almost impossible to obtain accurate news of operations not fifty miles away, and practically all the news published in the local papers is distrusted by the public, who realize that it is given out by the departments of the Government and that the proofs of all the Mexican newspapers are revised by censors.

Federals Retreated.

EL PASO, Tex., Nov. 24. — The principal fighting that has featured the northward advance of the federals took place Friday evening near Samalayuca, 32 miles south of Juarez, when a rebel scouting party of 100 men under Rodolfo L. Fierro moved to attack a party of federal soldiers who had detrained there. According to Fierro, the Huerta troops had unloaded two cannon from the train, which was the leading one in the group of eight, which were carrying the federal soldiers northward.

"They turned their cannon on us when we were several miles away," says Fierro, who accompanied Villa to Juarez yesterday morning. "We had no artillery, but kept moving toward them. My men were not mounted, but they did not hesitate a moment to go against the enemy, who outnumbered us greatly. Imagine our surprise when we got within a mile of the train to see the federals reload their artillery and back down the track. No member of my command was killed or wounded by the firing."

"I have placed my army in position 12 miles south of Jaurez," said Gen. Pancho Villa yesterday morning. "The extreme right wing rests at Bauche, on the Mexico Northwestern Railway, 12 miles from Jaurez. The extreme left is at Mesa, 13 miles from here, and on the Mexican Central Railway. The front extends for a distance of 12 miles between these two points.

"Between 5,000 and 6,000 men, cavalry, infantry and artillery, are camped along this line, which has been fortified with the cannon I took from the federals at Torreon and Juarez. The country in that section is hilly and admirably fitted for defence.

"The story that I am planning to evacuate Juaréz is absolutely false," continued the constitutionalist commander-in-chief. "When I do evacuate, it will be only because federal bullets drove me out, and that is highly improbable. I have left an army 12 miles outside the city so that I can give protection to families living here and across the river."

Huerta at Bullfight.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 24. — Gen. Huerta attended the bullfight yesterday. Accompanied by only two members of his staff, but guarded by a score of detectives, the President entered the bull ring, where 20,000 persons had gathered to see Gaona Mexico's greatest matador, inaugurate the season.

Gen. Huerta occupied a box close to the arena. The band played the nation hymn and the people arose to their feet, but there was no cheering. The President left after the killing of the fourth bull.

Burglars at Point Edward.

SARNIA, Nov. 24. — Burglars entered two places at Point Edward on Saturday night and were frightened when attempting to break into a third. O'Neil's store and the Hotel Balmoral were robbed, and it was at Hill's grocery that the thieves were frightened away by the awakened proprietor. It is evident that the robbers were experienced hands from the systematic manner in which they did their work. Two suspects have been placed under arrest.

Heavy Consignment of Gold.

MONTREAL, Nov. 24. — Approximately four and one-half tons of gold—$2,000,000 in all—arrived at the Royal Bank here Saturday from New York and London.

The London shipment was the second consignment of bullion to come direct from London to Canada via a Canadian line, on the Empress of Britain.

Students Quarantined.

MONTREAL, Nov. 24. — The women's building at Macdonald College, St. Anne de Bellevue, is under quarantine, as three cases of scarletina have been discovered there. Over four hundred students are confined to the grounds. A soccer match between McGill University and Macdonald College was cancelled Saturday.

FIRST ACTUAL PHOTOGRAPH OF VINCENT ASTOR'S BRIDE TO BE

MISS HELEN DINSMORE HUNTINGTON

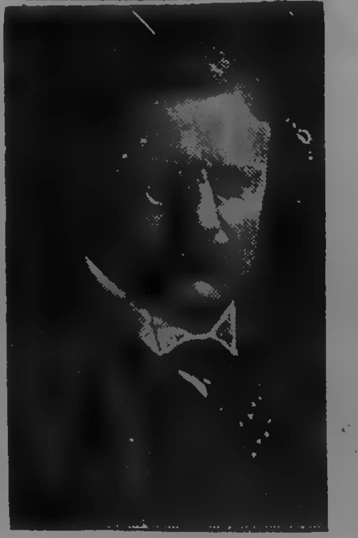
The above photograph of Miss Huntington, Mr. Astor's fiancée, was posed for on the sun parlor of her home at Staatsburg, N. Y., and is the first photograph taken in recent months.

She is a tall and slender girl, with healthy red cheeks and yellow hair—a typical American girl. When she came out of the house to be photographed she had a heavy fur coat thrown over a thin low-necked house dress. Her smile sparkled with out of door health and good nature. She walked with the easy swing of well used muscles. [illegible]



COL. ROOSEVELT.

SANTIAGO, Chile, Nov. 24.—Col. Roosevelt, who arrived here Friday evening, paid a visit Saturday to the President of the republic, Ramon Barros Luco, who greeted him most cordially.

Proceeding to the University of Chile, the ex-President of the U. S. was welcomed by Don Marcial Martinez, the former Chilean Minister at Washington. Col. Roosevelt delivered an address and later departed.

Attempted Smuggling.

SARNIA, Nov. 24.—In an effort to gain admission to the United States, Chan Wing, a Chinaman, was found in a box car in the Port Huron tunnel yards Saturday night. The man secreted himself among the goods in the car and found after much searching. He gave his age as 21. It was learned that he had been for two yaers a resident of Toronto, where he had worked in a laundry.

Gompers Still President.

SEATTLE, Nov. 24. — The A. F. of L. adjourned Saturday night after electing officers and choosing Philadelphia as the place of the next convention, which will assemble on the second Monday of November, 1914. The election of Samuel Gompers to the presidency was unanimous.

President Gompers closed the convention with an address.

Fireman Meets His Death.

MONTREAL, Nov. 24. — Fireman Horace Trudel was trapped by blinding smoke on the first floor of a Bleury street building Saturday night and died a few hours later in the General Hospital. Several firemen were overcome in an effort to rescue their imprisoned comrade. Trudel leaves a wife and six children. The fire damage was slight.

Pope's Physician Included.

ROME, Nov. 24.—The list of 80 new senators which Premier Giolitti has prepared for King Victor Emmanuel, includes Dr. Ettore Marchiafava, physician to Pope Pius and the royal house, and the reformed Socialist, Prof. Giuseppe Gatti of the University of Rome.

Body of Fireman Found.

FORT WILLIAM, Nov. 24.—Found by a diver in forty feet of water, the body of John Joseph O'Connor, the fireman who was drowned when the C.P.R. engine went into Lake Superior on Friday morning, has been recovered and was brought to the city yesterday.

Died at Age of 104.

LONDON, Ont., Nov. 24. — Mrs. Mary Devereaux died yesterday at the home of her daughter, in her 104th year. She was born in Ireland in May, 1810.

SELLS AUSTRALIA SIX TIMES AS MUCH AS IS BOUGHT

Canada Has Good Customer in Commonwealth.

OTTAWA, Nov. 24. — Australia buys from Canada six times what Canada buys from Australia. This seems to be a result of the policy of the business men of the Antipodes, for Australia's trade within the Empire is nearly double that with foreign countries. However, Canadian trade with Australia has grown much during the past year.

During 1910, Canada bought goods from Australia to the value of just about half a million dollars, while the value of Canadian goods bought by Australians was $4,010,225. In 1912, according to figures just received from the Canadian trade commissioner, Canada bought Australian goods to the value of $807,975, a very satisfactory increase. Australia's purchase of Canadian goods increased in 1912 by about $780,000.

The causes which have led up to the total trade of $64,000,000 between the United States and Australia are effective representation, either by direct travelers or through resident agents, and the services of reliable commission houses. Cheap transportation from factory to shipping port, and low ocean freight rates have been a factor in the growth of trade.

As opposed to this the Canadian trade commissioner notes that the exports to Canada would have been larger had there been sufficient cold storage accommodation on the Canadian-Australian steamers.

TO HAVE PENSION FUND.

Bricklayers Will Establish an Extensive Relief System.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 24.—An old age pension and disability fund will be inaugurated by the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' International Union of America, in 1914. The plan has just been voted on by the members of the union, and Secretary William Dobson yesterday began mailing from the union headquarters here circulars to the local unions announcing that the vote was favorable.

The fund will be maintained by weekly assessment of 25 cents on each member of the organization.

The membership vote on the adoption of the proposition showed only 19,311 votes cast, with 11,751 in favor and 7,560 against the question. The union has about 90,000 members.

AMONG THE HEATHER

Mr Lloyd George's recent excursion into the land has so far not proved a very profitable trip. He waxed eloquent upon the waste of vast acres in Scotland, which were used only for sport and hunting purposes. It turns out that this land is unfit for agricultural purposes, and that the only thing that will grow on it is heather. Lord Sutherland, who owns some hundreds of acres in Scotland, has offered to sell to Mr. Lloyd George or the Government as many of these acres as they want at a very low price. The Government are considering the offer. Meanwhile the little Chancellor is very quiet, possibly trying to figure out how many of a family a man could bring up on three acres of purple heather.

SAINT TUBERCULOSIS

Much literature has been distributed among the press, urging the establishment of a "Tuberculosis Sunday," and many of the churches seem to have taken the matter up. It may appear an atrocity for anyone to breathe a word against this idea of devoting one Sunday in a year solely to the consideration of this dread disease. But we confess to a feeling of dislike for the labeling of Sundays in this way. We have not so much objection to "Temperance Sunday" or even "Hospital Sunday" but "Tuberculosis Sunday" not only offends our sense of the fitness of things, but the designation is repulsive.

The churches ought to urge the claims of institutions for the extermination of this fell scourge, as also should every other institution, but this setting apart special days for the consideration of microbes is an exaggeration. If it were carried to its logical conclusion, we should inevitably have "Cancer Sunday," "Leprosy Sunday," and so on ad [illegible]dum.

The ancient Church has burdened the calendar to excess with feast, fast and Saints' days, and many denominations have rid themselves of these "abominations." But it would appear that these very churches are loading themselves with a new calendar of observances, and it is to be feared that an innocent posterity may be led to canonise a new order of saints among which may be Saint Tuberculosis.

This is not an attempt to belittle this very worthy movement against consumption. We are afraid it is belittling and diverting the true function of the churches by such methods. Let us have every Sunday devoted to the amelioration of the general ills that body and soul are heir to. Our pastors are burdened and hampered enough with things extraneous to their proper sphere and influence that their ordained duties are often left undone.

CANADA AND HOME RULE

It has been claimed by British Liberals that Canadians are in favor of Home Rule and in combating this idea Mr. Bonar Law, the leader of the Conservative party says: "If you were to suggest to the Canadian that he should do in Canada what is proposed to be done in Ireland — that is, that Ontario should be put under the heel of Quebec or Quebec under the heel of Ontario, he would tell you that you are a madman, that no sane man should dream of it. The real feeling of the Dominions was shown in the latest unification within our Empire in South Africa.

If Home Rule for Ireland means the subjugation of Protestant and loyal Ulster by the Nationalists then certainly Canadians are not in favor of such an unfair arrangement.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The newspapers give a rather ambiguous announcement in reference to the coming South Lanark election. "Hawkes will Run." That sounds like prophesy.

It is said that Dr. Leon Williams, of London, has journeyed over the ocean with fifteen skulls of pre-historic men, with the object of proving that man is not a descendent of the ape, but that the ape is a descendent of man. Skulls are not very picturesque company, and one would be rather afraid of being pursued by their erstwhile owners. A number of skulls were found the other week in Peterborough by some men excavating. One of these skulls was brought to the Review office, and for a day or two adorned our sanctum. It disappeared in a mysterious way late one evening, and the supposition is that its Indian owner returned from the Happy Hunting Ground to claim it.

NATIONAL STOCK AND DAIRY SHOW

Recognizing the importance of the National Live Stock, Horticultural and Dairy Show, which opens at Toronto on November 17, the railways have granted special excursion rates at low fares for next week. From places where the first class fare is less than $2.50, a return ticket will be issued for single fare plus 25 cents, which will include admission to the show in Toronto. From other places in the province, except the territory west of Azilda on the C.P.R. round trip tickets will be sold for the lowest one way fare plus 50 cents, which also includes admission to the grounds.

Mr A. P. Westervelt, Manager of the National Live Stock, Horticultural and Dairy Show, reports the largest number of entries received for any similar exhibition ever held over 8,500, with pigeons, canaries, bantams, pheasants, guinea fowl, etc., making the feathered flock total 5,300. Horses will be 350; beef cattle and dairy cattle 300 each; sheep and swine 650, while flowers fruit and vegetables will show a development in great advance of former exhibitions.

An important feature is the number of entries that have been received from United States breeders and exhibitors. Car loads of horses live stock and poultry are being sent forward for the opening date. The judges in all classes are men of acknowledged standing and experience. The show is bound to be a great stimulus to breeding and increased production 23

BLACK, GREEN or MIXED

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF
BAYARD VEILLER

"She left this morning for Chicago," Burke said, lying with a manner that long habit rendered altogether convincing. "I told you she'd go." He turned to the father and spoke with an air of boastful good nature. "Now, all you have to do is to get this boy out of the scrape and you'll be all right."

"If we only could!" The cry came with deepest earnestness from the lips of Gilder, but there was little hope in his voice.

"I guess we can find a way to have the marriage annulled or whatever they do to marriages that don't take," said Burke.

The brutal assurance of the man in thus referring to things that were sacred moved Dick to wrath.

"Don't you interfere," he said.

Nevertheless Burke held to the topic.

"Interfere! Huh!" he ejaculated, grinning broadly. "Why, that's what I'm paid to do. Listen to me, son. The minute you begin mixing up with crooks you ain't in a position to give orders to any one. The crooks have got no rights in the eyes of the police. Just remember that."

But Dick was not listening. His thoughts were again wholly with the woman he loved, who, as the inspector declared, had fled from him.

"Where's she gone in Chicago?"

Burke answered in his usual gruff fashion, but with a note of kindliness that was not without its effect on Dick.

"I'm no mind reader," he said. "But she'll probably stop at the Blackstone—that is, until the Chicago police are tipped off that she is in town."

The face of the young man took on a totally different expression. He went close to the inspector and spoke with intense seriousness.

"Burke," he said pleadingly, "give me a chance. I'll leave for Chicago in the morning. Give me twenty-four hours start before you begin hounding her."

The inspector smiled acquiescence.

"Seems reasonable," he admitted.

"No, no, Dick!" the father cried. "You shall not go! You shall not go!"

The inspector shot a word of warning to Gilder in an aside that Dick could not hear.

"Keep still," he replied. "It's all right."

"You give me your word, inspector," Dick said, "that you won't notify the police in Chicago until I've been there twenty-four hours?"

"You're on," Burke replied genially. "They won't get a whisper out of me until the time is up."

"Then I'll go." Dick [illegible] wanly at his father. "You know, [illegible] I'm sorry, but I've got to do what I think is the right thing."

It was not until the door was closed after Dick that Burke spoke.

"He'll go to Chicago in the morning, you think, don't you?" he asked.

"Certainly," Gilder answered. "But I don't like it."

"Best thing that could have happened! You see, he won't find her there."

"Where did she go then?" Gilder queried, wholly at a loss.

"Nowhere yet. But just about the time he's starting for the west I'll have her down at headquarters. Demarest will have her indicted before noon. She'll go to trial in the afternoon, and tomorrow night she'll be sleeping up the river. That's where she is going."

Gilder stood motionless for a moment. "But," he said wonderingly, "you can't do that."

"Well, perhaps I can't, but I will!" Suddenly his face grew hard. His heavy jaw shot forward aggressively as he spoke.

"Think I'm going to let that girl make a joke of the police department? Why, I'm here to get her, to stop her anyhow. Her gang is going to break into your house tonight."

"What?" Gilder demanded. "You mean she's coming here as a thief?"

"Not exactly," Inspector Burke confessed, "but her pals are coming to try to pull off something right here. She wouldn't come, not if I know her. She's too clever for that. Why, if she knew what Garson was planning to do, she'd stop him."

The inspector paused suddenly. For a long minute his face was seamed with thought. Then he smote his thigh with a blow strong enough to kill an ox. His face was radiant.

"I've got her!" he cried. He went to the desk where the telephone was and took up the receiver.

"Give me 3100 Spring," he said. As he waited for the connection he smiled widely on the astonished Gilder.

"Headquarters?" he called. "Inspector Burke speaking. Who's in my office? I want him quick." He smiled as he listened, and he spoke again to Gilder. "It's Smith, the best man I have. That's luck, if you ask me." Then again he spoke into the mouthpiece of the telephone.

"Oh, Ed, send some one up to that Turner woman. You have the address. Just see that she is tipped off that Joe Garson and some pals are going to break into Edward Gilder's house tonight. Get some stool pigeon to hand her the information. You'd better get to work quick. Understand?"

The inspector hung up the receiver and faced his host with a contented smile.

"What good will all that do?" Gilder demanded impatiently.

"She'll come to stop 'em. When we get the rest of the gang we'll grab her too. Just call your man for a minute, will you, Mr. Gilder?"

Gilder pressed the electric button on his desk. At the same moment, through the octagonal window, came a blinding flash of light that rested for seconds, then vanished. Burke was startled by the mysterious radiance.

"What's that?" he demanded sharply.

"It's the flashlight from the Metropolitan tower," Gilder explained. "It swings around this way about every [illegible] minutes. The servant forgot to draw the curtains."

CHAPTER XIII.

The Burglary at Gilder's.

THE entrance of the butler brought the inspector's thoughts back to the matter in hand.

"My man," he said authoritatively, "I want you to go up to the roof and open the scuttle. You'll find some men waiting up there. Bring 'em down here. They're police officers. You get 'em down here, and then you go to bed and stay there till morning. Understand?"

The butler looked at his master for guidance. Receiving a nod, he said:

"Very well, sir."

"How do you know they're going to break into the house tonight," Gilder demanded of Burke, "or do you only think they're going to break into the house?"

"I know they are. I fixed it."

"You did?"

"Sure; did it through a stool pigeon."

"Oh, an informer!" Gilder interrupted, a little doubtfully.

"Yes," Burke agreed; "stool pigeon is the police name for him. Really, he's the vilest thing that crawls."

"But if you think that," Gilder expostulated, "why do you have anything to do with that sort of person?"

"Because it's good business," the inspector replied. "We know he's a spy and a traitor and that every time he comes near us we ought to use a disinfectant. But we deal with him just the same because we have to. Now, the stool pigeon in this trick is a swell English crook. He went to Garson yesterday with a scheme to rob your house. He tried out Mary Turner, too, but she told Garson to leave it alone. But he met Griggs afterward and agreed to pull it off. Griggs got word to me that it's coming off tonight, and so, you see, Mr. Gilder, that's how I know."

"I see," Gilder admitted without any enthusiasm. "But why do you have your men come down over the roof?"

"It wasn't safe to bring them in the front way. It's a cinch the house is being watched. I wish you would let me have your latch key. I want to come back and make this collar myself."

"But why not stay, now that you are here?"

"Suppose some of them saw me come in? There wouldn't be anything doing until after they saw me go out again."

The hall door opened, and the butler re-entered the room. Behind him came Cassidy and two other detectives in plain clothes. At a word from his master the disturbed Thomas withdrew.

"Now," Burke went on briskly as the door closed behind the servant, "where could these men stay out of sight until they're needed?"

There followed a little discussion which ended in the selection of a storeroom at the end of the passage on the ground floor.

"And now, Mr. Gilder," the inspector said energetically, "I'm going to give you the same tip I gave your man. Go to bed and stay there."

"But the boy," Gilder protested. "What about him? He's the one thing of importance to me."

"If he says anything more about going to Chicago just you let him go, that's all! It's the best place for him for the next few days."

"You're in charge here," Burke said to Cassidy, "and I hold you responsible. I'm coming back to get this bunch myself, and I'll call you when you're wanted. You'll wait in the storeroom out there and don't make a move till you hear from me, unless by any chance things go wrong and you get a call from Griggs. He's got a whistle, and he'll use it if necessary. Got that straight?" Cassidy declared an entire understanding of the directions.

As the men left the room Burke turned again to Gilder.

"Just one thing more," he said. "After I've gone I want you to stay up for a half hour anyhow, with the lights burning. Do you see? I want to be sure to give the Turner woman time to get here while that gang is at work."

Gilder scrupulously followed the directions of the police inspector. Uneasily he had remained in the library until the allotted time was elapsed. He fidgeted from place to place, his mind heavy with distress under the shadow that threatened to blight the life of his cherished son. Finally, with a sense of relief he put out the lights and went to his chamber.

His thoughts were most with his son, and ever as he thought of Dick his fury waxed against the woman who had enmeshed the boy in her plotting for vengeance on himself. And into his thoughts now crept a doubt, one that alarmed his sense of justice. A horrible suspicion that he had misjudged Mary Turner crept into his brain [illegible]. He fought it with all the strength of him, and that was much, but ever it abode there.

Mary Turner herself, too, was in a condition utterly wretched, and for the same cause—Dick Gilder. That source of the father's suffering was hers as well. She had won her ambition of years—revenge on the man who had sent her to prison. And now the joy of it was a torture, for the puppet of her plans, the son, had suddenly become the chief thing in her life.

She had taken it for granted that he would leave her after he came to know that her marriage to him was only a device to bring shame on his father. Instead he loved her. That fact seemed the secret of her distress. He loved her. More, he dared believe, and to assert boldly, that she loved him. Had he acted otherwise the matter would have been simple enough. But he loved her—loved her still, though he

"Yes," was the answer.

"Well, then, we've got to get busy."

Before he could add a direction he was halted by a soft buzzing from the telephone. For an instant he hesitated while the others regarded him doubtfully.

"We've got to take a chance." Garson went to the desk and put the receiver to his ear.

There came again the faint tapping of some one at the other end of the line, signaling a message in the Morse code. An expression of blank amazement, which grew in a flash to deep concern, showed on Garson's face as he listened tensely.

"Why, this is Mary calling," he muttered.

"Mary?" Griggs cried.

"Yes, she's on," Garson interpreted a moment later as the tapping ceased for a little. He translated in a loud whisper as the irregular ticking noise sounded again.

His First Lesson In Medical Practice

By THOMAS R. DEAN

Miss Elsie Tisdale was engaged to marry Mr Bert Sawyer, a medical student. Mr. Sawyer was aware that Miss Tisdale was as sensitive as a bird. All she knew about physicians was when one of them came to the house, felt some one's pulse, asked about sundry symptoms and, taking out a square bit of paper, wrote certain hieroglyphics on it that an apothecary understood.

What Bertie, as she called him, was going through to acquire a medical education she had no idea. That he ate peanuts off the breast of a cadaver he was at work on in the dissecting room, that he used the top of a skull, inverted, for a tobacco box; that he frequently took a hand, a foot or some other member of the human body to his room to cut to pieces, she had not even a suspicion. She supposed that a medical school was like other schools—books, books, nothing but books, and nice, clean books at that—while genteel professors lectured on how to cure a stomach ache and when to give the baby paregoric.

Bert, aware of her innocence, was very careful not to disturb her notions of the medical profession by enlightening her. By an unfortunate contretemps he suddenly burst upon her in his true frightfulness. She had been visiting a friend in a neighboring city and was returning by rail. She had been in the car but a few minutes when she saw the back of a head that looked familiar. It was turned aside toward a man who sat beside its owner and displayed the profile of Mr. Bert Sawyer. Facing the two sat a figure done up in a big shawl.

Horrible to relate, the face of the figure was that of a skull.

Mr. Sawyer and his friend Billy Peterson had learned where the skeleton of a human being could be bought cheap. They had gone for it, purchased it and were taking it home. There were but few persons in the car, and the conductor had good naturedly permitted them to seat it opposite themselves.

Just as Miss Tisdale got into the car, recognized her lover and caught sight of the grinning face with no nose and empty eye sockets the conductor came through the train and, passing the two medicos, punched their tickets.

"Fare, governor," said Mr. Sawyer, addressing the skeleton. "Produce your ticket or you'll be put off."

The skeleton continued to grin, the conductor smiled, and the men in the car seemed to think it all very funny. There were two women besides Elsie, one sitting in the next seat and one farther forward. Neither of them seemed to consider Mr. Sawyer's action a bit funny. As for Elsie, she was paralyzed with horror.

"Oh, he's all right," said the other medico. "He's no deadhead," and, slipping his own ticket in the band of his hat, he put the hat on the skeleton's head.

This caused a burst of laughter from the men in the car and a scowl from the women.

"Smoke, governor?" said Bert, thrusting a cigar between the skeleton's toothless and gumless jawbones.

Another laugh from the men and a murmur of indignation from the women. The train rounding a curve, the skeleton lost its balance and fell against the arm of the seat.

"Sit up, governor," said Bert. "Don't be rolling around that way. The passengers will think you've been drinking."

"I smell his breath," said Billy—"gin and lemon peel."

[illegible] of the car, and one of the women called to him and told him that if he didn't stop that indecent behavior on the part of those young men she would report him for negligence of duty. At this the conductor went to the two medics and told them they had better roll their bony companion in his shawl and stop the fun. To this they acceded, and that ended the performance. Soon after the train rolled into the station the medics and the "governor" went out through the front end of the car, while Elsie left it at the rear. She held her handkerchief to her eyes to conceal her tears and to avoid being recognized by Bert, whom she intended never to meet again as her fiance.

The next morning's mail brought him a note from her containing the few words:

"Our engagement is broken."

Sawyer looked at it sidewise and endwise, then shook it as if it were a toy puzzle. He could not understand it. Anyway something was wrong, and he went right over to the house to find out about it. Mrs. Tisdale came down with a suppressed smile and told him the cause of the break. Elsie had come home the day before heartbroken. She had supposed she was going to marry a gentleman and found that instead she was to marry a ghoul.

Bert was crushed.

"You'd better drop the whole affair," said Mrs. Tisdale, "and let Elsie get over it by degrees."

"She'll never get over it," groaned Bert. "She'll have a horror of me so long as she lives."

The affair was a good lesson to Bert. He became a famous physician and never forgot that the doctors and the laity are two different peoples. As for Elsie, he was right in assuming that she would always have a horror of him. She married another.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

For Narrow Shoulders.

The following exercises will be found beneficial for those who wish to broaden their shoulders:

Stand erect, with arms hanging in front of the body. Raise the arms above the head, keeping the muscles rigid, and then pull them down slowly, as if you were dragging down a heavy weight. Inhale when raising the arms; exhale when dropping them.

Stand erect, with arms at sides. Raise the arms above the head, describing a circle; then bring the arms down to original position, keeping the muscles tense. Inhale when raising, exhale when lowering the arms.

Stand with arms outstretched at the sides, as far back as possible, and describe circles in the air, keeping the arms stiff and letting all movement come from the shoulders.

Exercise with light Indian clubs will also broaden the shoulders.

To remove hot water marks from japanned trays, rub them well with sweet oil, and then polish with a little dry flour on a soft duster.

THE WHITE PLAGUE HAS CLAIMED 116 VICTIMS IN PETERBORO DURING THE LAST FOUR YEARS

Cash Loss is Estimated at $986,000 In Past Year Health Association Has Had Knowledge of 117 Cases

Much valuable information was given to the congregations of the city churches on Sunday, when the question of Tuberculosis was dealt with.

The Provincial Medical Health Officer, Dr. McCullough, addressed the congregations of St. Andrew's church and Murray Street Baptist church; Dr. Neal, secretary of the Peterborough Health Association, spoke at St. James' and Charlotte street Methodist churches; St. John's congregation heard Dr. G. Stewart Cameron and Dr. Moir addressed a meeting at the Salvation Army Temple. The ministers of St. Paul's, All Saints, St. Luke's and Knox Church also dealt with the subject.

Before Dr. McCullough proceeded with his address at St. Andrew's church, at the morning service, Rev. Jas. Rollins, gave some information relative to local conditions. He said that in the last four years, there had been 116 deaths from consumption. In the same period, deaths from other diseases were: diphtheria 1, whooping cough 5, measles 4, scarlet fever 10, making a total of only 23 deaths.

During the past twelve months the Health Association had knowledge of 117 cases. There were more cases as all the doctors had not reported. The majority of the cases were people between the ages of 10 and 40.

Taking the 116 deaths and estimating on the value of each life, had they been allowed to die from other diseases and by using Fisher's method, they represented a cash loss of $986,000.

DISEASE NOT INHERITED

In the course of his remarks, Dr. McCullough said that consumption was not inherited but was communicated from the person affected to another person, when the lungs were not strong enough to combat it. The doctor pointed out that in a home where there is consumption all the members of the family ought not to use the same cups, washing utensils, towels, etc.

The disease, he maintained, was preventible and curable, but it was advisable to combat it as soon as discovered. He explained the symptoms and told what treatment should follow and what the diet should be. Good ventilation in the home was an important factor. In Quebec and among the poorer classes in Ireland the windows could not be opened. This should not be. The reason there were so many women consumptives was that much of their time was spent indoors and attention was not paid to the matter of ventilation.

In order to give an idea of the work done during the past year the Health Association wish to give out the following statement. Beginning November 1st., 1912, one nurse was engaged, who carried on the work alone, until July 1st., 1913, when it was deemed best to secure the services of two nurses, between whom the work has been divided. During the past year the total number of visits made, was 2,180 of which 1,997 were free, and 183 paid visits.

The maximum charge is 25 cents per visit, where patient wishes to pay. In addition to this, 1,200 quarts of milk, and 325 dozen eggs, were distributed, and clothing, bedding, beds, stoves, chairs, medicine, thermometers, and other necessities were given away, or loaned, where needed.

The nurse for general work has made 309 visits and has 32 patients, surgical and medical.

Donations received: 6 pillow slips; 6 towels; 2 sheets; old linen.

The district nurse has made 172 visits and has 27 patients.

Donations received: 6 pairs pyjamas; 3 suits of underwear; 2 quilts; 1 sheet; 2 pillows; 1 ice box; $12.00 collected; old linen.

In district nursing, the actual nursing of the patient is one of the least of the duties which the nurse is called upon to perform for the class of people with whom she meets. To this branch of our work no more appropriate name can be given than instructive nursing, for educational in the best sense of the word it should be.

Any donations of old linen sent to the supply room on Water street would be gratefully received. The key can be had from Mr. Mason, florist

FIRE IN STE. MARIE.

Quebec Town Suffers a Loss of About $300,000.

LEVIS, Que., Nov. 24.—A call for help was received from Ste. Marie, Beauce County, Saturday morning. The town was in the grip of a raging fire, which had destroyed 150 houses and several colleges. The damage already done amounts to $300,000.

As much fire-fighting equipment as could be spared was despatched on a special train.

Before the fire was ultimately got under control 150 families had been rendered homeless.

Not Enough Cake For Public.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Numerous requests for a piece of Jessie Wilson's wedding cake caused the issue at the White House Saturday of a statement describing the size of the cake as too small to gratify the desires of the public. The statement says:

"On account of the erroneous and extravagant statements as to the size and cost of the cake which has been baked for the wedding of Miss Jessie Wilson, Mrs. Wilson wishes it stated that the cake is nine inches high and 22 inches in diameter. It is the usual kind of bride's cake and it is not at all elaborate."

TERM OF TWO YEARS FOR MAHAFFEY

He Takes Sentence With a Smile Johnston Gets Suspended Sentence

When he faced Magistrate Dumble this morning for sentence on the charges of a series of thefts to which he had pleaded guilty, Walter Mahaffey was given two years less one day in the Central Prison. He has six previous convictions.

"You are a confirmed criminal, but the commissioners may let you out on ticket or leave before your time is up,' said His Worship in sentencing the prisoner, who took the sentence with a smile.

His Worship handed out a surprise to the pal of the prisoner Mahaffey, when he was let go on suspended sentence, with the order to report to the Chief twice a month. The one conviction against Johnston was one of eleven years ago, when he was convicted in St. Catharines for theft.

Johnston had pleaded guilty to the charges of stealing the raincoat, coat and hat. He pleaded not guilty to the charge of stealing seventeen hens, but was found guilty. The charge against him of stealing the lap rug was dismissed. G. N. Gordon, defended the prisoner.

"Have you anything to say, Johnston," asked His Worship.

"No, all I care for is my wife and children," answered the prisoner, who appeared on the verge of breaking down.

The suspended sentence was then read and the prisoner left the court room where he was met by his wife and went home

NOW IS THE TIME TO BUY MATTRESSES

November 27, 28 and 29, we shall display on our floor and in our windows the complete line of the famous "Ideal" Felt Mattresses.

And for the first time in Canada we shall show the new patent "NEVERSPRED" Mattress.

The patent on the "Neverspred" is the most ingenious device we have ever seen. We can't explain it in words, you must come in and have it demonstrated.

We shall also show the "HARINFELT" Mattress.

This Mattress combines the good qualities of both hair and felt mattresses. There is an increased ventilating power to these mattresses, because the alternate layers of hair and felt act as a bellows as soon as weight is placed upon it. Not only so, but the "Harinfelt" cannot mat, and so the mattress will never become hard or lumpy.

You will also be interested in the showing of the more moderately priced "ROYAL EGYPTIAN" and "DIXIE" Mattresses.

Moreover, our prices on all these lines are marked down to a figure which is most attractive to you.

Come in and see the display and at the same time note our special showing of "Ideal" brass and steel beds, coil and woven wire springs and babies' cribs.

This is, we believe, the best display of mattresses, beds and bedding that has ever been put before the people of Peterborough.

REV. C. A. SYKES GEORGE ST. CHURCH

A Powerful Preacher

Rev. C. A. Sykes, B.D., of Toronto, occupied the pulpit at George street Church on Sunday morning and evening. There were good attendances at both services. Mr. Sykes proved himself a preacher of great power. In the evening his text was taken from 1 Peter, 1; 8, "Jesus Christ whom having not seen we love." He said that this text was Peter's apology for the earnestness of his faith. If the church had adhered to this explanation we would not have had the "dark ages."

We must have creeds and catichisms, but there must be room for freedom. "creeds are good for today only." Experience of Christ in the heart was the test of religion. "What we want in the church is a revival of this passion for Jesus Christ; nothing else will carry us over the deserts and seas of life like the faith expressed in these words—"Having not seen we love."

SMALL ROOM OCCUPIED BY FOUR PEOPLE

Sanitary Inspector Gives Notice That Improvements Must be Made

The conditions in a house on Elm street, as reported by Sanitary Inspector Spence, are not in accord with the health regulations and certainly no in accord with the points brought out by the speakers in the city churches on Sunday.

Mr Spence states that the house or shack as it is in reality is occupied by man and wife and two children.

The Inspector says these four people eat and sleep in the one room, which is 7x8 feet, there being but one small window not more than one foot square.

The owner of the structure has been informed that alterations must be made if the people were to remain

WOMEN DOCTORS

A Fair Canadian Medico Explains Why They Succeed.

There are nine medical freshettes this autumn, and this is the largest "mind-the-paint" class since the women began to migrate from their own "Medical Building," some ten years ago, to see if the men were getting anything better than they in the way of training.

There are at present over twenty-five women practicing medicine in Toronto, and after interviewing them thoughtfully and pondering much, an impression is gained, which appears not unreasonable, that in entering medicine, women are not usurping the natural field of men, but regaining possession of a field for which they have been endowed by nature and which has been wrested from them by strange processes of civilization.

Almost everyone knows that the first woman in Canada to brave Mother Grundy and the loud voiced Mr. Grundy, who is always more or less paralyzed when a woman does something she has never done before, was Dr. Emily Howard Stowe, who graduated in New York in 1867 and came to Toronto to practice. The mental attitude at that time is represented by the story of Mary Ann at the dispensary when the doctoress informed her that her illness was serious and she had better go home to bed. Mary Ann trembled and asked breathlessly, "Well then hadn't I better get a real doctor?"

Most men won't call in a doctor until they are delirious and their wives do it for them. But there are a number of women who, when other dissipations pall, find it soothing and interesting to have a long, confidential chat with a doctor who will be much exercised over their truly exceptional cases. Only a doctor can realize how finely and nervously wrought is one's high-strung mentality. The family may be sarcastic but the doctor isn't paid for that. And for many years these patients have provided a cruise of oil for the polite man with the grey goatee and the little black case. But listen to this from one of the younger graduates, who made $1,600 in her first year, and is now in her third year thinking seriously of setting up a car and moving over "the hill."

"Most of my patients are of two classes. Women of education who choose my services because they think I could understand them better than a man, and also I would neither flatter nor deceive them in any way. Men may not do it consciously, but it isn't natural for them to be perfectly frank with a woman patient. Then the other class is among people who have had less education, some of whom have overcome their superstition, and find it comfortable to talk freely with another woman over real or fancied ailments, knowing that she will intuitively understand. And, of course, we daren't lose a case. We are on trial, in a sense. In any comparatively [illegible] better work than the men if we would be accepted on an equal footing with them.

"Please don't take this to mean that we are vain enough to place ourselves before the men. We just can't help feeling proud that the prejudiced public is being overcome and the people are learning to value us by the work we do rather than by our sex."

A Fair Jury.

In a suit some years ago between father and son before an Indiana justice of the peace the sextet comprising the jury came in after three hours' deliberation with the following impartial verdict: "We, the jury, agree to find judgment for neither plaintiff nor defendant and find that each pay half the costs." It is said the verdict struck every one as being so unusually fair that even the parties to the action were satisfied.—Case and Comment.

LARGE CONGREGATIONS AND BRIGHT ANNIVERSARY SERVICES

Regular Accommodation at Mark Street Church Not Sufficient for the Day—Rev. T. J. Mansell and Mr. I. Brock Took the Services

The 40th anniversary of the Mark street Methodist Church, held yesterday, was largely attended, the church being packed to the doors. Many chairs had to be added, so large was the attendance. The morning worship was conducted by the Rev. T. J. Mansell, of the Charlotte street Methodist Church, who delivered an interesting and instructive sermon, taking his text from John, 1st chapter, 7th verse: "The man came for a witness, to bear testimony of the Light that all men through him might believe."

The evening service, which took the form of an illustrated lecture on that interesting and instructive subject, "Opportunity," by Mr. Ivor Brock, of Toronto, accompanied by some beautifully colored views, delighted the large and appreciative congregation. Mrs. Hughes assisted the choir in the service of song.

The lecture, which covered the life of Christ with His many opportunities, and how He made use of them, was the principal theme. "The sower will some day bring forth fruit," said Mr. Brock. "Seek the seed of opportunity. There are opportunities that we never seek. The greatest opportunity of life is service to Christ."

The different views shown gave a vivid description of the many opportunities of the life of the old world, and how some were made use of, while others were passed by as is the case to-day.

"Let us be wise in selecting our opportunities. Opportunity comes quick and must be accepted quickly. There are those who seek to destroy for what reason we do not know. Views were shown depicting a wrecker going along the sea shore with his lantern, by which he lured the vessels into shore, they thinking that they were on the right track. The next day he went and gathered up the remains of the wreck. "This," said Mr. Brock, "is not the suggestion of the opportunity we want."

"We should be kind to those who seek the broad path; we should assist them in seeking the narrow path. The broad path has many allurements, and those who take it are to be kindly dealt with.

"Life itself is a great opportunity, So it is easy to carry out an opportunity. Opportunity comes to every one of us.

"All ye that are heavy laden come unto Me and I will help you"; "that is the best and blessed opportunity," concluded the speaker.

The anniversary tea will be held this evening in the Sunday school room. Rev. T. J. Mansell will give his well known lecture, accompanied by views on a "Trip Through Palestine."

SCARTH GETS FIVE YEARS; KELLY MUST STAND TRIAL

Supposed Partner of Alleged Yeggman is Said to Hail From Peterboro but Local Police Have not Been Communicated With Sufficient Nitro-Glycerine to Blow up Saskatoon Was Found

Saskatoon, Nov. 21.—Five years in the penitentiary at Prince Albert with hard labor, was the sentence Magistrate Brown meted out in court to J. C. Scarth of Brooklin, Ont., alleged yeggman, who pleaded guilty to having in his possession a quart bottle of nitro glycerine and many dangerous weapons.

(Saskatoon Star.)

Guarded by two detectives and a police constable, J. C. Scarth, of Brooklin, Ont., believed to be a leader of a notorious gang of yeggmen, who have been operating in the west, and who was placed under arrest in Saskatoon by the detective department on the afternoon of November 6, was led into the prisoner's box at the city police court yesterday. "Guilty," said Scarth to a charge of knowingly having in his possession, when arrested, an explosive substance, namely nitro glycerine. "I will remand you until tomorrow morning for sentence," was the magistrate's only remark in connection with the case. This closed Scarth's case and he was led from the court to the cell under escort of officers.

James Kelly, of Peterborough, Ont., believed by the city detective department to be Scarth's running mate, was next brought out to face a charge of conspiring with Scarth to commit an indictable offence. At the conclusion of a preliminary hearing into the charge, Magistrate Brown committed the accused [illegible] the next criminal sittings in Saskatoon.

How these two men had come to the city from Regina the day before their arrest in Saskatoon and established a "plant" in the Yale hotel on Avenue A., which gave them access to sufficient nitro-glycerine to blow up Saskatoon; loaded revolvers, five pounds of dynamite partly cooked, fifty feet of fuse, 100 rounds of ammunition, caps, tape candle and flash-light, was related by Detective Springer.

Detective Springer was the first witness called in connection with the case of Kelly. He began his evidence by telling what he knew of the accused. He was an associate of Scarth. Kelly the detective said, was brought into his office on November 6th, by two police officers. After warning him in regard to making a statement, Kelly, according to the witness, related his movements in Saskatoon and other cities with Scarth. It was learned that the men had come from Regina on the C.R. R. the night before. Kelly went to the King Edward hotel, where he registered. It was near there where his arrest was effected.

At that time Kelly appeared to be looking for Scarth, who had taken quarters at the Yale hotel, Avenue A.

The detective then told of going to the Yale hotel early that afternoon and placing Scarth under arrest, just as he was coming out. A search of his person showed that he had in his possession a considerable quantity of nitro-glycerine, a loaded revolver and other dangerous weapons. He attempted to pull the revolver when informed that he was under arrest.

Cross-examined by the counsel for the defence, Detective Springer said that at the time Kelly was placed under arrest no explosives were found on him.

Among the things the detective found in the possession of Kelly when searched at the station, was a watch, fifteen or sixteen dollars, and a railway pass, permitting him to go to Regina, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, and other places. This pass allowed the owner to stop off at at any of the stations for a day or more.

The first time Constable McLaughlin saw the accused was on the afternoon of November 6th. At that time the accused was nervously pacing up and down outside of the King Edward Hotel. The impression witness said he formed, was that the prisoner was anxiously waiting for someone.

Constable Gibson said that at 5.20 o'clock on the afternoon of November 6 he was in room No. 19 in the Yale Hotel watching the room where the explosives were, and while there he heard someone come up, and later saw a man in dark clothes proceed to room No. 31 and tap lightly at the door. The stranger then went down stairs. When he did so the officer did likewise, and asked a Mrs. Wright if Kelly was enquiring for "Slim." (this being the name given to Scarth) Kelly then went to room No. 1 and enquired there about "Mr. Slim."

A little later the officer phoned up Detective Springer for instructions, and was told to arrest any suspicious characters. Another officer nearby at the time was told of the instructions given by the detective. After Kelly was placed under arrest, witness said that the prisoner at first said he did not know Scarth.

Detective Springer, when questioned in regard to former movements of Kelly, said that upon his own admission he had been sentenced on one occasion on a charge of theft to two months [illegible] finger print system, at Emerson, Man. His arrest was effected in connection with holding up of a Soo train. He was dismissed. The detective said being committed in the city, a search of the hotels located the two prisoners. They were arrested on a charge of vagrancy and given an opportunity to vacate the city.

Police Chief Thompson has not been communicated with in regard to the matter. When last heard of James Kelly was in Wisconsin. He visited his home in Peterborough last winter.

A TRIBE OF TRAMPS.

East African Outcasts That Won't Work and Will Steal.

While on a hunting expedition to British East Africa in quest of pictures of wild horses Paul J. Rainey discovered that even among savages there is a tribe which closely resembles our own "knights of the road." They are the Wandorobo. They are found along the Guaso Nyiro and Guaso Narok rivers and are regarded as outcasts by the other native tribes.

The Wandorobo most closely resembles his American brother, the tramp, in that he refuses to work. He is a hunter and is exceedingly expert with the poisoned arrow, which he uses exclusively. A large club he carries is used to ward off and to scare wild beasts that may come too near.

Although the Wandorobo has settlements in some places, he wanders far from home and usually makes his bed in the top of a tree to be safe from wild animals. He is a notorious thief, and whenever he approaches an encampment the askari, or policeman, who is the only native permitted by the government to wear arms, watches the Wandorobo very carefully, for there is nothing too hot or too heavy for him to try to make off with.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

It is a good idea to make button holes on both sides of a lingerie waist. Sew the buttons on a tape and button them to one side of the waist. When the waist buttons and the same tape of buttons can be used on several waists.

WERE the drop curtain at the "Metropolitan" Opera House one big mirror, the famous "diamond [illegible] realize what a wonderful ensemble of beauty, grace and fashion it really represents. It would reflect also the very salient fact that some of the occupants of the parterre boxes by their graceful attitudes, gestures and poses add immensely to the style of the gowns they wear. It would also show that others seem to have a certain conscious manner and stiffness of pose that often counterbalance the really beautiful dresses worn and take away from their intrinsic and artistic worth.

This holds true of various other social gatherings where good clothes are worn. The pose counts. It counts in the attitude of the body as well as the expression on the face. Rather far fetched, you may say, but even a cursory glance at a bevy of attractive women will prove that this fact rests on a very tangible foundation. The old idea, once frequently met up with in America, that to try to be extra pretty and attractive bordered on the incorrect is luckily fast fading away. Grace of bearing is just as necessary as graceful clothes, but even yet to many the latter is constantly lived up to, while the other is neglected.

Last winter at the opera the occupants of two of the boxes were a constant delight to the eye. Grace was in every pose, breeding in every gesture, nothing too striking nor startling in clothes or more different than the rest excepting this absolute ease in wearing clothes to their best advantage.

At the Horse Show the fashionable woman does undergo a most trying ordeal, and it speaks well for the American woman that in general she runs the gauntlet of the curious onlooker at such close range appearing to be or really unconscious of it. At luncheons, teas and restaurant dinners the women [illegible] more at ease; perhaps they are not under the same keen scrutiny as on more formal occasions.

This is all somewhat away from the main question of fashionable dress. A three-ply mirror will give more information about laws of taste in wearing good gowns than could a chronicle of fashions [illegible] will not [illegible] if before leaving [illegible] state in a new [illegible] you study a woman before the mirror how [illegible] whether the destination is a tea at the opera or the Horse Show or the little dance at the local club house.

A harmonious ensemble in dress is another point in pleasing gowning that is overlooked by many women who have otherwise good taste in dress. The worst example that has ever come under the writer's notice was at a Bernhardt performance last season. The woman was a fine looking woman, gowned in an adorable Poiret dress of latest style. Above this was a nice, motherly face, but the [illegible] tight [illegible] would a woman who had the [illegible] to wear [illegible] than the [illegible] that a daytime coiffure often [illegible] that is no improvement on the [illegible] full evening dress. I don't wish [illegible] figure to look like a [illegible] in the [illegible] But [illegible] are [illegible] lovely women [illegible] back [illegible] first and pretty [illegible] to America [illegible] more on the chiffon than on the [illegible] composed of an up[illegible] desired [illegible] flounce. The upper, [illegible] draped at the sides, is in true overskirt [illegible] The waist is continued above [illegible] the embroidery to bust [illegible] above this the nasturtium colored chiffon is posed over a white chiffon lining. A [illegible] collar deep as a cape [illegible] composed of a wide and a narrow layer, [illegible] on the waist [illegible] a band of skunk fur. The ends tuck in under the arms. [illegible] of the season's evening [illegible] A large [illegible] bow placed at the [illegible] back [illegible] below the waist line and the Venetian basque tabs on the waist are two new fashion details shown in two views of another dress, Nos. 3 and 4. Over a foundation dress of turquoise taffeta is posed a tunic that has a beaded tulle bodice and a black tulle beaded skirt. The skirt itself is outlined by a beaded border which follows the edge of the sash placed at the back. The tunic is [illegible] overbound with turquoise [illegible] bands, and the large black tulle bow is caught by a strass buckle slide. The corsage is held on with embroidered sparkling shoulder straps weighted with swaying tassels.

A very artistic dress that seems to have something of the Egyptian to it is of pottery red taffeta and has a tunic that consists of a skirt portion only, which is of black chiffon; this chiffon is repeated in the long sleeves which shape into the odd arm holes made by the long petal points of the taffeta bodice. The scant skirt is on lines that are seen in a number of dress foundations, the seam in the centre front, the hem curving up to this seam and making a foot line that discloses the ankles. The wide black velvet sash ribbon is wound artistically about the figure. The small black satin hat, also wound turban like, has a brush aigrette.

Violine velvet, that lovely shade of purple, is used to make the dress where the fulness is drawn toward the front. There is also a slight drapery tendency in the back. This is one of the unevenly draped dresses; the horizontal fold is taken up higher on one side of the front than the other. The bloused corsage, left negligently open in front, shows an outlining jabot of ivory toned lace. Long sleeves set into a shoulder yoke have turned back, quaintly pleated turquoise velvet cuffs, the collar of the same and pleated in the same manner. A little scant wreath of goura on the hat is one of the most popular ways of trimming the tiny shapes now in vogue.

A black crêpe de Chine dress with evenly draped skirt and long modish train is brightened with a girdle of vivid blue moire ribbon, tying at one side of the front. The small patent leather trimmed hat is of vivid blue plush. The extreme [illegible] of the gown and its studied [illegible] proportions are enhanced by the way the dress is worn with an ease from which every trace of stiffness is removed.

BRIGHT PROSPECTS FOR CITY LEAGUE

With Same Age Limit as Junior O.H.A. --- Four Or Five Teams Can be Secured For This Organization

There appears to be very good prospects of launching a City Hockey League for junior hockey players. Pete Gettas has his Boston Exploits ready, and the Alerts are considering an entry into such a league. Then the Y.M.C.A and the Collegiate are likely to be heard from, and Manager Craig of the Junior O.H.A. team thinks that he will have sufficient material to enter a team in the league and at the same time, send out a smart seven to do battle in the O.H.A.

It is unnecessary to point out the vast amount of good, to be obtained from the experience junior players would receive in this league. The results from the senior league have been seen in Brock street and other rinks. Frank Hefferan, Ken Crane, Rollie Weir, Walter Miller, Leo Derocher and many other players got their start in the City League.

The age limit for the Junior League would be the same as in Junior O.HA. not over twenty.

SPORTING GOSSIP

A Collegiate Institute team defeated the Public Schools' fourteen on Saturday by 10—0.

In Whitby the O.H.A. Club DEMANDS 60 per cent. of the gate receipts. Here in Peterborough where enough players have been developed to float a new hockey association, the hockey club is practically without a home.

Canadian League friends of Bobbie Heck, the London pitcher, will regret to learn that his father passed away in Syracuse.

If any amateur hockey player in Ontario believes he can leave home and try out with a professional team in Toronto or elsewhere, and still retain the right to play among amateurs he is mistaken. And when any such is in doubt his best source of information will be the amateur authorities, not the professional promot r who is making the inducements.

Y.M.C.A. DOINGS

Basketball—In the Senior League Friday night the Swankers won from the Tin-Ribs 22—4, and the Saw-bones defeated the Artists 26—11. Cripples and Swankers meet to-night at 9 o'clock.

Life Problem Club.—Mr. G. N. Baker addressed the Club Sunday afternoon in the Association parlor at 4.15. A large number of the boys were present and enjoyed the meeting.

Wrestling.—Wrestling class will meet to-night at 8.30. The wrestling class is very popular with the members and everything points to a most successful season.

GAME MIGHT BE ARRANGED WITH OTTAWA COLLEGE SEVEN

Leo Derocher Says Collegians Will Have Strong Team for Trip

Leo Derocher, erstwhile, puck-blocker for local hockey teams, is home from Ottawa College for a short visit. "Laj," says the Faculty at Ottawa College has put on the brakes so far as league hockey is concerned and the college will not be represented in the Interprovincial.

But arrangements are being made to send out a strong team to do battle in a number of large cities. The trip will include games in Cleveland and New York.

Leo is almost certain of landing a job between the nets. He thinks arrangements might be made to have the Collegians appear in Peterborough between Christmas and New Years.

VICTORIA, B.C., Nov. 24.—The first fatality ever recorded in English Rugby in this part of the country occurred on Saturday when Peter Ogden, playing fullback for Victoria against New Zealand, was kicked on the head and died in the ambulance which was rushing him to St. Joseph's Hospital.

"THAT IS NO GOOD AT ALL."

What It Meant When Used by the Italian Postal Official.

"A postoffice order was awaiting me in the postoffice of a small Italian village," writes a correspondent of the Cologne Gazette. "I could see the pleasant little document lying on the counter, so I gave my name and asked for the money.

"The official, however, remarked that that wouldn't do. 'Ah,' thought I, 'he wants some proof of identity,' so I rummaged among my papers and fetched out my military service paper.

"'That is no good at all,' said the official, 'because'— But after the 'because' he stuck. The words refused to come out, and he merely assumed an icy official demeanor. 'Ah,' thought I, 'he can't read the German of my service paper,' so I went away and dragged in my innkeeper, and he swore with a mighty oath that I was so and so.

"'That is no good at all,' was all the man behind the counter vouchsafed, though he said it with a smile. So I hurried back to the inn and fetched further proofs of my identity—a passport, an authenticated copy of a certificate of nationality and finally even a letter from an Italian relative. Surely the postoffice man would be able to read them.

"'That is no good at all,' he said, with another of his pleasant smiles, after he had read them, adding that he was very, very sorry. Naturally I got angry at this and abused him as well as a limited acquaintance with foreign terms of abuse would permit.

"'That is no good at all,' he said, with another of his smiles, as he rattled the shutter across the pigeon hole. Next morning I returned to the charge only to see the shutter fly across again. The day after the same thing happened. But on the third day I brought the burgomaster with me. I came prepared to have it out with the Italian postoffice. What was my astonishment when I saw the clerk waiting for me behind the open shutter, with a handful of small coins, which he counted out to me, winding up with a fascinating smile as he said, 'Don't you see, yesterday and the day before I hadn't enough money.'"

MYSTERY OF LEPROSY.

And the Treatment Its Victims Received in the Middle Ages.

Why leprosy occurs in certain places and not in others is one of the mysteries of medicine. In the early centuries of the Christian era it spread all over Europe. Every city had its leper [illegible] the sixteenth century, and Europe soon numbered its empty lazarettos by thousands. Climate has no influence on the disease, for when it left the most of Europe it persisted in Norway, Iceland, Spain and the islands of the Mediterranean. In Asia it is to be found from India to Siberia, and no part of Africa is free from it.

That leprosy can be planted in new territory is shown most pointedly in the terrible experience of Hawaii, which was free from the disease until about 1850, when the Chinese brought it there. Now Molokai is a name to make men shudder.

In the middle ages it was the custom to consider a man dead whenever he was found to have leprosy. His heirs divided his property, a funeral service was said for him and a shovelful of earth thrown after him as he walked to his living grave in the leper house. The world is kinder now, but knows no treatment for this scourge which is much more effective.—St. Louis Republic.

STRANGE IMMIGRANTS

MAROONS THE QUEEREST NEWCOMERS IN CANADA'S HISTORY.

Intractable Ex-Slaves From Jamaica Who Settled In Nova Scotia in 1796 Were Real Undesirables — They Were Finally Transported to Sierra Leone, Where They Joined Slave Traders.

One hears much of immigration these days—of the coming of homeseekers to our shores by the shipload, so that the newcomers within a single year run up into hundreds of thousands, or about four times as numerous as were the people of all Canada when it passed to the British Crown. So far as this country is concerned, it is a period of immigration, but is not the beginning of the movement, for all through our history runs the story of the coming of people from lands beyond the sea. It is not proposed to here recount all that story, but only to review one of its most remarkable chapters—the chapter that tells of the coming of the Maroons of Jamaica to Nova Scotia in 1796.

Of all the many settlements and colonies founded or attempted within the boundaries of what is now the Dominion of Canada, the most peculiar was that set up at Preston, near Halifax. It was a colony as undesirable as remarkable, and it was well for Nova Scotia that it proved a failure, because the colonists were a number of the most cruel, warlike and restless of the black population of the West Indies—the terrible Maroons. First, something about this people.

The Spaniards, when England took Jamaica, left behind them a large number of colored slaves, who refused to quit the island when their masters gave it up, and the English took possession. These masterless slaves fled to the hills and mountains of the interior, where they subsisted principally on wild hogs, which roamed the woods in large numbers and where, in a country of luxuriant and continuous vegetation, they easily found abundance of food. It was from this mode of life that these people are said to have derived the name, Maroons, which meant hog-hunters.

For many years these mountain outlaws harassed and annoyed the planters and generally disturbed the peace of the island, especially in the central portion, known as the parish of Clarendon. They finally became so troublesome under the leadership of one called Cudjoe, that the Government troops, under Col. Guthrie were sent to suppress them. After a long campaign the white decided to make a treaty with the fierce hog hunters. A treaty was, therefore concluded by Governor Edward Trelawney, and by its terms the Maroons were declared free and lands were allotted them for their use. The experiment was a failure and finally another long guerilla warfare ensued.

In the end the Maroons were beaten, surrendering to Gen. Walpole, the commander of the troops. They laid down their arms on condition that their lives should be spared, and that they be permitted to remain in the country, subject to the government of the whites, as was the case before the war. The white settlers refused the last proposal and demanded the transportation of the half-castes.

The Maroons were transported from Jamaica in June, 1796, in three ships—the Dover, Mary, and Anne—which sailed from Bluefields, with 600 Maroons on board and arrived at Halifax after a voyage of six weeks. "They were provided with all manner of necessaries, as well for their accommodation at sea, as for the change of climate," writes Judge Haliburton in his "Account of Nova Scotia"; "and they were accompanied by William Dawes Quarrel, who had been appointed commissary-general with instructions to purchase land in Nova Scotia or elsewhere, for their future establishment and subsistence as a free people. The sum of $125,000 was allowed by the Legislature of Jamaica for this purpose."

At that time, Edward, Duke of Kent, was commander of the forces [illegible] board. Their fine physique did not escape the notice of the trained eye of the soldier, and he said that he thought them well adapted to military service. The duke spoke to a number of the Maroon leaders who in addressing him, called him "Massa Prince," and "Massa King's Son."

The Maroons, who but a few months before were fighting British troops in Jamaica, labored with a will on the British fortifications of Halifax. "The lines of the Citadel were raised with rapidity, and the Maroon Bastion, erected by their efforts, remains as a monument of their active industry."

The Maroons' first winter in Nova Scotia was attended with considerable hardships. The season was unusually severe; the Maroons' firewood was soon exhausted; their stores of potatoes was frozen in the cellars; and the supplies of Halifax failing, the Maroons were in danger of suffering from hunger.

Soon afterwards the Maroons again lapsed into idleness; "and labor was neglected for amusements, for cards and cock-fighting, strolling to town, and occasionally earning some money in accidental occupations.

They became a charge on the province, and a serious one, too, for it required no less than $50,000 a year to keep them, and as they were anxious to get to a warmer climate, it was finally decided to send them to Sierra Leone in West Africa, and they were again transported.

After reaching Sierra Leone, the Maroons scattered, and most of them became slave-catchers for the Arabs engaged in the slave trade. In the course of twenty-five years they helped to depopulate a broad swath across Africa to the eastern coast.

A Singer's Avarice.

We hear a great deal about the enormous salaries paid to famous prima donnas nowadays, and we also hear a great deal about their charity and good nature. In the reign of Queen Anne one of the most celebrated singers was Mrs. Tofts, who had a veritable craze for money making as well as a great deal of personal conceit. Pope, who never spared any persons or objects that he satirized, wrote an epigram that must have greatly annoyed the avaricious singer:

So bright is thy beauty, so charming thy song,
As had drawn both the beasts and their Orpheus along.
But such is thy avarice and such is thy pride
That the beasts must have starved and the poet have died.

HIGH COURT SITTINGS

MR. JUSTICE MEREDITH TO PRESIDE

A comparatively light docket will face Mr. Justice Middleton at the non-jury sittings of the High Court which open to-morrow afternoon at the Court House.

In one of the cases, the Peterborough Cold Storage Company is suing John Hawley, of Toronto for $2,000. The plaintiff claims that on October the 4th, 1912, following a request from the defendant, he offered to sell him 1,500 cases of his best eggs, handled out of storage as required up to the fifteenth of January at 27 1-2 cents a dozen, f.o.b. at Peterborough, the offer to remain open until Monday and to be accepted by telegram. The acceptance was wired on the Monday.

Between October 18th, 1912 and February 26th, 1913, the defendant received some 900 cases at a total cost of $7,424.18. The same was paid.

Hawley refused to accept the remaining 600 cases and pay the amount of $4,950 for them. The eggs were resold by the plaintiff at $2,970.23, therefore losing the amount of $1,979.77 with interest from March 28th, 1913, at the rate of five per cent. The defence admits the acceptance of the first lot but claims them to be musty and not fit for resale. Arrangements were made whereby the eggs were to be of a better quality, but they proved no better and he lost a number of his old customers. He therefore has a counter claim of $2,500.

The case will present some very fine legal points. Messrs. Goodwill & Bennet of this city city are acting for the plaintiff, while Messrs. Johnston, McKay, Dods and Grant of Toronto, are acting for the defendant.

McBAIN VS. CAVAN TOWNSHIP.

George C. McBain, of the Township of Cavan is in action against the township, re damages caused to his land the creek which circles his property. The plaintiff claims damages for breach of contract and asks for an order directing the Council to carry out its agreement respecting the keeping of the course of the stream clear.

The defence is that the ditch which drains the plaintiff's land as well as the other persons, and that a culvert was constructed as requested by Mr. McBain who, however failed to work in harmony with the defendants.

Messrs. Goodwill and Bennet are appearing for the plaintiffs, and Messrs. Ruddy and Burnham for the defendants.

TO RECOVER LOAN.

The case of Thos. Brightman vs. M. J. Quigley, of Toronto, in which which the plaintiff, Mr. Brightman is in action to try and recover the sum of $2,331.00 from the defendant, will probably be laid over to the next sitting of the court. The plaintiff claims that the defendant through one John Welch applied for a loan of the above amount, and that the said John Welch informed the plaintiff that the defendant would shortly be entitled to an amount of money out of the estate of the defendant's deceased father, and that Quigley, in case he had not previously paid the loan would, on the receiving of the money out of the said estate, repay the money loaned the defendant by the plaintiff. The latter demands that the defendant repay the sum and interest together with the costs of the action.

The defendant denies the charges and the plaintiff further alleges that the said John Welch acted solely for the defendant in arranging the loan.

Hall, Medd and Davidson are acting for the plaintiff and McGuire and Henderson, of Toronto, for the defendant.

BREACH OF PROMISE.

A breach of promise case which was laid over at the Fall Assizes will also come before the court. There is no defence offered.

A STATEMENT OF FACTS REGARDING THE "SWING" AT THE C.P.R. BRIDGE

Mr. Burnham, M.P. has handed out the following statement to the press:

"Alderman Buller called upon me this morning to my surprise to know why the Government had reported in favor of a swing at the western end of the C.P.R. bridge and why the C.P.R. was ignoring that report. I replied to him that such a statement was the very reverse of the fact. No report was made by any representative of the Government at all. Mr. Grant emphatically confirms that statement. This is the history of it. The Mayor and I went to Ottawa to ask the Government to compel the C.P.R. to build a swing in their new bridge here. Previously I had tired out the Railway Commission and the Department of Railways and Canals finding at last that it was the Public Works Department that had jurisdiction over this bridge. The Minister wired Mr. Wanklyn of the C.P.R. to meet us at Ottawa which he did, and after a short conference he agreed to put in a swing. My duty ended there. As I remarked to the Mayor he represented the city thereafter. I did not. The C.P.R. then made ready to put in a swing in the centre of the bridge.

To this the Mayor and his Engineer objected. They wanted the west end span as a swing. To this the C.P.R replied that such a swing was unnecessarily long, too expensive and also dangerous. Then the Mayor wrote the Minister, who said that he thought the C.P.R.'s offer reasonable and declining virtually to interfere further. The disagreement is, as I understand it, over the putting in of a swing which is at least as wide as many of those on the canal, and the putting in of one as desired by the city. If the C.P.R.'s offer is no good that fact should be demonstrated by the city to the government, not by the government or its officers or myself. But so far no such demonstration has been made. The point I wish to make however, is that nobody acting for the government will assume for one moment the act for the city. The city will see the necessity of acting just as any other claimant acts by putting in its claim to the Government and following it up by expert testimony, if necessary, in support of its contention.

I will be glad to assist it if it is right. But so far nothing has occurred to prove that that the C. P. R's. offer is not fair. The Government must be fair to all parties and if the C.P.R.'s offer is reasonable I understand why the minister refuses to interfere farther. If it is not practicable show him. I have wired Mr. Wanklyn to see if he will put the same width of swing, as he offers in the middle, at the west end. I am informed that the width of swing offered by them is sufficient. There may be some doubt as to the place. About that I know [illegible]

RESCUE OF YOUNG GIRL FROM LIFE OF DEGREDATION

David Kidd-Byrne Tells Story at Royal Theatre

David J. Kidd-Byrne, who enjoys the title of the Millionaire Evangelist, addressed two meetings in the Royal Theatre on Sunday.

He repeated the well known story of how when visiting in Chicago he met a young girl who had been lured away from her parental roof in Pittsburg and kept in the accursed walls of a degraded dive. He read a chapter from St. Luke and the result was that the girl harkened to his voice and with his financial aid returned to her home. Mr. Byrne later found out this girl was the daughter of a millionaire. Now he is securing proofs of identification to enable him to secure the millions left to him by the girl's father, at her request, before she died.

The speaker instanced several other rescues he had performed, and outlined work along this line that awaits the Christian man and woman of today.

In closing Mr. Byrne spoke very highly of the work done by women police, and stated that he hoped ere long that Peterborough would boast of a police woman who could aid in the protection of young girls.

MRS. HOWSON AS BOY'S GUARDIAN

Judge Huycke Gave Judgment This Afternoon

This afternoon Judge Huycke appointed Mrs. Howson, of Norwood, as the guardian of eight year old Reginald Howson. Mrs. Howson is willing to accept the guardianship of the boy. The relatives of the boy and the grandfather and half brother will be allowed to visit the boy and to take him for visits. The income of the estate of the little fellow's deceased father will be used to provide for expenses as to his schooling and up-keep.

Evidence in this case was heard before Judge Huycke last week.

COMMISSIONERS HEAR INSPECTOR AND POLICE CHIEF

In future the police department will not take a plea of guilty in a liquor case, in which License Inspector Stewart is interested.

The Police Commissioners at a meeting Saturday afternoon heard the complaint of Inspector Stewart against the police department, and the explanations made by Chief Thompson.

Mr. Stewart claimed that he did not get the proper support from the police department in blacklisters' cases. This was denied by Chief Thompson.

AT CONSERVATORY

Miss Jeannette Killmaster and Miss Jean Hill Sing and Play to Large Audience

At the Peterborough Conservatory of Music on Saturday evening, Miss Jeanette Killmaster, tutor at that institution, gave a vocal recital assisted by Miss Jean Hill, her talented pupil. There was a good attendance almost every seat being occupied. Such an attendance shows the growing taste for first class music in Peterborough. Mr. Gliddon and his staff must feel gratified that their work is appreciated by the public.

Miss Killmaster is artistic without being artificial, her voice has peculiar qualities which are difficult to define. There is a touch of originality in the way she renders her songs. She sang a cycle of German songs. "Die still Wasser Rose," and "Der Schmied" (The Balcksmith) were two of them and these gave her an opportunity of showing her versatility. The Blacksmith was well done. "The Bloom is on the Rye"—better known as Sim Reeve's "Pretty Jane."— was gracefully rendered and took one back to the days when love songs were more simple and genuine. Miss Killmaster might give an evening with the old songs sometime, it would be bound to be popular.

Miss Jean Hill is a very creditable pupil her execution in the "Valse in E Major" by Moskows, was a work of art, as was also Weber's Tempo di Marcia Piu Mosso" in which Miss Leary ably accompanied her at the second piano. Miss McKee efficiently accompanied Miss Killmaster.

G.T.R. FLYER IS WRECKED BUT PASSENGERS ESCAPED DEATH

While Running at a Speed of 60 to 70 Miles an Hour Eastbound Train Runs on a Spread Rail and Comes to Grief.

CHATHAM, Nov. 25.—The G.T.R. "Eastern Flyer," Detroit to Toronto, was wrecked at 4.40 yesterday afternoon between Puce and Belle River, about fifteen miles out of Windsor. Number 16 was behind time at Windsor, which is quite unusual, and is reported to have been making between 60 and 70 miles an hour. Most of the cars remained upright, and to this can be ascribed the fact that none of the passengers or crew are reported seriously injured. All suffered considerable shaking up, and many were severely bruised.

A broken or spread rail is blamed for the derailment, though the cause is not yet officially stated. This train carries two or three day coaches, a diner and Pullmans, with baggage and express car, and all were thrown from the track. The locomotive remained on the rails with the tender, but the first passenger car broke away from the others and rolled 150 feet. The remainder of the coaches remained on their trucks.

Ties are torn up for a considerable distance, and both east and westbound tracks were blocked. Wrecking crews were sent out from London and Windsor to clear the right of way.

Conductor Higgins was passing through the chair car when the crash came, and was thrown against a seat. His forehead, cheek and knuckles were cut badly.

Number 11, a local due here from London at 4.08, proceeded to the wreck and backed up to Chatham with the passengers from the flyer at 8.30 last night.

Passenger for Toronto reached that city about 1.30 this morning.

UNRAVELS THE TANGLE

H. Pollman Evans, a Witness in Union Life Probe

TORONTO, Nov. 25.—The investigation into the affairs of the Union Life Insurance Co. and other co-related companies was re-opened yesterday before Referee George Kappele, K.C., with Mr. H. Pollman Evans, recently arrived from Europe, as the chief witness. Mr. A. E. Masten, K.C., the representative of the Dominion Insurance Department, devoted most of the time yesterday to ascertaining from Mr. Evans the system of co-relation under which the Union Life Insurance Co. and eight or nine other companies, in which Mr. Evans was also the dominant figure, had been operated.

The evidence yesterday for the most part centred around the Union Life Co., the National Agency, which was described as "the managing agent" for the Union Life Co.; the Agency Lands and Securities Co., and the National Land, Fruit & Packing Co., which was the veritable sink-hole into which so much of the borrowings from England were placed.

The relationship of the National Agency and the Union Life was elicited at the outset of the renewed investigation. Mr. Evans stated that, besides being president of the Union Life, he was secretary and director of the National Agency. The function of the National Agency was, later in the day, made the subject of some sharp cross-questioning by Mr. Masten, in which it was shown that although the National Agency was nominally the managing agent for the Union Life Co. and got ten per cent. on total commissions for this position, the Assurance Company had practically done all its own work.

INQUEST HAD TO BE ADJOURNED

No Report From Analyst in Hamilton Case

Hamilton, Nov. 25.—The inquest into the death of Mrs. J. H. Griffin, who died last Sunday, three days after her sister, Miss Ettie Forsyth, had passed away with similar symptoms, had to be adjourned last night until next Monday, as the analyst had not made a report on his examination of the stomach which was forwarded to him.

POLLING ON DEC. 13.

Macdonald and South Lanark Election Dates Set.

OTTAWA, Nov. 25.—At a meeting of the Cabinet last evening the dates of the Macdonald and South Lanark bye-elections were set. Nominations take place Dec. 6 and the elections on Dec. 13. Immense interest is being taken in both elections.

Macdonald is vacant through the unseating of Alex. Morrison, who was elected in the Conservative interest at a bye-election, and he will run again. South Lanark is vacant through the death of Hon. J. G. Haggart.

Interest in this election has been quickened because of the entry into the contest of an Independent Conservative candidate, Col. Balderson, and Arthur Hawkes, of "British-born" fame.

Dr. Hanna is the official Conservative candidate.

MANY GIFTS FOR THE BRIDE

Miss Jessie Wilson Was Married To-day

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—The flutter of happy anticipation of to-day's wedding of Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson and Francis Bowes Seyre reigneud supreme at the White House yesterday.

Through the twilight hours in the softly diffused light of the east room the entire bridal party rehearsed in detail the ceremony of to-day. Later the young folks were entertained at a dinner and dance by the officers of the U. S. Mayflower, the President's yacht, aboard that vessel, anchored at the navy yard. The elders—that is, the relatives and members of the immediate families of the bride and groom—were the guests of the President and Mrs. Wilson at dinner at the White House.

Wedding gifts continued to arrive in boxes and packages innumerable yesterday. Over the presents a guard stood all day and night. It was learned that the gift of the President and Mrs. Wilson is a dining-room set of furniture.

Unique Gift For Miss Wilson.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—A delegation representing 500 girl employes of a white goods factory left yesterday for Washington to present Miss Jessie Wilson, the President's daughter, a hand-embroidered linen petticoat as a wedding gift.

All of the 500 girls played some part in the making of the fine petticoat, which is embroidered with a garland of roses and an American eagle and flag, bearing the initials J. W. S.—Jessie Wilson Sayre. The idea was prompted by appreciation of work that Miss Wilson has done as a social worker among New York factory girls.

BONES IN A SACK.

Mysterious Remains Found Near Port Weller Are Re-interred.

ST. CATHARINES, Nov. 25.—Enquiry made yesterday among the oldest residents of Grantham Township failed to throw any light on the discovery of a body in the old Hodgkinson burying ground near Port Weller, buried in a sack, with evidence of having been interred in a hurry. The bones in the sack were found in the grave, which was being emptied among others by men in the employ of the Dominion Government, preliminary to the construction work for No. 1 section of the Welland Ship Canal. The bones were lying in a position that indicated that the body had been thrown into the hastily-made grave in a "doubled up" condition. The victim was an adult, but the sex was not determined before the bones were re-interred in the Victoria Lawn Cemetery. There seems to be no likelihood of the mystery being solved.

Another Dash by Shackleton.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—A London cable says Sir Ernest Shackleton, the famous Antarctic explorer, who had reached furthest south before Amundsen discovered the south pole, is planning another south polar dash, to take place within two years. Although plans for the expedition have not been completed it is believed Sir Ernest will follow the route taken by Capt. Scott.

FEDERALS AND REBELS ARE IN DESPERATE CONFLICT

Government's Artillery is Driving Back Constitutionalists Near Belen, Texas, While Other Engagements Are Reported Near Jaurex and Yssleta, Texas.

EL PASO, Texas, Nov. 25. — The federal artillery is driving Gen. Francisco Villa's forces back into Juarez. A desperate battle has raged for an hour opposite Belen, Texas.

Fighting started ten miles south of Juarez. West of Juarez another federal force is moving on Juarez.

The telephone girl at Ysleta, Texas, a border town a few miles east of here, stated that a fierce battle was in progress between Villa's rebel band and federals at that point, and that the rebels were retreating toward Juarez. All the available cavalry in Juarez is being sent to the southeast to reinforce the rebels there.

Wounded men from the battle opposite Belen, Texas, are crossing the border to the Texas side. One has reached El Paso, Jose Gonzales, being the first to arrive. He said a general battle was in progress southeast of Juarez.

All American troops at Fort Bliss are being held in readiness for immediate action, and additional troops, troop C 13th Cavalry and a machine gun platoon and troop L 13th Cavalry are now moving to El Paso to reinforce the patrol.

The battel opposite Belen appeared to be general, and artillery was being used by the federals.

Warships Sent to Oil Fields.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—In spite of recent assuring reports from the oil fields on the east coast of Mexico, foreigners in that section are still very apprehensive, appeals to Washington indicating that they believe not only their property, but their lives are in danger. Renewed private requests for protection following closely upon a cablegram from Chas. O'Shaughnessy at Mexico City saying it was rumored there that the United States was about to land marines, caused Secretary Daniels yesterday to instruct Rear-Admiral Fletcher, commanding the American fleet, to proceed personally to Tampico and Tuxpam and investigate conditions there.

The admiral sailed late yesterday from Vera Cruz on his temporary flagship, the battleship Rhode Island, for Tampico.

Much has been left to his discretion and he himself will decide whether it is necessary for him to go ashore for conferences with the constitutionalist leaders who have occupied the oil territory and are threatening the ports of Tampico and Tuxpam. The admiral was assured a few days ago by Gen. Aguilar, chief of the revolutionists, that there would be no interference with American or other foreign affairs.

Culprits in Famous Robbery Get Terms in Penitentiary.

LONDON, Nov. 25.—Sentence was pronounced at the London sessions at the Old Bailey yesterday on four prisoners charged with stealing and receiving a pearl necklace valued at $650,000 which disappeared during transit by registered post from Paris to London on July 16, but was later found with only one or two pearls missing.

The accused were arrested on Sept. 2 while negotiating the sale of the pearls.

Two of the men, Lockett and Grisard, were condemned to seven years penal servitude each, Silberman to five years and Guttworth to eighteen months' hard labor.

After the prisoners had been found guilty their police records were produced and showed that three of them had been convicted previously. Chief Inspector Ward said that Lockett had been convicted in the United States.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Nov. 25.—Lieuts. Eric Ellington and Hugh Kelly, First Division Army Aviation Corps, were killed yesterday in a fall about 80 feet in an aeroplane.

The accident occurred across the bay from San Diego, on the grounds of the army school on North Island.

There have been one hundred and forty aviators killed this year (excluding those killed in dirigible airship disasters).

Shot Wife, Then Self.

GLENS FALLS, N.Y., Nov. 25.—Fred Tyrell of Shoreham, Vt., yesterday shot and fatally wounded his wife and then turned the weapon up on himself, dying instantly. The tragedy occurred in the Whitehall depot when Tyrell found his wife talking with another man. Jealousy is believed to have been the motive.

Aylmer Citizen Dead.

AYLMER, Ont., Nov. 25.—Collector of Customs W. S. Caron died yesterday morning while undergoing an operation. Mr. Caron had been ill from typhoid fever for several weeks past. He was one of Aylmer's most useful citizens. For two years he occupied the mayor's chair, and was a councillor for several years.

Large Shipment of Lumber.

Mrs. Dunn was born in Wexford, Ireland, and coming to Canada when a girl, settled with her parents in Elizabethtown, close to Brockville. Between the township and the town she had resided all her life. Mrs. Dunn had the unique honor of living in the reign of five British sovereigns. Three children survive her husband having predeceased her.

What Mitchel's Election Cost.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—The total cost of the fusion campaign that resulted in the election of John Perroy Mitchel as mayor of New York City was $129,510, according to the report of Charles L. Bernheimer, treasurer of the citizens' municipal committee, made public yesterday.

Among the large contributors to the fund were: Andrew Carnegie, $7,500; Jacob H. Schiff, $6,000; and Cleveland H. Dodge Perkins and John C. Rockefeller, $5,000 each. Many women contributed.

INVESTIGATION INTO ALLEGED GIFTS OF TIMBER

Among Items of Order Paper Before Next Ses- of the House

Ottawa, Nov. 25.—John H. Burnham, M.P. for West Peterborough, evidently believes in the old adage about the early bird. Mr. Burnham last session was the father of certain ambitious legislative projects, the greater part of which were still on the order paper when Parliament prorogued. Mr. Burnham has forwarded notice to the Clerk of Routine and Proceedings to reinscribe on the order of the day for that session the undisposed of matters standing in his name. The most interesting of these was a bill to do away with honorary titles in Canada, or rather the recommendations for such honors. His argument is that if the King desires to confer a title on anyone it is his prerogative to do so, but that no "list" should be transmitted to the imperial authorities from any public functionary in Canada.

The other items on the order paper to which the Mail and Empire refers are the second reading of an amendment to the Elections Act to bring that act into conformity with provincial acts in regard to election deposits. No deposit is required from candidates in Ontario.

Another item calls for all the correspondence, etc., in connection with the lease of Burleigh Falls power.

The fourth and most significant appears opposite Mr. Burnham's name, involving the names of Hon. Robt. Rogers and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Mr. Rogers charged in a heated debate last April that one hundred and sixty million feet of timber of the public domain in British Columbia had been given away improperly by Sir Wilfrid Laurier to favorites.

Sir Wilfrid replied that he had no recollection of the matter at all but invited investigation. The whole matter is so serious that Mr. Burnham with the consent of those higher up has moved for an investigation by parliament. It will likely produce the sensation of the session.

ESCAPES FROM ASYLUM.

Cunning Break For Liberty Made by Woman Patient.

TORONTO, Nov. 25.—By clambering hand-over-hand down an improvised ladder, made of five knitted bed sheets, 35 feet in length, Mrs. Goodwin, an inmate of the Hospital for the Insane on West Queen street, made her escape early yesterday morning, and was free for several hours.

With the ends of the sheets knotted to a bar in the window the woman swung into space and commenced her perilous descent. When within ten feet of the ground, the window screen to which her ladder was attached gave way and she fell to the ground, fracturing her right arm.

Undaunted by the agony caused by her injury, the insane woman made her escape over the brick wall surrounding the grounds and was picked up hours afterwards by a police constable, wandering on West Queen street, nursing her broken arm, and in a very weak condition.

Needed Brutality.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25. — On the strength of a written confession that she had taken up with an illiterate horse-trainer, because "she needed brutality to make her happy, Charles Dwight Folsom, a well-known lawyer, was granted an interlocutory degree of divorce from his wife in the Supreme Court here yesterday. Mrs. Folsom, her mind and body shattered from the "brutality" of A. G. Williams, a Nevada horse-breeder and trainer, was last heard of in a hospital in Chico, Cal., deserted and penniless. Since then she has wandered away.

Booth Brothers Meet.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—After an estrangement of seventeen years Bramwell Booth and Ballington Booth shook hands yesterday as the luncheon guests of Rev. Alden L. Bennett, a mutual friend. The meeting was private, and, according to announcement, was "a brotherly one entirely concerned with personal matters." Presumably the suggested amalgamation of the Salvation Army and the Volunteers of America, of which the brothers are the respective heads, was not broached.

Thirteens Were Lucky.

SARNIA, Nov. 25.— The last trip down of the steamer Hamonic shows that Captain Foote is not at all superstitious regarding the number 13. Captain Foote left Port Arthur Nov 13, 1913, having on board the Hamonic thirteen first-class passengers, thirteen second-class passengers, and thirteen tons of flour. The steamer crossed Lake Superior from Port Arthur to the Soo in 13 hours and 13 minutes. Captain Foote's lucky number seems to be 13.

ELECTRICAL WORKERS ON STRIKE

Several Thousand Men Walk Out at Schenectady

Canadian Press Despatch.

Schenectady, N.Y., Nov. 25— Several thousand employes of the General Electric Company struck this morning shortly after eight o'clock while a conference was on between the management and union officials.

It is estimated that between five and seven thousand employes walked out.

Radio Phone Promoters on Trial.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25. — A jury was selected in the Federal Court yesterday to try James Dunlap Smith, Leo de Forest, Elmer E. Burlingame and Samuel E. Darby, former officers, directors and agents of the Radio Telephone Co. of New Jersey, on the charge of using the mails to defraud investors in the stock of the wireless telephone company. The trial was put over until Wednesday, when the first of the witnesses summoned from all parts of the country will be examined.

Rioting Negroes Shot Down.

PRETORIA, South Africa, Nov. 25. —Three natives were killed and 22 wounded yesterday by the police during a riot at the Premier mine.

Of the 22,000 negroes, 5,000 got out of hand and attacked the natives of another compound.

The police were unable to disperse them, and fired two volleys before they could succeed in getting the negroes to return to their habitations.

Pastor Accepts Call.

GUELPH, Nov. 25.—Rev. W. H. Seyfert, Niagara Falls, N.Y., who was recently called to the pastorate of St. Paul's Lutheran congregation, has accepted the call, but is unable to enter upon his work here till Jan. 1. During the interim the congregation will be supplied by Rev. Dr. Snyder, Niagara Falls, N.Y., and Rev. M. J. Bieder, the Canadian field missionary.

MARINE MEN SAY HARBOR IS IN NEED OF IMPROVEMENTS

Testimony Given at Inquest Into the Death of Lake Victims is to the Effect That Town Could be Made a Port of Refuge if Several Alterations Were Made.

GODERICH, Nov. 25.—That improvements for the proper equipment of Goderich harbor should include a modern foghorn suitably placed, a well-manned lifeboat station and adequate lights, and that the basin should be dredged out to a greater area were the facts elicted from Capt. W. O. Whitney of Ashtabula, O., who is here in the interests of the Lake Carriers' Association, in his examination by Crown Attorney Seager at the evening session of the wreck inquiry.

Captain Whitney estimated the property loss in the great storm as amounting to $2,500,000, and the lives lost as 175.

The witness believed that the barbor of Goderich could be made a good harbor of refuge, capable of accommodating any vessel. As to storm signals, he said that these were observed by master to some extent, but they were in the habit of leaving port in the face of the signals and taking chances of dodging the storm. The barometer should have afforded a warning of the storm of the 9th inst., but sometimes, it was said, a captain would hang his hat over the barometer so he could not see it. The witness had no theory as to the causes of the loss of so many vessels, except that the storm was an extraordinarily severe one. The steamer McGean, with which he was acquainted, had a first-class equipment, and her life preservers that had come come ashore were in good condition.

Captain Malcolm C. Cameron of the passenger steamer Huron, and Captain Hartman endorsed the views of the previous witness as to the improvement of Goderich harbor.

Another adjournment was made to Monday, Dec. 1. This is expected to be the final session of the inquest.

Captain Bassett, of Collingwood, managing director of the company owning the ill-fated Wexford and other vessels, recalled, was first examined by Crown Attorney Seager, and was reminded of his statement on Friday regarding Goderich harbor. Witness said that what he meant was that the harbor improvements were being made piecemeal. The Government was taking ten years to do what could and should be done in one year. It simply meant putting more men at work on the job. If the harbor were improved, as it should be, it would be a good harbor, capable of giving shelter to any boat. There was no other harbor on this side of Lake Huron that could be made a harbor of refuge.

Mr. Seager suggested a comparison of Lake Huron and the Georgian Bay in point of safety, but the witness said the Georgian Bay had no terrors for him, as he had sailed it nearly all his life and knew it intimately. A good foghorn at Cove Island was one of the safeguards for boats entering the bay.

EXPORTS GO UP.

New U. S. Tariff Has Effect on Canadian Soil Products.

OTTAWA, Nov. 25.—The Wilson-Underwood tariff bill, so far as the produce of the soil is concerned, is beginning to make its effects very manifest in Canadian exports to the United States. Exports of Canadian products, natural and manufactured, to that country alone have increased for the month of October by nearly two million dollars over the same month last year.

The figures are: Canadian exports to United States in October, 1912, $13,902,501; in October, 1913, $15,883,380. Foreign products passing through Canada to the United States in October, 1912, amounted to $1,974,719; in October, 1913, $1,515,653, thus showing a decrease in this traffic.

Western Rates Case To-day.

OTTAWA, Nov. 25.—The western freight rates case, celebrated for its many adjournments, received one more setback yesterday morning, but this time for only 24 hours, and it will be the last one. When the case was called yesterday it was found that Mr. J. P. Muller, of Washington, rates expert for the Government, was not on hand, and could not reach Ottawa until to-day. The hearing was therefore adjourned until to-day.

CLOSE BARBER SHOPS AT TEN

Question is Discussed But Decision is not Reached

At the monthly meeting of the local branch of the Barbers' Union, held last night, the question as to the closing of the barber shops at ten o'clock on Saturday evenings received considerable discussion. No definite conclusion was arrived at, but it is expected that it will be settled at the next meeting. The election of officers for the ensuing year will also take place at the next meeting.

There are several good points on both sides of the question re the closing of shops at ten on Saturdays. The many clerks and business men who are accustomed to being shaved on Saturday night would find it next to an impossibility to get a barber shop before ten. Several barber shop proprietors claim that the barbers on Saturday evening are held till half past eleven now, and it would be eleven o'clock anyway before they could get out, and a half an hour is not of much account that late at night. The journeymen claim that it is too long a day from 8 a.m. to 11.30 p.m.

Biggest of Telescopes.

Within two years Canada will have a telescope larger than that possessed by any observatory in the world.

The Government has decided to accede to the request of the Chief Astronomer of the Commission, backed up by recommendation of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, the Royal Society, the Astronomer Royal of Great Britain, the Astronomical Society of the United States and other influential scientists and scientific bodies, with the result that contracts have been awarded for a telescope and equipment to cost over $90,000.

The silvered mirror will be six feet in diameter, the glass for which will have to be obtained in France. Being of such a large mass, it will take eight months to anneal or cool off after being moulded.

REPORTS ARE NOT CORRECT

Duchess of Connaught Was Not Stricken Again

Canadian Press Despatch.

OTTAWA, Nov. 25.—It is absolutely incorrect that the Duchess of Connaught attended the investiture on Saturday and Her Royal Highness is very well indeed.

The above is an official denial made from the Government House this morning of the reports sent out from here last night that the Duchess had again been stricken.

ANOTHER PROBE COMING.

Price of Australian Beef Opens U. S. Legislator's Eyes.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25—Another federal investigation into the high cost of living, promising criminal prosecutions, if Attorney-General McReynolds can find an alleged cold storage conspiracy, got under way yesterday and a Congressional investigation of a different phase of the cost of living problem was threatened. While special agents of the Department of Justice are sifting charges that eggs, poultry and dairy products are being piled up in cold storage to maintain high prices and even force them higher, Representative Britten of Illinois is preparing to ask for a Congressional investigation into the prices of meat.

The proposal for a meat investigation was prompted by an announcement that the navy had bought nearly $3,000,000 pounds of Australian fresh beef at a half cent a pound lower than the best prices of American packers, and 120,000 pounds of canned corn beef from the Australian packers at eight cents a pound cheaper than the lowest price in the United States. The price paid was 11.90 cents a pound for the fresh beef and 15.27 cents for the corned beef.

Announcing his intention to ask for a Congressional investigation of the navy's beef contract, Congressman Britten declared he wanted to develop why the public could not benefit by the advantage of buying from Australia if the navy could do so.

TOO MUCH FOR ACTORS.

"Glad Eye" Company Refused to Play For Rowdy Students.

MONTREAL, Nov. 25.—After two years non-observance, the McGill theatre night was resurrected last night, but came to an inglorious end when midway through the second act, the Glad Eye Co. refused to go on with their play and the curtain was rung down. The students went back to Molson's Hall, where the faculty had prepared a supper for them, but here again pandemonium broke loose and after a short scrap between the sophs and freshmen the body broke up into little parties, who continued the celebration in the streets.

Dynamite Sticks on Auto Drive.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Nov. 25.—The police let it be known yesterday that for three weeks automobilists have been flirting with death as they drove along Grant boulevard, the favorable motor track between the fashionable east end district and downtown Pittsburg. During that time they have collected 120 sticks of dynamite apparently scattered systematically along the road. Late Sunday they located another lot in the boulevard and arrested Herman Leidman, alleging he knew something of the robbery of a contractors' magazine from which they declare the dynamite was stolen.

THE LOCK'S BRIDGE

The Otonabee Council has passed a resolution to the effect that the Dominion Government be asked to grant a subsidy to a new bridge across the river at Rye's boathouse. We have not heard what aid the Otonabee Council proposes to give to the project, also North Monaghan, the county and the city. All these questions will be asked at the proper time and may as well be answered now.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN THE WEST

The financial stringency which has prevailed throughout the West is now making itself more keenly felt with the advance of winter. There are very serious forbodings of much privation during the coming months unless something happens in the way of a windfall for the working classes.

Winnipeg, which has always been regarded as the "gateway of the West," is feeling the effect of this stringency perhaps more than any other city in Canada. The Labor Gazette for November gives a rather glooming picture of the prospects of labor in that city. One section of the labor market has special emphasis, the women workers, in which there seems to be a slump at present.

September and October were the dullest months of the year for some branches of women's work in Winnipeg. In spite of the excellent crop and the early harvest, the financial stringency has not abated, and the office staffs have been reduced. This reduction has affected stenographers more than any other class, and many of them are leaving the city. One agency has about one hundred stenographers on file, while another large agency reports a very slight improvement in October over September and looks for better conditions in the near future; but it is said that some stenographers have been obliged to seek work in other lines. A young lady who can write shorthand in three languages and speak a fourth and also do bookkeeping, after looking for work for a month has been obliged to accept a situation calling for two hours a day at $5 per week. The number of stenographers seeking employment throughout the city is estimated at not more than one one hundred and fifty.

The nurses' profession is also overcrowded at present in Winnipeg and St. Boniface. The Nurse's Registry reports that one nurse, who registered three weeks ago, now finds forty ahead of her on the list and that there are about one hundred nurses registered waiting for work.

On the other hand "The Winnipeg Free Employment Bureau" reports a shortage of domestics, restaurant girls and day workers to fill numerous demands. This department of labor seems to be distasteful to Canadian girls, the majority of whom want to become either stenographers or nurses. Efforts are being made to popularize domestic service. The Sunshine Business Girls' Club is an organization of domestic servants which seeks to raise the standard of the work in the homes and to secure recognition of domestics as business girls. It reports considerable progress in this respect. The club has a membership throughout Manitoba of some 350 members, and in addition to the above aims at mutual improvement and sociability. These girls secure employment in the best homes in Winnipeg and are being recognized as a better class of domestic servant.

But the most serious aspect of labor conditions in Winnipeg is revealed in the following report by the Associated Charities:—"Seven hundred and twenty-nine families and 414 homeless men, previously unknown to the society, applied to or were referred for help or advice to the society during the ten months ending April 30, 1913. To these figures must be added 216 families and fifty-seven homeless men, who, known to the society in previous years, remained dependent upon the society's help or as in the case of homeless men returned to seek help a second time. Averaging four persons to a family and making allowance for a few homeless women dealt with, it will be seen that the society was called upon to serve something over thirty-five hundred persons who were citizens of Winnipeg; or, in other words, a fraction over one-sixtieth of the population of the city."

Winnipeg, being situated as it is must feel the brunt of the labor battle of the West; it has more or less of the same trouble every winter, but this winter promises to be more trying than others owing to the unfavorable conditions of the money market.

Peterborough has felt a slight slackening in trade recently but it is hoped that there is sufficient trade to tide us over the cold months without very much difficulty. In the matter of women workers, Peterborough has a scarcity of girls for factory and kindred work, as well as domestics. Our young ladies will have to try and distribute themselves more equally over the various departments of our city life. They cannot all be stenographers or nurses. Domestic service is as useful and as dignified as any other, and is after all the highest service of woman-kind, because it administers to the highest of human institutions—The Home.

THE POPE AND THE TANGO

The Pope is said to have barred the "Tango Dance," which he considers immoral. Several Bishops in Italy have also condemned the "slit skirt." But is the Tango Dance immoral? Is a slit skirt immoral? The immorality is not in the dance, but in the dancer, in the persons who are so void of decency or modesty as to want to dance the Tango or wear the slit skirt. When we stop preaching against appearance and get at the soul of things we may possibly do some real good. Put a healthy mind and a sensitive soul into our young people and they won't want to dance the Tango nor slit their nether garments. Spenser, the poet, was a true preacher when he said;

"For soul is form and doth the body make."

Every young woman gives herself away by her dress; it is an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual delicacy or degradation. Let our Popes and Bishops and preachers save men's souls, the bodies will take care of themselves.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The London correspondent of the Globe says that Larkin is a "big force in British Politics." The correspondent of the Montreal Star, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., says, that "Larkin produces poor impressions." Can we not strike the via media in this matter of telling the truth?

The suffragettes have not yet ceased their incendiary operations. Their hottest conflagration was at Oxford, where they set fire to a lumber yard because Mr. Lloyd George was coming to speak at that city the next day. Such is feminine politics, from which the good fates deliver us!

The question of redistribution has been talked of in a general way, but nothing definite has yet been arrived at, but it is hinted that Toronto will have three new members.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Nov. 24.—Offerings at the Montreal Stock Yards west end market today consisted of 1900 cattle, 750 sheep and lambs, 1400 hogs and 400 calves.

The strength which developed in the market for cattle a week ago was more pronounced today, and prices for good to choice butchers' steers scored a further advance of 40c to 50c, and common stock 25c per 100 pounds. A feature of the trade was the scarcity of good, useful butchers' stock, for which the demand was good, as both packers and butchers were short of supplies, and in consequence the tone was strong at the advance above noted. A few loads of choice steers were offered, for which the competition was keen, and sales of full loads were made at $7.50 to $8, and a few picked lots brought as high as $8.25 per 100 pounds. Good cattle in a jobbing way sold at $7.50 to $7.75. The gathering of buyers was large, and an active trade was done.

The tone of the market for lambs continues very strong, on account of the limited supplies coming forward, and prices have moved a further advance of 25c per 100 pounds. The demand from packers and butchers was good, and an active trade was done, with sales of western stock at $7.75 to $8, and eastern at $7.25 to $7.50 per 100 pounds. Sheep were firm, with a good demand for ewes at $4.75 to $5 per 100 pounds.

An easier feeling prevailed in the market for hogs, and prices were 15c per 100 pounds lower than a week ago.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7.50 to $8.25; do., medium, $6 to $7; do., common, $4.50 to $5.50; canners, $3.65 to $3.75; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $6.00 to $6.75; do., medium, $5.25 to $5.50; do., bulls, $5 to $6.25; milkers, choice, $85 to $90; do., common and medium, each, $75 to $80; springers, $65 to $70.

Sheep, ewes, $4.75 to $5; bucks and culls, $4.25 to $4.50; lambs, $7.25 to $8.

Hogs, f.o.b., $9.25 to $9.50.

Calves, $5 to $15.

THE PIONEERS OF PICTOU.

Alexander Louis Fraser.

Our sires—brave hearts that crossed estranging seas,
And broke the hush of the primeval wood,
Who lit their candles in the solitude,
And met the saffron morn upon their knees—
What though their homes were void of luxuries,
Learning ne'er begged, nor altars smokeless stood,
Nor cheer, nor friendship lacked the joys their rude,
Kind, log-heaped hearths could give—It is to these
I bare my head! They wrought without the aid
Invention brings, ere smoke of industry
Hung o'er these hills and vales; with care they made
This place a garden of the mind; and we,
Cradled in comfort, now bid mem'ry hold
The fragrance of their lives in jars of gold.

Foot Trip Over Rockies.

Mr. Roger Pocock, the well-known explorer and novelist, has just completed an adventurous journey by foot from Calgary across the Rockies to Vancouver, in company with Mr. Randle Cecil.

Mr. Pocock, who took a prominent part in forming the Legion of Frontiersmen, made the journey for geographical purposes, being bent upon discovering whether the swing of the earth's motion causes the oceans to throw stress eastwards against the continents.

On the whole trip only one really serious accident occurred, and that was while in the upper Vermillion country. There was no trail, and Mr. Pocock and his friend traveled down the river bed. The river was high, and the little party got washed away. Both men and their three horses managed to scramble out further down the river, but found themselves in beaver swamps. For two days after they only averaged about two miles per day. The distance from Calgary to Vancouver is over 600 miles, but by the route which Messrs. Pocock and Cecil traveled it is almost twice as far.

Norway's Tree Planters.

Founded in 1900, the Bergero Tree Planting society, Norway, has undertaken a task which will require many years and large expenditures of money and labor to complete, as it proposes to cover the mountain sides and the untillable acres of western Norway with forests, as they were centuries ago. Assisted by wealthy contributors and timely government aid, it has excellent prospects of succeeding. Since the society started, thirteen years ago, 86,606,000 young trees have been produced, covering about 14,000 acres within the borders of the two Bergenhus counties.

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA

FROM THE PLAY OF BAYARD VEILLER

Gilder scrupulously followed the directions of the police inspector. Uneasily he had remained in the library until the allotted time was elapsed. He fidgeted from place to place, his mind heavy with distress under the shadow that threatened to blight the life of his cherished son. Finally, with a sense of relief he put out the lights and went to his chamber.

His thoughts were most with his son and ever as he thought of Dick his fury waxed against the woman who had enmeshed the boy in her plotting for vengeance on himself. And into his thoughts now crept a doubt, one that alarmed his sense of justice. A horrible suspicion that he had misjudged Mary Turner crept into his brain and would not out. He fought it with all the strength of him, and that was much, but ever it abode there.

Mary Was Utterly Wretched.

Mary Turner herself, too, was in a condition utterly wretched, and for the same cause—Dick Gilder. That source of the father's suffering was hers as well. She had won her ambition of years—revenge on the man who had sent her to prison. And now the joy of it was a torture, for the puppet of her plans, the son, had suddenly become the chief thing in her life.

She had taken it for granted that he would leave her after he came to know that her marriage to him was only a device to bring shame on his father. Instead he loved her. That fact seemed the secret of her distress. He loved her. More, he dared believe, and to assert boldly, that she loved him. Had he acted otherwise the matter would have been simple enough. But he loved her—loved her still, though he knew the shame that had clouded her life, knew the motive that had led her to accept him as a husband. More—by a sublime audacity he declared that she loved him.

There came a thrill in her heart each time she thought of that—that she loved him. The idea was monstrous, of course, and yet— Here, as always, she broke off, a hot flush blazing in her cheeks.

Mary Turner was just ready for bed when a note came by a messenger who waited for no answer, as he told the yawning maid. As Mary read the roughly scrawled message, she was caught in the grip of terror. The man who had saved her from death had yielded to temptation. As he had saved her so she must save him. She hurried into the gown she had just put off. Then she went to the telephone book and searched for the number of Gilder's house.

* * * * * * *

Dacey With a Ferret Face.

A few moments before Mary Turner received the note from the hands of the sleepy maid one of the leaves of the octagonal window in the library of Richard Gilder's town house swung open under the persuasive influence of a thin rod of steel, cunningly used, and Joe Garson stepped confidently into the dark room.

For a space he rested motionless, listening intently. Reassured, he drew out an electric torch and set it glowing. A little disk of light touched here and there about the room, traveling very swiftly and in methodical circles. Satisfied by the survey, Garson crossed to the hall door, where he listened for any sound of life without and found none. The door into the passage that led to the storeroom where the detectives waited next engaged his businesslike attention. And here again there was naught to provoke his suspicion.

It seemed to him that everything was in readiness for the coming of his associates. There remained only to give them the signal in the room around the corner where they waited at a telephone. He seated himself in Gilder's chair at the desk and drew the telephone to him.

"Give me 999 Bryant," he said. There was a little wait. Then an answer in a voice he knew came over the wire.

Garson picked up a penholder from the desk and began tapping lightly on the rim of the transmitter. It was a code message in Morse. In the room around the corner the tapping sounded clearly, ticking out the message that the way was free for the thieves' coming.

For a final safeguard Garson searched for and found the telephone bell box and unscrewed the bells, which he placed on the desk. He then took his pistol from his hip pocket and thrust it into the right side pocket of his coat. Once again, now, he produced the electric torch and lighted it as he extinguished the lamp on the table.

He then went to the door into the hall, opened it and, leaving it ajar, made his way in silence to the outer doorway. The doors there were freed of their bolts, and one of them swung wide. So nicely had the affair been timed that hardly was the door open before the three men slipped in and stood mute and motionless in the hall while Garson refastened the doors. Then Garson walked quickly back to the library. Behind him, with steps as noiseless as his own, came the three men.

When all were gathered in the library Garson shut the hall door, touched the button in the wall beside it, and the chandelier threw its radiant light on the group.

Griggs was in evening clothes, seeming a very elegant young gentleman indeed, but his two companions were of grosser type as far as appearances went—one, Dacey, thin and wiry, with a ferret face; the other, Chicago Red, a brawny ruffian, whose stolid features nevertheless exhibited something of half sullen good nature.

"Everything all right so far," Garson said rapidly. He turned to Griggs and pointed toward the heavy hangings that shrouded the octagonal window. "Are those the things we want?" he demanded.

"Yes," was the answer.

"Well, then we've got to get busy." Before he could add a direction he was halted by a soft buzzing from the telephone. For an instant he hesitated while the others regarded him doubtfully.

"We've got to take a chance." Garson went to the desk and put the receiver to his ear.

There came again the faint tapping of some one at the other end of the line, signaling a message in the Morse code. An expression of blank amazement, which grew in a flash to deep concern, showed on Garson's face as he listened tensely.

"Why, this is Mary calling," he muttered.

"Mary!" Griggs cried.

"Yes, she's on," Garson interpreted a moment later as the tapping ceased for a little. He translated in a loud whisper as the irregular ticking noise sounded again.

"I shall be there almost at once. I am sending this message from the drug store around the corner. Have some one open the door for me immediately."

"She's coming over!" Griggs cried incredulously.

"No, I'll stop her," Garson declared firmly.

But when after tapping a few words the forger paused for the reply no sound came.

"She don't answer!" he exclaimed.

"On her way already," Griggs suggested. "I'll let her in." He drew a small torch from the skirt pocket of his coat and crossed to the hall door as Garson nodded assent.

"God! Why did she have to come?" Garson muttered, filled with forebodings. "If anything should go wrong now!"

He turned back toward the door just as it opened, and Mary darted into the room, with Griggs following closely at her heels.

"What do you want here?" he demanded, with peremptory [illegible] in his voice, which was a tone he had never hitherto used in addressing her.

There was only tender pleading in Mary's voice, though her words were an arraignment.

"Joe, you lied to me!"

"That can be settled later!" the man snapped. His jaw was thrust forward obstinately, and his clear eyes sparkled defiantly.

"You are fools, all of you!" Mary cried. "Yes, fools! This is burglary. I can't protect you if you are caught. How can I? Oh, come!" She held out her hands pleadingly toward Garson, and her voice dropped to [illegible]. "Joe, Joe, you must get away from this house at once, all of you! Joe, make them go!"

FIRST ANNUAL BANQUET OF THE EPWORTH LEAGUE

An Enjoyable Evening at the George Street Church Lecture Hall

Over two hundred people attended the first annual banquet of the George Street Church Epworth League, held in the lecture hall last evening.

The affair was a splendid success. The members of the Ladies' Aid Society prepared the repast, and they did their part well. The decorations were in red and white, the colors of the League.

The organization has been making rapid strides along the path of progress and it is hoped that many new members will be added during the winter season. Mr. C. B. Thompson, president of the League, acted as toastmaster as the following toast list was carried out:

Our King—God Save the King.
Canada and the Empire—Mr. T. H. Shields, Mr. M. McCarroll.
The Methodist Church—Mr. H. Coon, Rev. R. G. Peever.
The Sunday School—Miss P. Hardill, Mr. W. Taylor.
The Epworth League—Mr. C. E. McKee, Mr. E. E. Logan.
Our Guests—Mr. A. Morrow, Ald. G. N. Gordon.
The Ladies—Rev. J. G. Lewis, Miss A. L. Beatty.

An instrumental duet by Miss H. Pentland, violin and Mr. E. Oke, cornet, was enjoyed by the gathering.

In making soup, if it has been oversalted the addition of one or two raw potatoes will remedy the difficulty. The potatoes will absorb the extra salt.

EVERY MEMBER CANVAS MEETING AT ST. JOHN'S

A meeting was held at St. John's lecture room last evening in connection with the "every member canvas." The meeting was an interesting one, but so much business remained to be done that it was adjourned till Wednesday evening next at quarter to eight o'clock.

COUNCIL OF WOMEN AND THE MEDICAL INSPECTION IN SCHOOLS

Dr. Struthers of Toronto to Give Lecture Next Week—Some Notes on the Subject

It is the purpose of the Public Health Committee of the Local Council of Women to have Dr. Struthers of Toronto, the Chief Medical Inspector of Schools, of that city to give a public lecture, with slides, upon his work and the subject of Medical School Inspection in general, on Wednesday evening, December 3rd., at 8 o'clock, in the lecture hall of the Collegiate Institute.

The following items taken from various sources will explain the aims of this movement.

The Public Health Journal says: The inspection of food, the inspection of school children, the inspection of departmental stores all appeal strongly to the home-maker. We women are the shoppers of the nation, the mothers and for the most part the teachers of the young children, and we are the administrators of the food department or internal economy of the home, we are, therefore, glad that in all these matters medical inspection is doing its part to make our work more telling in the uplift of the race and gladly do many of us devote our leisure time to the study of these problems and try to assist those whose more scientific knowledge prints out the way to still futher reform.

The Journal of Preventative Medicine and Sociology says: Medical school inspection has rapidly become prominent in the last few years, both in our own Canada and abroad. In Europe it has developed to a far higher plane than in America. In Hungary the position of the school physician is an established one, and his duties are well defined. It is his place to examine and study the school buildings from a sanitary standpoint, as well as their contents and surroundings. He must investigate the purity of the air in each class room and analyze it from time to time as well as the drinking water. The lighting, heating and ventilation, all must pass under his inspection, and the number of children in each room is regulated. All hygienne defects are reported and the laws of the public health carfully carried out. All new pupils are given a thorough physical examination upon entrance to school, in such points as: their fitness for gymnastic exercises, for presence of tuberculosis, for curvature of the spine, and for defects in both sight and hearing. A record of each pupil's progress as to the uniform and healthful development of his body is kept annually.

By all this there are three objects to be gained: the early detection of contagious disease and its prompt exclusion from the school; 2 the discovery of children suffering from non-contagious diseases, yet with physical defects which hinder their proper advancement in their studies; and 3 to notice the growth of children both physically and mentally.

Here are a few words from the Trained Nurse: Without health, no one can do what he wishes suctaught by us, how much better the cessfully, and if the children are foundation for the coming generation.

NOW IS THE TIME TO BUY MATTRESSES

November 27, 28 and 29, we shall display on our floor and in our windows the complete line of the famous "Ideal" Felt Mattresses

And for the first time in Canada we shall show the new patent "NEVERSPRED" Mattress.

The patent on the "Neverspred" is the most ingenious device we have ever seen. We can't explain it in words, you must come in and have it demonstrated.

We shall also show the "HARINFELT" Mattress.

This Mattress combines the good qualities of both hair and felt mattresses. There is an increased ventilating power to these mattresses, because the alternate layers of hair and felt act as a bellows as soon as weight is placed upon it. Not only so, but the "Harinfelt" cannot mat, and so the mattress will never become hard or lumpy.

You will also be interested in the showing of the more moderately priced "ROYAL EGYPTIAN" and "DIXIE" Mattresses.

Moreover, our prices on all these lines are marked down to a figure which is most attractive to you.

Come in and see the display and at the same time note our special showing of "Ideal" brass and steel beds, coil and woven wire springs and babies' cribs.

This is, we believe, the best display of mattresses, beds and bedding that has ever been put before the people of Peterborough.

For the Schoolgirl.

To make a dress wear longer and look neater while it lasts pretty collar and cuff sets in white or pale toned linens prettily trimmed with lace are a wise investment for the small girl, as they are easily laundered. They should be made in various shapes and sizes.

Sandpaper Baby's Shoes.

Always sandpaper the soles of baby's new shoes before they have been worn. This keeps her from slipping on the bare or polished floors and prevents many a bad fall, which could easily result in a sprain or broken bone.

FARMERS SENDING IN APPLICATIONS

Have Found That the Early Bird Gets the Worm

At last, the farmers are becoming alive to the great assistance that can be derived from placing their name with the Immigration Agent in the fall, for their spring farm help. Already the local immigration agent has received a large number of demands for help next season. This not only is a great assistance to the agent, but it gives the farmer a better chance to get his man when he is in need of one.

The temporary ebbing of the tide of immigration which began in August is increasing, by the figures of the immigration dept. in Canada for the month of October.

It was moved by Mr. Cochrane, seconded by Mr. Stabler, that the above accounts be paid, and that the Protestant Home account of $152 be laid over.

No action was taken in regard to the sending of Wm. Bradley to the Home.

It was also decided by the Board to give Mrs. Valois the sum of $4 per week during the winter. Mrs. McGiven will receive the same amount.

A MYSTERIOUS REPUBLIC.

Strange Commonwealth Within the Dominions of the Czar.

Russian authorities are puzzled to decide what should be done with the Imansk republic, a mysterious commonwealth whose deeds and terrors have astonished Russia during the last six months.

For 20 years this Imansk republic has existed in the Czar's dominions, with its own constitution, laws, punishments, printing press and police, yet its discovery is only recent.

Last year, Kasimir Veliki, a traveler in Siberia, stumbled accidentally on this village of 1,000 houses and many farms and was made prisoner. The town lies 300 miles from Vladivostock and is not marked on the map. He learned that the community claimed to be independent of both the Czar and of the Government of Pekin. Over a dirty inn floated a flag which resembled the Russian tri-color, but was embroidered with a bad copy of the Chinese dragon. By a stroke of luck and after surprising adventures Veliki escaped before he could find out more about this unknown republic.

At Vladivostock, Veliki's story was at first not believed. Afterwards a commission of inquiry was sent out, under an escort of 500 Cossacks with three mountain guns. The commission occupied the town by surprise and returned to Vladivostock with a complete report. It discovered that the republic had been started first as a holy retreat for ascetics and that it afterwards fell into the hands of Russian and Chinese convicts and prospered amazingly.

The founder was the millionaire ascetic, Innokenti Sibirakoff, who inherited a fortune of $25,000,000, fell under the influences of mystical persons and finally gave up his property and wandered about Siberia and Russia as a beggar.

When traveling in East Asia he was struck by the secluded position of the Inman valley. He gave $5,000 to three holy men to build log houses and a log church. The good men and 20 other persons prayed there for three years. In the fourth year there descended upon them a band of Yakatsk convicts, who murdered the whole 23 persons. These invaders started the Imansk republic, which was first a mere robbers' den, and for two years kept pirate boats on the Ussuri river.

The republic developed. More bandits and convicts came, drank, fought and murdered. Next came the Chinese, with their wives. The bandits murdered the Chinese and stole their wives.

The settlement grew, made its own constitution and laws and in the village and country around counted nearly 5,000 adherents at the time it was discovered by Veliki.

The Russian commission, carefully guarded by the 500 Cossacks, set itself to examine the laws and economic state of the republic. They had opportunities to see the law at work. When they entered the village a man was being hung up by the heels for stealing a horse, and not far off a naked Chinese, who had been beaten to death, lay in the snow. Around his body danced Imansk women, singing menacing songs. The punished Chinese, it appeared, had broken the local fishing law.

The Imansk republic proved to have a whole code of laws, which cannot be traced to any Russian or other origin.

GRAND BENEFIT CONCERT AT ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

Two Hundred Dollars for the Lakes Disaster Fund — A Choice Programme by Local Artists

The substantial sum of two hundred dollars was collected last evening at the benefit concert held at St. Paul's Church and this amount has been handed over to Mayor Bradburn to swell the Great Lakes' Disaster Fund. To Mr. John Allan is due the credit for the suggestion, for the organization and the conducting of this benefit concert, and while some may have felt a little disappointed at not getting a larger collection, there is reason for gratitude and satisfaction that the efforts of Mr. Allan and his band of artists have been the means of raising Peterborough's contribution to this noble object by two-hundred dollars. The city's thanks are due to them for giving their valuable services free.

The program was a choice one, and appropriate to the occasion. "The Sailor's Grave" was sung with feeling by Mr. Maurice Park, who also sung in a duet with Miss Dorothy Allan. Mr. Park has a mellow tenor voice. Mr. Huycke was at his best in "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," he fetched the low notes with ease. Mr. Huycke's voice is specially suited to minor baritone songs, it has a rich ring about it. Miss Allan is always good. She sang the "Erl King" by Schubert; "Down the Vale" in duet with Mr. Huycke. Miss Ada C. Richardson sang "My Paradise," by Mascheroni, a very pretty poem set to beautiful music. Miss Richardson has excellent enunciation and a clear, sweet voice, she is a poetess in singing.

Mr. William Wilson, who is a pupil of Jan Hambourg, of Toronto, rendered two violin solos, "Andante Cantibile" and "Chanson Polonaise;" he is a young and promising student.

Mr. John Allan accompanied the artists on the piano, and also contributed three organ solos—"The Storm," by Lovebure Wely, was a masterly piece of work and lent wings to the imagination of the audience, and doubtless helped them to realize the awful experiences of the men who went down in the great storm on the lakes.

Mayor Bradburn was unable to be present, and Alderman Gillespie presided in his place.

The concert was well attended and was thoroughly enjoyed by all present.

Rev. Mr. Pogue announced the amount of the collection at the end of the program, and said he wished he was able to announce that it was two thousand instead of two hundred.

Ald. Gillespie tendered a hearty vote of thanks to Miss Richardson, Miss Allan, to Mr. Huycke, Mr. Maurice Park, and to Mr. Wilson who had hurried from Toronto to take part in the program. Also to Mr. John Allan for his contributions and for the trouble he had gone to in arranging the concert.

Ald. Gillespie also spoke of the support given by the press and thanked the Review, the Examiner and the Times for the free advertisements. Special thanks were due to the managers of St. Paul's church for the use of the building and the organ, and to the Fuel and Cartage Co. for lending their men for necessary arrangements in the church.

ENTERTAINMENT AT THE HOME

The members of the St. John's Girls' Auxiliary with their President, Mrs. W. F. Conway, visited the Protestant Home and gave an evening's entertainment to the inmates, which was much enjoyed by all who listened, as well as by those who gave the various numbers.

Europe Has 100,000 Doctors.

Of all the nations of Europe the British appear to care more for health. In all there are about 100,000 doctors in Europe.

Of these England has both the largest absolute number and also the largest proportion relatively to the population—namely, 28,900 altogether and 7.8 per 10,000 inhabitants. Bulgaria has the smallest number of medical practitioners—only 0.47 per 10,000 inhabitants. In Germany the total number of practitioners is 22,500, or 5.6 per 10,000 inhabitants; in France the total number is 19,800, giving 5.1 per 10,000 inhabitants; and in Italy the total number is 18,270, giving 5.6 per 10,000 inhabitants.—Ireland's Own.

Potter Wasps at Work.

The family eumenidae, or solitary wasps, contain some curious workers. Some are miners and dig tiny tunnels in the earth; some are carpenters and cut channels in wood and then divide the space into chambers by partitions of mud; some build oval or globelike mud nests on branches or twigs. This home may be partitioned into several tiny rooms, into which are put various small insects captured by the mother wasp and upon which the young wasps feed.

HIS PROPHETIC DREAM.

Curious Story of a Warning That Came From Slumberland.

The following prophetic dream was related by the president of a theological seminary:

It had been the custom of one of the professors to invite all the students, with members of the faculty, to dinner at a hotel on the annual Thanksgiving day. On the morning of that day the wife of this professor suddenly fell dead in her dressing room at 8 o'clock.

That morning at 7 o'clock one of the students woke up from a bad dream. He had dreamed that he sat down with the usual company at the Thanksgiving dinner and that immediately one of his fellow students rose in his place, saying that it was his painful duty to announce to the company that the wife of their host had suddenly died at 8 o'clock that morning.

This dream, however, he had instantly banished from his mind as an uncanny probability and had thought no more about it. But on going to the dinner and taking his seat with the company he was unspeakably amazed to see the student seen in the dream rise and to hear him make the announcement made in the dream.—Exchange.

Both Were Riding to Lose.

A story of "pulling." A dying jockey commending his son to the gods that govern racing added as a parting monition: "Never talk, my boy. I talked once too often. I was riding a match with J., and we were neck and neck. 'You needn't ride so hard,' I said; 'I'm not going to win.' 'Oh, aren't you?' he said, whereupon he fell off his horse, and I had to win."—London Nation.

THE DOG'S MISTAKE

Animal Mistook His Owner's Hand for Rabbit

A high school teacher of East Liverpool, Ohio, had his hand badly lacerated by his dog, who mistook the member for a rabbit while the pair were out hunting. It appears that the man shot at bunnie, who disappeared into a hollow log. The teacher reached after the game and had his hand seized by the dog, who had entered the log from the opposite end.

THE IMAGE IN THE MIRROR

A Story For Allhallow Eve

By ADELAIDE BURNHAM

Edward Dix was a sportsman from the crown of his head to the tip of his great toe. One October evening, when he had been hunting in the woods all day, he came to a little lake nestling among the hills, its surface covered with fallen leaves of every color from the lightest yellow hue to the deepest crimson. And looking down a valley he saw a landscape that filled him with delight.

"What a place for a summer cottage!" he exclaimed. "Some day I'm going to build one here."

And he did. Now, I'm going to tell you how he came to carry out what was but a thought.

Looking to his right, he saw the deep red of a brick chimney against brown limbs of trees. He knew that where there was a chimney there must be a house and started to go and make an investigation. He came upon a very pretty cottage, with a broad piazza around it, a Queen Anne roof and dainty windows.

"And I'm jinged if I don't build a match to that," he added to his first assertion.

There was not a living thing in or near the cottage, and it was evident that it was intended only for summer use. Mr. Dix went up on the piazza and looked into the living room through a window. The apartment contained cottage furniture, but the chief attraction was a large fireplace.

"I've a good mind to sleep there tonight," he said to himself and tried the window to see if it were securely locked. It was, but Mr. Dix hunted for a place of ingress as energetically as he had hunted for game and found one by getting on the piazza roof—a window not well secured. Going downstairs, he opened a door from the inside, admitting him to the wood house, and in a few minutes had a fire blazing on the hearth. Then he settled himself down in an easy chair before it, and, looking at his reflection in a mirror on the mantel opposite him, he remarked:

"Your comfort is only equaled by your assurance."

And straightway he fell asleep.

Now, it happened that this was Halloween, and a party of girls were coming to spend it at this very cottage. Flora Stebbins, a daughter of the owner, was the hostess, and the others were her guests. Mr. Dix went to sleep about dark, which comes early at the last of October, and the young ladies arrived about 8 o'clock.

"My goodness gracious!" exclaimed Miss Stebbins. "There's some kind of a light inside. It looks as if there were a fire on the hearth. Wait a minute till I reconnoiter." She went to a window and saw the slumbering Mr. Dix sitting before a fire that was still blazing merrily. She beckoned to the others. They came and saw the same sight.

"Girls," said Flora, "there is the best chance to celebrate Allhallow eve I ever heard of. Let one of us go in stealthily, make just enough sound to waken him so that he'll see her reflection in the mirror on the mantel and get away before he can catch her."

The idea was eagerly caught upon, and Flora was urged to play the part. The others returned to the vehicle that had brought them and waited for the play to be over and her to join them in a retreat.

Mr. Dix was awakened by the falling of some article behind him and, opening his eyes, saw a girl's face reflected in a mirror before him. But only for an instant. If he had been wide awake he would doubtless have arisen from his chair immediately and made an investigation. As it was, he delayed just long enough to allow the conspirators to make good their escape. He did not even hear the sound of wheels, for the carriage had gone far enough to prevent that, Flora getting into it near the gate.

When Mr. Dix got fairly around he did what he would have been expected to do. He went to the hall and out through the front door. He encountered nothing, and all he heard was a distant sound of laughter, but so distant that he was not sure whether it was or was not laughter. He was very much puzzled.

Mr. Dix had a job of hunting on his hands far different from following up game. He was a methodical chap and began by learning to whom the cottage belonged. Then he went to the winter residence of its owner ostensibly to peddle books. He could not be driven away until he had caught sight of Flora Stebbins, whom he at once recognized as the reality of the image he had seen in the mirror on Allhallow eve. She recognized him, but pretended ignorance of him.

"You are my fate," he said. "I saw your face in a mirror on what I have since learned was Allhallow eve. It will be useless for you to attempt to escape the husband that"—

"Nonsense!" she exclaimed, blushing very red. "It was you who saw my face in the glass, not I who saw yours. Allhallow eve does not count for men."

But it did count, for then and there, or rather on Allhallow eve, commenced a courtship which ended, if it ended at all, with marriage. And when it became evident that the Dix family needed a summer cottage of their own Edward Dix built an exact replica of the one owned by his father in law. But one article of furniture that was in the latter has been removed to the former—the looking glass in which Mr Dix's fate was revealed to him.

THE "NEWSY'S" FRIEND

MRS. WARBURTON HAS TAUGHT BAD BOYS FOR 20 YEARS.

Toronto Woman Who Is Giving Up Her Work to Take a Rest In England Has Had a Long Experience In the Reclaiming of Street Lads —She Made Her Start In Woodbridge, Ontario.

On one of the down-town Toronto streets the other day a little boot black jumped up from the dirt where he was "polishing," lifted his hat with the best of good comradeship to the merry-faced woman passing, then dropped back to his knee again with pleased, happy face. This is one of the tributes to Mrs. Warburton offered by her "boys." A greater one is the fact that last year when she went away for a holiday to England—throat given out—her old pupils did not forget.

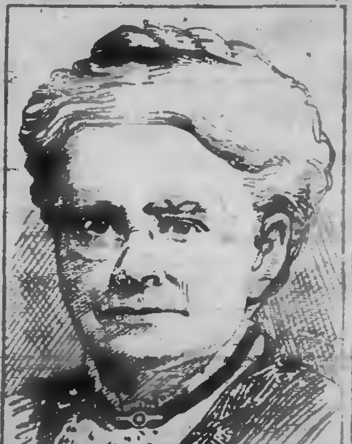
They wrote her continuously and constantly. In one week fifty-four letters reached her from her pupils and ex-pupils in Toronto.

It is twenty years now since Mrs Warburton began her task of making over graceless young scamps of newsboys and other boys into men.

She has succeeded where most women would have failed. Her boys are real men who can on occasion thrash an enemy, if the cause of righteousness demands it, yet who have, through her teaching, honesty and respect for women ingrained into their souls.

They will miss her sadly. Hundreds of other friends will regret the departure of both Mr. and Mrs. Warburton, who are henceforth to live in England.

"It's a case of have to for health's sake," says the cheery lady. "But I'll call it visiting in England and really living in Canada."



MRS. WARBURTON.

Mrs. Warburton has had varied experiences as a teacher. Her first pupils were in an ungraded class in Woodbridge. The undaunted girl, then very young, had not enough pocket money to pay her fare from Weston to make her application. But she walked—walked through the rain one dark morning and secured the place before the other candidates.

From Woodbridge Mrs. Warburton went to the Weston High School, and after several terms there she spent a year as teacher of mathematics in the Ottawa Ladies' College.

It was just after the year in Ottawa that Mr. George Warburton, a school friend, came from England, and Miss Lalor became his wife.

But the heart of the born teacher yearned for the schoolroom, and it was not many months before she was again in the thick of the fight. The scene of the war between the energetic lady and ignorance lay this time in Niagara street school, Toronto. There followed some time in the Boys' Home on George street in the same city.

Mrs. Warburton, as may have been guessed by this time, has a special predilection for boys.

She next took a position as teacher in the Victoria Industrial School at Mimico. For six years she taught in that institution.

Then, as now, there were naturally many touch lads in the place.

But, winning her way with womanly tact, with unlimited common sense, and with genuine love for the uncouth and vicious boys, she wrought marvels among them, as those who know of her work will testify.

From Mimico, Mrs. Warburton entered upon her duties as teacher of the newsboys. It would take a long story could one tell all the experiences of these later years, of the lessons of truth, courage and honesty the boys have learned; of the many who have made good.

A gathering of teachers and friends took place in the new Hester How school last year, when Mrs. Warburton's portrait was unveiled. The speakers of the evening were three Jewish lads, ex-pupils, whose bright intelligent faces glowed with affection as they told of what their friend had done for them. One young man who was in the class some years ago is now an honored and trusted employe in an influential firm in the city. Another has looked after a widowed mother, and his younger brothers and sisters, and has saved money for them all by his work. Several are in business for themselves. Many hundreds of the newsboys have come under her influence during these years. Last year the splendid trio of women who have done so much for the "Ward" school, Miss How, Miss Sims, and Mrs. Warburton laid down their sceptres at one and the same time.

The two former may take them up again in a lesser way in Toronto, but Mrs. Warburton will find her work among English children.

THE CHIEFTAIN'S RETORT.

How Sir John A. Squelched the Budding Young Orator

Belleville, as most Canadians are aware, claims Sir Gilbert Parker and Sir Mackenzie Bowell as distinguished "old boys," and is consumedly Conservative in its political traditions. It is related that long ago, in the days when political strife was much more strenuous than it is now, when public men called each other names which neither Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden nor Sir Wilfrid Laurier would condescend to consider, Sir John A. Macdonald went to Belleville to address a public meeting, at which the opposing party wished to prefer charges against the leader of the Conservatives. Sir John arrived in the afternoon, enjoyed several hours with the "faithful," and appeared on the platform in the evening, alert and smiling, to listen to the tale of Tory iniquities.

The first speaker was a decidedly youthful orator, who dwelt at length, in spite of many interruptions, on the utter unworthiness of the Conservative party and the absolute rascality of Sir John himself, who nodded genially at his accuser as the list of crimes and casualties went on.

When Sir John arose to reply there was the usual storm of applause which usually greeted his appearance. For a moment or two he surveyed in silence, from head to foot, his youthful accuser, who seemed to grow younger and smaller beneath Sir John's benign but penetrating gaze. Then the Chieftain turned to the audience and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, as I listened to the remarks of our dear young friend I was reminded of the immortal lines:

"Twinkle, twinkle, little star,
How I wonder who you are?'"

Death In the Gold Rush.

Men, gaunt for want of food and hollow-eyed from lack of sleep, staggering over mountain passes and wading perilous mountain streams in quest of gold; men starving to death beside the trails, others drowned in rivers or swallowed up in crevasses, the survivors in many cases arriving at their destination only to find all available claims staked; such was the story brought back to Ottawa by Dr. D. D. Cairnes, of the Geological Survey, of the rush to the new Alaskan goldfield at Chisana.

Described by Dr. Cairnes as the greatest gold rush since the historic one to the Klondike, although there is no guarantee that the camp will prove anything like the find the Klondike did, its scenes parallel those which attended the former discovery. Numbers of lives have already been sacrificed, the want of provisions accounting for the greater number of these, and even now the greater part of the inhabitants of the camp are living on ptarmigans, birds which they knock over with sticks or stones, and which are fortunately plentiful.

The field is situated on the Chisana river, 159 miles southwest of Dawson, and only thirty miles from the Canadian border.

One dessertspoonful of castor oil poured about the roots of dying plants will revive them.

HER LITTLE SON WAS DYING

CAMPBELLVILLE, ONT., May 5th, 1913.
"Our little boy, Lawrence, was sorely affected with Chronic Indigestion, and the doctor did not think he would recover. He started with a sore mouth and it developed into this other trouble. Everything he ate just passed right through the system without change. He cried incessantly and life was a misery to him. My husband had been using "Fruit-a-tives" for Indigestion, getting much benefit from them, and I thought what did him good, might help our boy. The Tale The Wagons Tell

My office window faces a street, close to the railway freight sheds.

All day long a steady stream of trucks and lorries lumber by—loaded with boxes, barrels and bales.

One truck I noticed the other afternoon was particularly interesting. No two boxes were the same, and stencilled on the end of each was the name of some well-known product—soap, tobacco, socks, breakfast food, cocoa, port, tea, chocolates, perfumery and baking powder.

Gathered there in prosaic wooden boxes were the results of thousands of hand's labor in all parts of the world.

The cocoa had been grown in Brazil, shipped to Bristol, transhipped to Montreal and finally distributed from Toronto.

The tea was gathered by swart-skinned natives of the romantic island of Ceylon; from sunny Portugal the luscious, big grapes had been gathered years ago, fermented, bottled and branded with a famous name; from Egypt had come the cotton and from South America the dyes that entered into the product finally stamped with the brand of a well-known hosiery.

There, behind that obviously prosaic truck-load of freight was the whole romance of modern commerce—the skilled production, the universal demand for food, drink and raiment, and the world-wide distribution of the things we use every day.

And then I speculated why we use these things every day, instead of some other things; and that brought me plump back to my own job of advertising.

The names of some of the boxes on the lorrie were known everywhere to-day, but had been unknown a few years ago; and I saw then more clearly than ever before that Advertising is really a great channel digger. It is like the Panama Canal. You can sail from Montreal to Vancouver now, around the Horn. You can get there, but it is going to take months. A year or so from now you will sail through the Panama Canal and chop the journey to less than half. A new channel will have been dug.

The great names in commerce to-day are those of the manufacturers who have let modern advertising steam-shovel a channel across the isthmus of distributing difficulties.

The great names in the commerce of to-morrow will be those of men who widen and dredge this channel so that the greater traffic may pass smoothly and quickly from the source of production to the homes of the consumer.

FEATURE BOUT OF BOXING PROGRAM ENDED IN THE SIXTH WITH SIMMONS COUNTED OUT

Detroit Lad and the Fighting Greek Put up a Merry Argument

The boxing bouts held last night in Brock street rink proved a big success and some four hundred fans assembled to see the encounters. All the bouts were keenly fought with Mr. G. N. Graham as referee, and it is needless to say that the bouts were handled in the best possible way. He received a great ovation when he made his appearance.

The feature bout of the evening's bill was the "go" between Tommy Pappas, the fighting Greek and Artie Simmons, a Detroit boy. Both men were in pretty fair shape and the support of the fans was about evenly divided. Pappas was a trifle the heavier but is of the Battling Nelson type and takes a lot of punishment. His footwork and dodging was also very prominent. The Detroit lad who has had a wide experience, puts up a grand battle. He is very aggressive and carries a healthy right wallop that would call for a knock-out if it landed right. His following up pleased the crowd and whenever he was "rapped" he came right back for more.

THE FIGHT. FIRST ROUND

Contrary to the expectations of the crowd they didn't "mix-it" from the first gong. Some preliminary sparring and neat dodging was worked in but just before the bell the Greek put in two successive right swings, and before Simmons could come back the gong sounded.

SECOND ROUND

Simmons was on the agressive right on the start and he forced the Greek against the ropes. Simmons made three or four wild swings at him with his right but the Greek's dodging and footwork saved him.

THIRD ROUND

Pappas started to lead the battle and did so for the first half of the round. The Detroit lad appeared to be unable to withstand as much punishment as the Greek. A powerful right to Simmons' jaw dazed him and he fought back blindly, crowding his opponent to the ropes. The gong rang with Pappas against the rope.

FOURTH ROUND

Simmons kept up his crowding tactics and as soon as he had Pappas to the ropes he worked in a few short jabs to the side. The Greek appeared to be in good condition for the heavy ones to the side had little effect. Some heavy right and left swings were exchanged, in which Simmons displayed a strong defence.

FIFTH ROUND

Just after the gong Pappas worked in a heavy swing to Simmons' jaw and the Detroit lad staggered. To the crowd's delight he held the Greek off till he regained himself and then he once more crowded the Greek to the ropes. They exchanged several side swings, but none was effective. The Greek appeared to be in better condition after the five rounds than Simmons, but the Detroit lad had done most of the "following."

SIXTH ROUND

From the very onset the Greek rushed things. He pushed Simmons to a croner and handed him two severe upper cuts. They clinched and Pappas stepped back. Simmons followed but had no defence and the fighting Greek reached him to the left jaw with a heavy right swing and Simmons went out for the count.

It was a good fight and many were sorry to see Simmons lose it. His aggressiveness and pretty dodging had won the crowd. On the other hand the Greek had many local supporters who were pleased to see him carry home the bacon.

In addition to the main bout three other frays completed the bill. Two local lads Legros and Watson went three minute rounds and their frolics amused the crowd. Legros got the decision on points.

BRADLEY VS. WILLIAMS

Knock-out Bradley and Jack Williams fought five fairly fast rounds although they clinched a lot. Both took a lot of punishment and in the first for rounds Williams had been knocked down four or five times. He came back for more and stood it till the fifth, when a swing by Bradley's right dazed him. Referee Graham then stopped the bout and awarded the decision to Bradley.

WESTERBY VS. RYAN

The participants in the four round battle, Westerby of Toronto and Ryan of Rochester, came to an agreement that no decision should be given if both were on their feet at the final gong. Both were working for a knock-out and sometimes had a tendency to rough it. Westerby had the better side of the argument but as he didn't knock Ryan out no decision was given.

The bout between Pierce and Jackson did not materialize.

SIMMONS WANTS ANOTHER CHANCE

Would Meet the Fighting Greek in Two Weeks

George Ayres, manager of the boxing bouts at the rink last night, says that another program may be put on within the next two weeks, when Simmons and Pappas could meet again.

Simmons is after another chance. The Detroit boy claims he was not in the best of condition, and that he would make it more interesting the Greek in another meeting.

Simmons injured his left hand in the fourth round. He would meet Pappas for a purse, but insists that his opponent make the weight.

A Baker's Dozen.

Mr. Mark Bredin, general manager of the Canada Bread Co., Toronto, and the newly-elected president of the International Bakers' Association, at its convention the other day, has one of those fine old-fashioned families that one sometimes reads about but seldom sees.

Some time ago the truant officer of the Public School Board called at the home of a neighbor to enquire as to the number of children of school age living in the house. On being told that there were none, he asked as to the house to the east. There were none there.

"How about the house to the west?" There were none there.

"What about the next?" None there either.

"There are not many children on this street," said the officer.

"Oh, yes, there are," was the reply, "there are lots of children on the street, but the trouble is they are nearly all in one house. Mr. Bredin in that house down the street has twelve."

"I see," commented the officer, "he has what you call a baker's dozen."

A Doubtful Transaction.

"I don't know whether my older boy is treating me right or not," said Mr. Biggins, rather gloomily. "I told him that if he wouldn't smoke until he was twenty-one years old I would give him a thousand dollars."

"Did he keep his part of the agreement?"

"Yes, but he took the thousand dollars and bought an interest in a cigar store."—Washington Star.

NEW PICTURES BOUGHT.

Canadian National Gallery Has Secured Notable Art Works.

The trustees of the National Gallery have recently purchased three important and interesting pictures. The first is a full length portrait of King Charles I., aged twenty-four when Prince of Wales, by Daniel Mytens. This picture which was in Ottawa on approval some months ago has now been purchased and will shortly be hung. It is a very fine presentment of the royal sitter, showing plainly the conflicting nobility and weakness of his character. As a picture it is rich in color and has a method of handling upon which experts have pronounced it to be one of the best examples of Daniel Mytens in existence, and one of the few which are undoubtedly entirely his own work and not partly that of his pupils. Daniel Mytens was court painter to James I., and after his death to Charles I., until the advent of Van Dyck when he returned to Holland. To the student the picture is greatly interesting as showing the kind of court painting which Van Dyck found in England upon his arrival and from which he drew not a little of his inspiration and method.

"In Suffolk," by Arnesby Brown A.R.A., was undoubtedly the finest landscape in the present year's Royal Academy Exhibition in London, and was unanimously praised as the greatest work the artist has yet produced. It is a large square picture of cattle in a landscape of rolling hill and vale—the landscape of Constable and Crome—bathed in summer sunshine of wonderful iridescent beauty. Arnesby Brown is represented in nearly all the most important public galleries in Great Britain and the overseas dominions, and Canada is to be congratulated upon obtaining such a notable example of his work. The picture is now on exhibition at Manchester, England, and will probably arrive in Ottawa about Christmas.

The third is "St. Thomas Harbor, West Indies," by Franklin Brownell R.C.A., who is so well known to Canadians as one of the most brilliant artists in the country. The picture is one of the fruits of the painter's recent visit to the West Indies, and is an exquisitely beautiful rendering of the eternal summer of the Carribbean Sea. More recently Mr. Brownell has visited Bonaventure Island at the mouth of the St. Lawrence and some notable results of his work there are likely to be seen at his coming show in Ottawa.

Molten zinc instead of cement was used to bind together the stones in a bridge recently built in France.

Sewing machines valued at $10,000,000 were exported from this country in 1912, more than $1,000,000 worth going to Europe.

Transporting a Fortune

By MILLARD MALTBIE

How I found the celebrated Imperator diamond does not pertain especially to this story, but where I found it is important, for my effort to get it away from the region where it had lain ever since a lump of pure carbon was crystallized and became a gem as big as a walnut is what I am going to tell you about. When I was a youngster I ran away from home and a few weeks later found myself in the province of Minas Geraes, in Brazil, where the diamond mines are. I worked in the mines for five years and couldn't very well do that without learning something about diamonds.

One Sunday I was out on a tramp and, stopping to rest, noticed near me a stone that it struck me looked like a diamond in the rough. I took it up to examine it and found it exactly like the uncut stones I had dug up for the diamond company, only I had never seen one half the size. I was a good deal upset, for if the thing was a diamond I was rich.

But, as I have said, it was the getting away with it that I'm going to tell about. It was a diamond, sure enough, and one of the big ones of the world. While I was looking at it Jim Stivers came up, and I was fool enough to let him see it. He knew right off that it was worth the biggest part of a million dollars, and a stone like that is a great temptation for any one. He congratulated me on my find and began at once to plot to get it from me.

Jim had more sense than I in this. He didn't tell any one about my having it except three men whom he used to get it away from me. He knew I would go to Rio with it, and his plan was to have me waylaid and the stone captured.

Of course I didn't know just what he would do, but I did know that once I got out of the region of law and order—in other words, off by myself—somebody would try for my property. I concluded to endeavor to fool whoever suspected I had it with me by playing a part. The plan I adopted was this: I found a countryman who was going down with a load of wood and told him I would go with him. He said he was agreeable, and I slept the night before we started near his wagon, which was already loaded. During the night I took one of the logs—one that I would recognize easily—and, boring a big hole in it under a piece of loose bark, put my diamond in it. Then, plugging up the hole, I let down the bark, first putting a little glue between it and the wood to hold it in place. Then I threw the log back on to the load.

We started early in the morning, and I, not wishing to be identified with the woodman, at times kept in his rear and at times in advance of him. Although I hadn't told any one I was going on the trip, I found the road picketed. I passed a man who looked at me searchingly, and it wasn't long before, hearing footsteps behind me, I turned and saw him coming with two others. They caught up with me, and one of them, who knew me by sight, said, "That's the man," and, addressing me, added:

"Young feller, the diamond company has missed a valuable uncut stone and, having been informed that it is in your possession, has sent us to demand it of you. Please hand it out."

"I haven't any diamond," I replied. "I'm as poor as poverty and don't know where I shall get a bite to eat."

They didn't waste any words, but two of them held me while the third went through my pockets, my hair, my beard—indeed, every part of me. Then he took off my clothes, leaving me stark naked, and examined every seam, every inch of cloth, even holding them up and looking through them to the light.

"I reckon he has either sent it on ahead or left it behind to come later," said the man who had done the searching. All would have gone well had not the woodcutter's wagon come lumbering down the road and he had to ask me in a familiar way what my appearing in my birthday clothes meant. The men pricked up their ears at this and asked him if he knew me, and he told them that we were fellow travelers.

He got a thorough searching for his pains, the men thinking that he was carrying the gem for me. Then they examined the horses, the harness, the wagon, looking even into the hubs of the wheels. One of them suggested that what they were looking for might lie between the logs of wood, and they threw every log off on to the road, carefully watching for the diamond between them.

But it was of no use. The stone was not to be found.

They didn't like to give it up; but, believing that I had conveyed the treasure by some other method, they finally concluded to do so. They had instructions from Stivers not to hurt me. If they could get the diamond they were to do so, but they were not to commit murder or make a case against those implicated in the attempted robbery. So I was allowed to proceed.

When we reached Rio I took the log in which I had hidden the diamond off the load, paid the woodman for it and, putting it on my shoulder, went away with it.

I sailed for Amsterdam, that I might get my stone cut, and when it was in proper condition sold it for $650,000 to a Hanoverian prince.

SYMBOLS IN ARITHMETIC.

Origin of the Plus, Minus, Multiplication and Division Signs.

When you make the sign of + in a problem of addition, perhaps you do not know that you are really using the first letter of the word "plus" in a somewhat altered form. At first the capital letter P was used, but as it was made more and more quickly and carelessly the top part of the letter became merely a horizontal line drawn across the edge of the vertical.

The sign used in subtraction has even a stranger history. The word minus was first shortened into "mus," with a horizontal line above to indicate the contraction; after awhile only the letter m, with the line above it, was used and finally the letter was dropped, and now we have only the hastily made horizontal line.

As multiplication is but a short form of addition, the plus sign was turned sidewise into a character resembling the letter X.

Division was formerly indicated by placing the dividend above a horizontal line and the divisor below. In order to save space in printing the dividend was placed to the left and the divisor to the right, with a simple dot in place of each.—Youth's Companion.

"Either" and "Neither."

There are two or three things about these two words that one should remember. In the first place, they should never be used in connection with more than two things—as: "It was either Tuesday or Wednesday," not "either Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday;" "it was neither Tuesday nor Wednesday," not "neither Tuesday, Wednesday nor Thursday." Then, either should not be used in the sense of each, as "they walked on, one on either side of the road." It should be one on "each" side of the road. The third caution is about the pronunciation. Some persons insist that they should be pronounced "i-ther" and "ni-ther," with the "i" long. But this is more an affectation perhaps than anything else. The best authorities agree that the right pronunciation is "e-ther" and "ne-ther."—New York World.

Sly Old Commodore.

"When Commodore Vanderbilt was alive," says a New York Central official, "the board of directors of the New York Central used to find their work all cut out for them when they met. All they had to do was to ratify his plans and adjourn. Yet they had their uses. Occasionally a man would come to him with some scheme which he did not care to refuse outright.

"'My directors are a difficult body of men to handle,' he would say. 'I'll submit it to 'em, but I warn you that they are hard to manage.'

"The matter would be submitted to the board when it assembled and promptly rejected.

"'There,' the commodore would say when his visitor came to learn the result. 'I did the best I could, but I told you in advance that my directors were an obstinate lot.'"

Germans Study Prison Farm.

The inauguration of the prison farm movement in Germany involves the sending of four commissioners under the special authority of Emperor William to study Ontario methods. In consequence four officials arrived in Toronto recently en route for Guelph, where they were instructed in all the important features by Hon. W. J. Hanna in person.

Privy Councillors Plaschke and Schlosser and Directors Hickmann and Rempiss are the delegates, and they were conducted to the farm by Warden Gilmour.

These gentlemen were in attendance at the American Prison Association conference in Indianapolis a few weeks ago, and were much impressed with Mr. Hanna's exposition of the Ontario system.

Chief Justice's "Hantecedents."

Lord Alverstone's gift of song has sent the tourist on his track. There is a story that one Sunday an American lady attended the morning service at St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, and asked the verger which of the choristers in the chancel was the lord chief justice. "Well, mum," replied that dignitary, "that is the vicar, and them's the curates, and I'm the verger. But as for the choir, as long as they does their duty we don't inquire into their hantecedents."—London Chronicle.

HIGH COURT HEARS CLAIM FOR DAMAGES

Cavan Farmer Takes Action Against Township Council

The non-jury sittings of the High Court opened this afternoon with Mr. Justice Middleton presiding.

The case of Thos. Brightman and and M. J. Quigley was laid over until the next non-jury sittings. The defendant, M. J. Quigley, being in British Columbia. Hall, Megdd & Davidson acted for the plaintiff and Henderson and McGuire, of Toronto, for defendant.

The case of Geo. C. McBain vs. Cavan Township was then dealt with. Mr. McBain claims damages as the result of the diversion of a creek which circled his property.

Evidence by Mr. McBain was to the effect that in 1907 the Cavan Township Council constructed a ditch along the northerly limit of his property, crossing the stream where it entered and left his land.

Previously the stream had kept its course clear, by the flow of the water, but, when the ditch as built, a connection was formed with it and a culvert which the township built under the road became filled with sediment during the spring freshets, and blocked the channel of the stream into the property of witness. In January 1911 the Council offered to open up the water course and keep it open by placing gates on the culvert, the plaintiff to close gates at proper time. The proposition was accepted. The rains washed the soil away from under the gates. Previous to this the Reeve had been notified of the affair.

A big storm in the spring of 1911 filled up the culverts and cut off the use of water for the season of 1911.

Maps showing the direction of the stream were produced. A copy of the minute book of the council was also produced, showing that the report of councillor Baptie on the culvert was approved by the council. Mr. Jackson was appointed to clear out the plaintiff's water course.

On the 16th of December plaintiff went to Council about the matter.

In the fall of 1911 gates were again opened. The Council erected gates. Witness closed them again in the late fall.

"What damage has this caused you?" asked Mr. Hellmouth.

"I have not had water for three years.

"What value do you set this at?"

"One hundred dollars a year."

"Why that?" asked His Honor.

"I hardly know."

"Well, what is the actual damage?"

"My cattle came home, and had the drain been all right they would not have done so."

"How many times would you have had to drive the cattle for water?"

"Oh, I might drive them fifty times a year."

"That would be $2 per trip."

The case is proceeding.

CALGARY MAN IS VISITING CITY

Real Estate Operators Responsible for Dull Times in West

Mr. R. S. Read of Calgary, who is a guest at the Oriental, stated to a Review reporter this morning that never before had he seen things so dull in the west. "The east is certainly the place at present," said Mr. Read with a smile. Mr. Read is interested in the Black Diamond Oil wells, about 126 miles south west of Calgary.

Coming back to the slow times in Western Canada, Mr. Read says that it is greatly due to the work of the real estate operations.

Put a drop of kerosene oil in the hinge of a squeaking door, it will stop the squeaking.

When the fire is running low and a quick oven is wanted, open the oven door, filling it with cool, fresh air. Then close the oven door. It will heat much more quickly.

JUVENILE BRANCH OF THE FORESTERS

White Lily No. 86, A. O. F. Held Good Meeting

The new juvenile branch of the Ancient Order of Foresters, White Lily, No. 86, held a rousing and enthusiastic meeting last night in S. O. E. hall, Hunter St. The boys were all out and are fast proving their working abilities. D. C. R. Tom Hendry, occupied the chair. Numerous items of importance were gone into regarding regalia, etc., and the boys showed a good grip and understanding of the numerous discussions. Bros. Allan Boyce, Wilfred Miller, R Head, V. Miller, A. Hendry and L. Field spoke on the prospects of new members and judging by the reports their membership will soon increase.

Some of the younger members were anxious about getting home before nine o'clock, owing to the Curfew Law. However, Bro. T. Hendry explained that he had interviewed Chief Thompson on the matter and so long as the boys did not loiter on the street it would be alright.

Bro. R. J. McWilliams, High Court Officer, gave a report regarding the Juvenile Federation.

The membership consists of boys from five years to seventeen years and are well protected by sick and funeral benefits.

After business the boys enjoyed a game of carpet balls and at 9.30 sharp were dismissed.

TOLD OF WORK AMONG NATIVE POLICE IN JAPAN

Mr. Jas. Cuthbertson Addresses Young People's Association at all Saints'

To Mr. James Cuthbertson, returned missionary from Japan, the Young People's Association of All Saints' church, is indebted for a very interesting address on missionary work among the native police of Japan.

Mr. Cuthbertson addressed the meeting last night and during the short time at his disposal he won the undivided attention of all. He told many humorous and serious incidents, relative to his learning the Japanese language and his efforts along with other missionaries to win the people for Christ.

Mr. Cuthbertson has been in the city visiting Mr. James Dutton, 92 London street, Mrs. Dutton and Mrs. Cuthbertson being sisters. Mr. and Mrs. Cuthbertson lost their home and all their personal property and barely escaped with their lives during a fire in Tokio. This so upset Mrs. Cuthbertson, that it was necessary to leave Japan.

They are returning to their missionary work the first week in December, Mr. Cuthbertson having to remain there for eighteen months when he will have finished his time and will then return to England.

His friend, Mr. James Dutton, stated after the address that Mr. Cuthbertson and he had belonged to a Young People's Society when young and their prayer was that one of them would be sent out as a missionary.

Fewer Murders In Canada.

During the year so far only seventeen convictions for murder have been brought to the attention of the Department of Justice, through whose hands all capital cases must pass for final disposition. This would indicate that there will be a marked decrease for the year, the number for last year being in the neighborhood of forty. The fall assizes throughout the Dominion will, of course, add to the present number of seventeen, but it is not considered likely that last year's record will be reached.

GENERAL VILLA COMPLETELY ROUTES HUERTA'S FORCES

Commander of Constitutionalist Army Inflicts a Crushing Blow on the Mexican Provisional Government's Troops by Driving Them Back and Capturing Artillery and Trains In Chihuahua.

EL PASO, Texas, Nov. 26.—Gen. Francisco Villa, commander of the Constitutionalists' army, in the state of Chihuahua, last night sent the following telegram to Col. Juan N. Medina, his chief of staff in Juarez: "I communicate with satisfaction that we have completely routed the enemy. We took all his artillery and three trains. The federals are in full and shameless retreat."

After twenty-four hours of the fiercest battle of the Mexican revolution, fought on the open plain along the Mexican National Railroad fourteen miles south of the border, Pancho Villa's Constitutionalist forces have successfully maintained their positions in a long battle front, effectually blocking the Federal advance on Juarez. Whether the Federals have retreated beyond Samalayuca or not is unknown. No news comes from their commanders. That Villa stands firm at Mesa is indicated by an order he sent at dark to rush another train to the battlefield for wounded. Wounded who arrived on a train into Jaures at the same hour said the Federals had drawn off to the south.

The battle was marked by an almost incessant artillery fire from daylight until night. All attempts of the Federals at flanking have been repulsed. Cannon of all sizes have been used with terrible effect by both armies. Dead and wounded men and horses are strewn over an area of several miles. Hospitals and hotels in Juarez are filled with wounded waiting permission from the Washington Government to be brought to El Paso for treatment.

A reply to the request of Juan N. Medina, Villa's chief of staff in Juares on the local Red Cross for aid forwarded to Charles L. Magee, secretary of the American Red Cross Society, is awaited by local physicians and nurses who are ready to move to Juarez and bring the wounded to El Paso hospitals and Fort Bliss. El Paso people have listened all day to the heavy firing, fearful that the tide of battle would lap the thresholds of this city, should the rebels fail to stand their enemy off. All the United States troops in this district are massed along the river front as a precautionary measure, Major R. F. L. Michie, the commander, says: Medina has transmitted the assurances of his chief that there will be no fighting in the border town that will jeopardize American lives or interests.

Notwithstanding this, there is likelihood of a renewal of fighting today. The Federals are said to have numbered 7,000 when the engagement opened yesterday and may have been reinforced from Chihuahua City during the day.

Mexican Rebels Repulsed.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 26.—Three thousand rebels have moved eastward from Torreon. According to the War Department they attacked a federal force under Gen. Argmedo, at Gen. Capeda, about 125 miles east of Torreon, but were repulsed, 45 of them being killed.

Traffic over the main line of the National Railway, which was resumed Monday, after many weeks, has again been interrupted, the rebels cutting the line south of Saltillo.

Lind Goes To Tampico.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26. — President Wilson and members of the Cabinet discussed the Mexican situation briefly yesterday, and assurances later were given that no change in the attitude of the United States toward the Huerta Provisional Government had taken place.

Most important of the day's developments from the American standpoint was the departure of President Wilson's special envoy, John Lind, on the battleship Rhode Island with Rear Admiral Fletcher for Tampico and Tuxpan to investigate conditions, where the British oil interests have been regarded as in grave danger.

The sending of Mr. Lind is generally regarded here as an indication that the United States is extremely desirous to avert any hostile move, and that a thorough examination of the situation would be made before American marines were landed on Mexican soil.

EGGS MUST COME DOWN.

Crusade Against High Price of Hen Produce Begins.

CHICAGO, Nov. 26.—The campaign of self-denial in the matter of eating eggs began here yesterday in an effort to reduce the price. It is estimated that 12,444 club women and their families are engaged in the movement, which has for its object the reduction of the price to 32 cents a dozen. Until that point is reached the women have pledged themselves to go without the eggs.

Fresh eggs are selling retail here at from 45 to 48 cents. Speculators are said to control the market. A year ago the women broke the price by selling eggs themselves.

Hamilton Joins Fight.

HAMILTON, Nov. 26.—Following Mayor Allan's successful crusade against the high price of milk, it was announced here yesterday that Hamilton women will take up arms against the exorbitant price of eggs. It was said that an egg boycott will be commenced shortly, and that the mayor will be asked to conduct it.

Switzerland Expels Spy.

GENEVA, Switzerland, Nov. 26.—The Swiss authorities, after a lengthy investigation as the result of complaints made by a number of Governments, have discovered an extensive and cleverly organized international military espionage bureau here. The bureau, it is alleged, was conducted by a French ex-army captain of the name of Larguier and yesterday he was ordered expelled from Switzerland.

The expulsion order places Larguier in an extraordinary dilemma, as, it is asserted, the moment he crosses either of the four frontiers — the French, German, Austrian or Italian —he will be placed under arrest by the officials of the country he enters.

East Indians Killed In Riot.

DURBAN, Natal, Union of South African, Nov. 26. — Three East Indians were killed and about a score wounded yesterday during a collision with the police at Esperanza, a sugar cane growing district on the south coast of Natal.

The police were obliged to use their rifles to quell an outbreak among the strikers.

Fell From Ninth Storey.

MONTREAL, Nov. 26. — Norman Binmore, one of the best known real estate agents in this city, was instantly killed yesterday morning by falling to the street from the window of his office, on the ninth floor of the Eastern Township's Bank Building.

Binmore's father was accidentally killed forty-five years ago in the same manner. [illegible]

ANTI-UNIONISTS ORGANIZE.

Nationalist Volunteer Force Is Instituted to Oppose Ulster Army.

DUBLIN, Nov. 26.—An Irish National volunteer force to uphold the authority of the crown and government of Ireland on the same lines as the Ulster force, of which Sir Edward Carson is the sponsor, was organized last night, but the enrollment of volunteers was attended by scenes of violence. More than 8,000 persons assembled in the rotunda at a public meeting held for the purpose of inaugurating the movement, and several thousands were unable to gain admission. Their attempts to enter resulted in great disorder and glass doors and windows were broken.

From the first it was evident that the transport strikers, who were present in large force, opposed the movement. They maintained constant interruptions of the speakers, which culminated in free fights. Sticks were used as weapons and a number of blank cartridges were exploded.

The meeting was so disorderly that it was impossible to judge of the success of the movement, but the promoters asserted that several thousand men enrolled.

Russia Protests.

COLOGNE, Germany, Nov. 26.—An indication that the Russian Government has protested against the location in Constantinople of the Germany military mission, which it was arranged early this month should have charge of the reorganization of the Turkish army, is given in an inspired despatch yesterday from Berlin to The Cologne Gazette.

The telegram says the matter was discussed in a friendly way during the recent visit of Premier Kokovsoff in Berlin and that negotiations on the subject are still in progress.

Football Fans Left Goods.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 26.—Nearly $10,000 worth of valuable furs, jewels, pocketbooks containing large sums of money, hats and other personal effects repose in the vault of the Harvard Athletic Association awaiting identification by their owners. The articles, which include a fur coat valued at $800, were forgotten by spectators at the Harvard Yale football game in the stadium on Saturday.

Trusted employes of the association, who went over the stadium after the game, collected the rich booty.

TRINIDAD, Col., Nov. 25.—Lewis Zancanelli, under arrest on the charge of assassinating George W. Belcher, a detective who was shot to death on the street here on Nov. 20, has made a confession, according to Adjutant-General Chase. He implicates three organizers of the United Mine Workers of America, who, Zancanelli says, gave him $25 and promised him $1,000 more to kill Belcher.

MILLERS ARE AT OTTAWA

They Seek to Remove Discrimination in Freight Rates

OTTAWA, Nov. 26.—A delegation representing four of the great milling companies of Canada, the Ogilvie, the Lake of the Woods, the Western Canada, and the Maple Leaf, waited upon Hon. George E. Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, yesterday afternoon, and urged that some action be taken to remove the discrimination which at present exists between the ocean freight rates on wheat and flour exported from Canada.

The members of the delegation claimed that during the past year a good export business had been ruined by the discriminatory rates in favor of the raw product charged by the steamship companies. During the past year or so steamship rates had increased from 50 to 100 per cent. The millers did not mind that, but in the same period the rates charged for the carriage of flour were from five to twelve cents per hundred higher than on wheat. This discrimination they held was heavily in favor of the foreign and British miller, who was enabled to take advantage of the low rate on wheat.

Mr. Foster said the Imperial Trade Commission was investigating the general question at present. He would, however, give the matter his most earnest attention.

MINERS CHEERED WHEN ACQUITTED

LONDON, Nov. 26.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—By the unexpected death from acute pneumonia of Charles Fraser, ex-Postmaster-General, Australia has lost one of her most valued and useful statesmen.

Mr. Fraser was born in 1880 and entered into federal politics ten years ago as leader of the younger section of the Labor party.

Premier Cook, who has adjourned the House until after the funeral, yesterday moved a vote of condolence deploring the "loss of a young and valuable life." His death, he said, was a real deprivation to himself, the House and the country.

WHITE HOUSE WEDDING AN IMPRESSIVE CEREMONY

Second Daughter of the President of the United States Is United In Marriage to Francis B. Sayre—Bride Chooses That the Word "Obey" Be Included In the Service—Couple To Go to Europe.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—Francis Bowes Sayre and Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson, second daughter of the President and Mrs. Wilson, were joined in marriage late yesterday at the White House, before a company of distinguished officials of the U. S. Government, members of the diplomatic corps, close friends and relatives.

A reception for the guests by the President, Mrs. Wilson and the wedded couple followed, and soon the east room was cleared of its carpets and the young folks danced well into the evening, brilliant uniforms and elaborate gowns gliding gracefully over the glistening floor, under the bright glow of the crystal chandeliers.

When the guests had gone the bridal party sat down in the breakfast room and the bride cut the wedding cake with the sword of Dr. Cary T. Grayson, U.S.N., the President's physician and companion. Then there was a merry dinenr, an affectionate good-bye and the couple whirled away in a White House automobile on their honeymoon. Their destination was kept secret, but in a few days they will go to Europe to return early in January to Williamstown, Mass., where Mr. Sayre will be assistant to President Garfield of Williams College.

The service was a unique combination of the Episcopalian and Presbyterian forms. In the latter the word "obey" is not included in the promise of "to love, honor and obey," but upon the bride's especial request it was inserted.

Rev. Dr. Beach conducted the service.

FAVORS JOINT BOARD.

Drayton Fails To Secure a Probe Into Ocean Rates Just Now.

OTTAWA, Nov. 26.—The report of Mr. H. L. Drayton, chairman of the Railway Commission, who went to England to investigate ocean freight rates as affecting Canada, was made public yesterday.

He endeavored to obtain the appointment of a joint commission to make thorough and complete investigation of rates and charges of ocean carriers, insurance charges, the operation of terminal and port authorities, and ocean traffic generally.

To the proposals of Mr. Drayton, the Board of Trade replied that under the circumstances; the board, after consultation with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, felt that it would not be possible at the present time to advise his Majesty's Government to appoint a second commission representing Canada and the United Kingdom, to investigate a subject which is already being examined by the royal commission, and which body will very shortly be taking evidence in Canada."

Tapped Gold Shipment.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Nov. 26.—When messengers from the American Express Co. attempted to deliver a large package of gold eagles to the Dominion Trust Co. yesterday, it is alleged the package was found to be $4,000 short. It is stated that the alleged theft of the money occurred at Portland, Ore., whence the money came to Vancouver. The total consignment was of many thousands of dollars.

Belgians Ask Concession.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 26.—The first bill to be introduced in the new Mexican Congress was one to ratify a concession to Europeans. The Department of Communications sent yesterday to the chamber for ratification a concession to a Belgian syndicate, to build 5,000 miles of narrow gauge railway in Mexico. This was referred to a committee.

C.P.R. WILL PLACE SWING IN CENTRE SPAN OF BRIDGE

Mayor Bradburn received a telegram to-day from Mr. Wanklyn, of the C.P.R., saying that the company would put in a swing in the centre span.

Quite a spirited discussion took place at the City Council meeting last night in regard to the question of a swing in the C.P.R. bridge.

Mr. J. H. Burnham and Mayor Bradburn have gone to considerable trouble to investigate the problem and have the swing placed in the bridge.

Now, it appears the new bridge is being constructed after a temporary halt and the Council did not know last night, whether or not the plans called for a swing. The C.P.R. did agree to place a swing in the centre span, after the order had been placed for the material, but Mayor Bradburn answered Mr. Wanklyn of the company that the 33 feet mentioned was not sufficient on account of the current at this point.

Mr. Wanklyn replied that as the City would not accept this offer, the Company had decided not to go ahead with the new bridge.

Operations ceased for a short time but were commenced again.

A CASE OF BLUFF.

In the opinion of Ald. Green, the C.P.R. is bluffing. In a letter to the press, Mr. Burnham gave his explanation of the matter, in which he claimed that Mayor Bradburn and his engineer wanted the swing on the west end. He believed the offer of the Company to be a fair one but if the City did not think so, the City should take their case to the Government and also secure expert testimony on the question.

Last night at Council meeting the Clerk read the following telegram which had been received by Mr. Burnham and passed on to the Council:

"Montreal, Nov. 25.

"J. H. Burnham, M.P., Peterborough.

"Telegram received. To move suggested hundred foot swing span from centre to west end of bridge would be most inconvenient and expensive. Two additional piers would be required and would narrow up west channel about twenty feet, costing $3,000 plus ten thousand dollars for the one hundred and twenty-five fixed span now ready to be placed in position. Would Government be willing to assume this cost.

"F. L. WANKLYN."

Mayor Bradburn had a bundle of correspondence and telegrams with the C.P.R. and the Government and he reviewed the whole matter. He said that he did not suggest that the swing should be at the west end.

Members of the council felt that in view of the large amount of money spent above the bridge and the amount of dockage, it was up to the Government to say that a swing should be provided. Accordingly, a committee was appointed to see Mr. Burnham this morning and Mayor Pradburn was authorized to send a deputation to Ottawa, if necessary, and interview the Government.

The statements last night of His Worship the Mayor and of the other guardians of the city's interests so far as they appear by the newspapers are correct. I just wish to say one or two things in reply.

1. When the C.P.R. agreed to give us a swing why did we (I mean the city council) not find out from some practical barge or canal men where we should have it? The C.P.R. says that our selection is unreasonable. It is certainly up to us to prove that it is not.

2. Ald. Buller did not attempt to override anybody except perhaps himself in his interview with me. As an alderman no doubt it is his duty to learn what he can and do what he can. But I warned Mayor Bradburn from the start that as I had not the power given me by the council to act for them in the choice of a suitable swing, I would not be held responsible for the council's action in that part of the affair, and I will not. It is much easier for me to get out from under at the start than after the trouble is here, and that is why I defend myself in the newspapers, as it looked to be coming.

3. I will, of course, do all I can in the city's interests, but surely we must interview the C.P.R. first to show them why we cannot accept their offer, (if such be the case) and why we must have something else.

4. The waterway and water-side are not governmental property. The right of way over the water and the short line are both ours and that is why we, not the government, must look after them up to a certain point.

5. I was afraid that since we refused the C.P.R.'s offer, if it proved to be reasonable, and our demand proved to be unreasonable, the C.P.R. would have the right to go on and build a fixed bridge and we would have nobody to thank for our loss but ourselves(most of the blame coming my way likely.)

REPORT IS PRESENTED.

J. P. Muller Gives Opinion of Western Railway Rates Situation.

OTTAWA, Nov. 26.—The Railway Commission yesterday afternoon resumed consideration of the western rate case and took up the exhibit filed by J. P. Muller, a Government expert. The sitting was occupied chiefly with the examination of Mr. Muller, who said often a company extended a line into a new district, and for some years it produced little revenue as the district was gradually filling up. As it grew to be a greater revenue-producer another line extended a branch to tap the same territory.

The Government should be in a position, he said, to stop such competitive extensions to existing lines by compelling the companies to get Government approval of extensions.

The hearing will continue all week.

UNION LIFE'S MONEY WENT TO EVANS' OTHER VENTURES

Prison Enquiry Next Week.

KINGSTON, Nov. 26. — Kingston Penitentiary will be in the limelight again next week when the prison reform commission will resume business. The commissioners have just returned from a tour of inspection of several big prisons in the States. There is likelihood of a session being held in Toronto and one at the prison farm at Guelph.

German Goods To Be Shown.

LONDON, Nov. 26.—The Berlin correspondent of The Daily Mail asserts that 1,400 great German firms and corporations have agreed to exhibit at the Panama Pacific Exposition at San Francisco in 1915, and that thus Germany will have the greatest display that she has ever had in any exposition in history.

Tons of Spoiled Turkey.

BUFFALO, Nov. 26.—Health department inspectors yesterday destroyed ten tons of spoiled dressed turkey, which had been seized in local commission houses. Part of nearly every car of turkey and geese has been found unfit for use, because the fowl being packed before cooling, has spoiled in transit.

ADAM BECK IS HONORED

Londoners United to Pay Tribute to the "Power Minister."

LONDON, Ont., Nov. 26. — London's most prominent citizens, over 500 strong, and irrespective of party affiliations, arose last night and tendered Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, and the city's most distinguished citizen, one of the most memorable complimentary banquets in the history of the city. Among the speakers were Bishop Fallon, head of the Catholic diocese of London; Rt. Rev. David Williams, bishop of the Anglican Diocese of Huron, Lt.-Col. Gartshore, general manager of the McLary Manufacturing Co., Dr. Flanders of the First Methodist Church, and his worship Mayor Graham.

Appreciation of the public services of the "harnesser of Niagara" was on the lips of every speaker, Conservative, Liberal and otherwise. Hon. Mr. Beck replied feelingly. In the course of the evening he was presented with a solid silver salver containing 200 ounces of silver and a set of candelabra of four pieces.

SAILORS LETTERS UNCLAIMED.

Mail For Victims of Lake Disaster Will Be Sent to Washington.

SARNIA, Nov. 26.—In a few more days about 200 pieces of mail now at the marine postoffice, Port Huron, addressed to sailors who vainly braved the recent awful storm on the Great Lakes, will be forwarded to Washington. All mail received for men on the lost ships that bore the sender's address on the envelope has been returned, bearing the message, "Lost in the storm. Cannot deliver."

But there is much matter with no clue to the sender on the outside, except the post mark. Some of these pieces bear the names of men not heard from since their ships were lost. There are postal cards with birthday and Thanksgiving greetings; bundles of winter clothing, and envelopes stuffed with many pages of urgent pleadings of relatives anxious to know the worst. In due time the writers will receive word from the dead letter office of the non-delivery of their messages.

Eleventh Man Is Gone.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—The band of avengers that for eight years have hounded twelve men suspected of murdering Francisco Madenio, an alleged counterfeiter, got their eleventh victim yesterday. He was Joseph Farino, a Brooklyn fruit inspector, found dead with three bullet wounds in a vacant hallway.

Farino's death leaves alive only one of the dozen arrested in 1905 for the murder of Madenio. It was said at the time that Madenio was killed because his murderers feared he would betray them to the police. The dozen men were held for eleven months and then discharged for lack of evidence. Since then eleven of them have been murdered in various parts of the world, one in Chicago, one in Palermo, Italy, and three in Brooklyn.

Inquiry Into Affairs of Defunct Insurance Company Shows That Over $500,000 Is Accounted For In Five Related Concerns—Prospectus Circulated In England Capable of Misinterpretation.

TORONTO, Nov. 26.—The floating of $785,105 worth of stock for the Union Life Assurance Co. in England in 1911 at a cost of $152,440, or 19 per cent., the circulation of a prospectus in England, which was capable of much misinterpretation by purchasing stockholders, and the extravagant loans and uses of the floated $785,105 through the numerous subsidiary companies controlled by H. Pollman Evans, were the main features of the continued investigation into the affairs of the defunct Union Life Co. yesterday.

In the afternoon, Mr. A. C. Masten, examining Mr. Evans, showed that a loan of $65,000 to the National Land, Fruit & Packing Co., of which Mr. Evans was president, was made by the Union Life Assurance Co. in November, 1911, when the actual worth of the plant and property of the National Company at that time was only $65,238.35,

"How could you advise such a loan?" asked Mr. Masten.

"I was not aware at that time of the exact assets of the National Land, Fruit & Packing Co.," said Mr. Evans, "but I based my opinion of the loan on the valuation of Mr. Harton Walker, who set a value of $110,000 on the properties."

"Is the plant at Mimico still in use?" asked Mr. Masten. When he was told that vinegar was still stored in one of the buildings of the defunct National Land, Fruit & Packing Co., the cross-examiner remarked, "Yes, full of vinegar which is maturing."

Besides the $65,000 loan to the National Land, Fruit & Packing Co., other expenditures, which went to eat up the $785,000 English flotation, were (1) $60,000 loan to the Imperial Loan & Investment Co., which has now an application standing for liquidation; (2) $340,000 loan to the Canada Provident Investment & Loan Corporation, whose assets now are largely shares in the Imperial Loan Co., the National Agency, and the National Land, Fruit & Packing Co.; (3) deposits with the Imperial Loan & Investment Co. from time to time, amounting to $44,000. The rate of interest given by the Imperial Loan & Investment Co. was five per cent.

"Did it not occur to you as head of the Union Life," asked Mr. Masten, referring to these deposits, "that it was a little dangerous to place deposits in a company claiming to pay five per cent. interest on them?"

"The Imperial Loan suggested the deposits and we agreed to it," was the answer.

The point was, as was brought out by Mr. Masten, that these deposits were paid out of the Imperial Loan & Investment Co. almost immediately they were received.

(4) $60,000 in mortgages was placed in the northwest during the period between May, 1911, and September, 1912.

The foregoing five transactions account for over $500,000 of the lost money.

In order to allow E. R. C. Clarkson, the appointed liquidator of the Union Life Assurance Co., to prepare further exhibits and assemble other material from the books of the numerous subsidiary companies, which have only recently been received by Mr. Clarkson, an adjournment of the investigation until Wednesday, Dec. 10, was made by Referee Kappele.

"RED LIGHT" DISTRICT GOES.

Vancouver's Segregated Area Must Be Cleaned Up by Sunday.

VANCOUVER, Nov. 26. — Mayor Baxter issued an order to the police to clean out the restricted district of Alexander street. Two years ago the women located in this section, which starts within a couple of blocks from the main police station in the east end. Yesterday afternoon the police accordingly notified the residents of the section that they would have until Sunday in which to pack up and get out.

On the heels of the police went a large party of women, representing the various rescue homes of the city. They sought to call on as many of the girls as would see them, offering assistance in getting them to start in the right path and offering them homes in which to begin reformation.

The work of notification and moral salvage was hampered, however, by the fact that the doors were closed against the visitors; who merely left cards of the mission homes and then came away.

FATAL AUTO CRASH; FOUR PEOPLE KILLED

Canadian Press Despatch.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26 — Thomas Denny, Democratic member of the Assembly for the nineteenth district Leonard Cohen, a prominent Tammany man, and two well dressed women lay dead in the morgue this morning, all being instantly killed last night, when Cohen's car was run into head-on by a car belonging to Bert Rich a garage owner.

The Rich car put on speed to pass another car and apparently blinded by lights rammed the Cohen car right in front.

Several inmates of the Rich car were seriously hurt and only the negro chauffeur in the Cohen car remained alive.

The Cohen party had been out to Larchmont to a late dinner and were coming home through the Bronx at high speed.

WHERE WE STAND

Whatever pleasure or satisfaction Sir Wilfrid Laurier may draw from the present position of Canada in the naval business of the Empire as a result of his urging the Senate to reject the only practical contribution to naval defence that was ever before parliament, he is welcome to it all. No one will grudge him one iota of the credit due to him.

Mr. Borden is placed in a position of impotence. He has said very little on the subject, and has not indulged in any spiteful or ill-tempered speeches. He has been content to wait, to give the people time to reflect upon Liberal obstructive tactics while the Naval Aid Bill was before Parliament, and to let the Liberal orators digest the venom of their spleen. Liberal journals are coming more and more to repent of their extreme antagonism to the Government's proposed contribution, but the repentance springs more from remorse than regret or genuine sorrow for the ill that has been done to the name of Canada in the eyes of the Empire.

There is a deliberate separatist movement in the Liberal ranks which will brook no "truck or trade" with the British Admiralty, except to receive protection till such times as Canada can build and man a navy of her own and wave her own flag in comparative security. This is not inferred from their policy of a Canadian Navy so much as from their attitude toward the British Admiralty on all occasions. Their riting of the Australian or New Zealand policy is merely a subterfuge. Those great colonies have for years worked hand in hand with the the British Admiralty in this matter of naval defence, and their present position is not one of detachment but of co-operation. No Australian believes that they are absolutely impregnable because they have a navy, but they feel secure in the fact that their fleet is backed by the great British Navy, and they also feel that they have done some real work for the Empire and are not paupers in the society of nations.

LAYMEN ARE ALIVE

The laymen of the local churches have bestirred themselves to extra efforts in preparation for the 'every member canvass" for missionary work which is to be carried through next week. There has been a good deal of criticism directed against the Laymen's Movement, but they contend that opposition springs chiefly from ignorance of the aims which inspire the movement. The local committee have therefore set out upon an educative campaign. Six half page advertisements are to appear alternately in the local papers setting forth the object of the Laymen's Movement and rebutting the charges that the movement is injuring home mission work, by giving information to those who have not taken the trouble to look into the subject. This is an attempt to get the interest of the man in the street. This method of advertisement may appear to some to be unusual and doubtless will in its turn be criticized. But, it must be remembered that those who are running this movement are business men and business men as a rule have great faith in the good judgment of the man in the street if he has plain facts set before him in a plain way by plain men like himself.

The criticisms referred to have not been without their effect, and if they have stung the laymen into greater activity and zest for the cause good will come out of apparent evil and this opposition will have strengthened their determination to see this thing through. They are business men and know that a good market is worth fighting for when you have a good, honest proposition on hand. Nothing but good can come from this movement, which is enlisting the interest and active co-operation of business men in a work which has no selfish or mercenary motives behind it.

GERMANY AND COLONIES

Much comment is aroused by the speech in the Isle of Wight by Canon Maclulich, British Chaplain at the central European watering place of Homburg, who had exceptional opportunities for meeting the best informed Germans. He declared on high authority that German's ambitions to secure supremacy of the sea were the commanding passion of the highly educated classes of Germany, apart from the army and navy, and that only the Kaiser's personal intervention prevented a German attack on France two years ago.

"Germany," the Canon said, 'is a young and rapidly growing nation in population and wealth and means to possess some Colonies sooner or later as an outlet for her people and industry. Germany also knows that the only way to get them is to win supremacy on the seas. The time is surely coming, perhaps not during the Kaiser's lifetime, when Germany will fight for command of the sea but you may be certain she will never make an aggressive move until she is practically certain that she will come out of the conflict top dog."

SHANDY GAFF

"What is a "fusion" candidate? This question arises in the mind as one studies the papers on the Middlesex by-election. A "fusion" candidate is a man who is a cross between the Liberal party and the Dominion Alliance. It reminds us of the Scotch choir-master who had a rather erratic member in his choir, who was continually changing from tenor to bass. At one practice the Scotchman got out of patience and said, "Look here, Mr McSpurt," if ye'r going to sing tenor, sing tenor; or if ye'r going to sing bass, sing bass—but let's have none ot ye're shandy gaff!"

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Canadian Government have presented the Royal Zoological Society of Ireland with a pair of bisons. Maxwell Graham, chief of the animal section of the Dominion Parks, is returning home on the Virginian after delivering these buffaloes safely at Dublin.

The Sons of England have exonerated Premier Roblin from any intention to reflect on Englishmen when he called the Post Master "a jelly-bag Englishman." That is, we suppose, Premier Roblin used the word "jelly-bag" in a "Pickwickian sense."

"If American troops enter my country I myself will take a rifle and be lost to the world with the men of my fatherland to fight against the common foe. I will expend my last drop of blood to drive out the invader, and I speak not for myself alone, but for every Mexican that breathes today." In these impassioned words, his dark-brown eyes flaming, Senor Holo, a business man of Oaxaca, Mexico, declared himself. The invasion of Mexico by Americans would perhaps be the quickest means of bringing the contending parties together in that much troubled country.

TELEGRAPH BRIEFS.

A number of young boys from Chatham went out in Harwich Township with rifles and did considerable damage to the live stock of several farmers.

James Drake, aged 67, died Monday night after being struck by an auto in which were John Williams, millionaire brewer, of Vancouver, and his wife.

Sitting at table, Cecil Enright, aged three, son of Fireman Daniel Enright of Kingston, pulled a pan of scalding water over himself. He died in terrible agony.

Hon. Robert L. Borden, Prime Minister of Canada, will be entertained by the U. S. Secretary of State, W. J. Bryan, at dinner on Friday in Washington.

RED ROSE TEA "is good tea."

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF
BAYARD VEILLER

"It's too late," was the stern answer. "We're here now, and we'll stay till the business is done."

"Joe, for my sake!"

"I can't quit now until we've got what we came here after," he declared roughly.

"Boys, let's get away! Please, oh, please! Joe, for God's sake!" Her tone was a sob.

"This is Mary calling," Garson muttered.

"I'm going to see this through," said Garson doggedly.

With a gesture of despair she turned away toward the door by which she had entered.

"You can't go," Garson said sharply. "You might be caught."

"And if I were," Mary demanded in a flash of indignation, "do you think I'd tell?"

"Of course not, Mary. I know you. You would go up for life first. Just the same, you can't take any chances. We'll all get away in a minute and you'll come with us." He turned to the men and spoke with swift authority.

"Come," he said to Dacey, "you get to the light switch there by the hall door. If you hear me snap my fingers, turn 'em off. Understand?"

With instant obedience the man went to his station by the hall door.

"Red," Garson ordered, "you get to that door." He pointed to the one that gave on the passageway against which he had set the chair tilted. As the man obeyed Garson gave further instructions.

"If any one comes in that way get him and get him quick. You understand? Don't let him cry out or make a sound."

Chicago Red held up his huge hand, widely open.

"Not a chance," he declared proudly, "with that over his mug."

"Now, let's get to work," Garson continued eagerly.

Mary spoke with the bitterness of defeat.

"Listen, Joe! If you do this I'm through with you. I quit."

"If this goes through," he countered, "we'll all quit. That's why I'm doing it. I'm sick of the game."

CHAPTER XIV.

The Noiseless Death.

RED suddenly made a slight hissing noise that arrested the attention of the others and held them in moveless silence.

"I hear something," he whispered. He went to the keyhole of the door leading into the passage. Then he whispered again, "and it's coming this way."

At the words Garson snapped his fingers. The room was plunged in darkness.

There was absolute silence in the library after the turning of the switch that brought darkness. Long seconds passed, then a little noise—the knob of the passage door turning. As the door swung open there came a gasping breath from Mary, for she saw framed in the faint light that came from the single burner in the corridor the slender form of her husband, Dick Gilder.

"I hear something," whispered Chicago Red.

The next instant he had stepped within the room and Chicago Red had pounced on his victim, the huge hand clapped tight over the young man's mouth. There came a sound of scuffling feet, and that was all. Finally the big man's voice came triumphantly:

"I've got him!"

"It's Dick!" The cry came as a wail of despair from the girl.

At the same moment Garson flashed his torch, and the light fell swiftly on young Gilder, bowed to a kneeling posture before the couch, half throttled by Chicago Red. Close beside him, Mary looked down in wordless despair over this final disaster of the night.

Garson retired a step farther before he spoke his command, so that, though he held the torch still, he, like the others, was in shadow.

"Get away, Red."

The fellow let go his grip.

Freed of that strangling embrace, Dick stumbled blindly to his feet. Then, mechanically, his hand went to the lamp on the table back of the couch. When the mellow light streamed forth he uttered an ejaculation of stark amazement, for his gaze was riveted on the face of the woman he loved.

"Good God!" It was a cry of torture wrung from his soul of souls.

Mary swayed toward him a little, palpitant with fear—fear for herself, for all of them, most of all for him.

"Hush, hush!" she panted warningly. "Oh, Dick, you don't understand!"

"I understand this," he said brokenly at last. "Whether you ever did it before or not, this time you have broken the law." A sudden inspiration on his own behalf came to him. For his love's sake he must seize on this opportunity given of fate to him for mastery.

Dick Gilder Throttled by Chicago Red.

"You're in my hands now. So are these men as well. Unless you do as I say, Mary, I'll jail every one of them."

"Who's this, anyhow?" Chicago Red demanded.

"I'm her husband," Dick answered. "Who are you?"

"Don't speak any of you," Mary directed. "You mustn't let him hear your voices."

Dick was exasperated by this persistent identification of herself with these criminals in his father's house.

"You men back there!" he cried. "If I give you my word to let every one of you go free and pledge myself never to recognize one of you again, will you make Mary here listen to me? That's all I ask. I want a few minutes to state my case. Give me that. Whether I win or lose, you men go free, and I'll forget everything that has happened here tonight." There came a muffled guffaw of laughter from the big chest of Chicago Red.

"Your safety depends on me," the young man warned. "Suppose I should call for help?"

"You would only call once," Garson said grimly. His hand went to the noiseless weapon in his coat pocket.

"Once would be quite enough."

"You win," Garson said, with a half laugh. He turned to the other men and spoke a command.

"You get over by the hall door, Red, and keep your ears open every second. Give us the office if you hear anything. If we're rushed and have to make a quick getaway see that Mary has the first chance. Get that, all of you?"

Garson turned to Dick.

"Make it quick, remember."

Dick spoke at once, with a hesitancy that betrayed the depth of his emotion.

"Don't you care for me at all?" he asked wistfully.

The girl's answer was uttered with nervous eagerness, which revealed her own stress of fear.

"No, no, no!" she exclaimed.

"I know you do, Mary," he asserted confidently; "a little anyway. Why, Mary, can't you see that you're throwing away everything that makes life worth while? Don't you see that?"

There was no word from the girl. Her breast was moving convulsively.

"Mary, Mary!" he cried. "You've got to change. Don't be so hard. Give the woman in you a chance."

The girl's form became rigid as she fought for self control.

"I am what I am," she said sharply. "I can't change. Keep your promise now, and let's get out of this."

"You can change," Dick went on impetuously. "Mary, haven't you ever wanted the things that other women have—shelter and care and the big things of life, the things worth while? They're all ready for you now, Mary. And what about me? After all, you've married me. Now, it's up to you to give me my chance to make good. I've never amounted to much. I've never tried much. I shall, now, if you will have it so, Mary—if you'll help me. I will come out all right. I know that: so do you, Mary. Only you must help me. I need you, and you need me. Come away with me."

"No, no! I married you not because I loved you, but to repay your father the wrong he had done, but I wouldn't let myself even think of you, and then—I realized that I had spoiled your life."

"Don't you care for me at all?"

"No, not spoiled it, Mary! Blessed it! We must prove that yet."

"Yes, spoiled it," the wife went on passionately. "If I had understood, if I could have dreamed that I could ever care— Oh, Dick, I would never have married you for anything in the world!"

"But now you do realize," the young man said quietly. "The thing is done. If we made a mistake it is for us to bring happiness out of that error."

"Oh, can't you see?" came the stricken lament. "I'm a jailbird!"

"But you love me—you do love me, I know!" The young man spoke with joyous certainty, for some inflection of her voice had told the truth to his heart. Nothing else mattered. "But now, to come back to this hole we're in here. Don't you understand at last that you can't beat the law? If you're caught here tonight where would you get off—caught here with a gang of burglars? Why didn't you go to Chicago, as you planned?"

"Planned? With whom?"

"Why, with Burke."

"Who told you that I had arranged any such thing?"

"Burke himself did."

His Blunder

By GREGORY GIBSON

Woolcott during the summer met Miss Martindale and did a lot of spooning, with the usual result. However, the affair was not brought to a finish, and Woolcott was obliged to take a thousand mile trip for the purpose of making a proposition. He was preparing to do so when the lady wrote him that she would be at M. shortly and would be happy to receive him there. Since M. was some 900 miles nearer than her residence, Woolcott concluded to see her there instead.

Miss Martindale wrote that she would be at the Cliffs, meaning that she would visit a family of that name. Woolcott took this to mean that she would stop at a hotel. On alighting at the station he asked a man who was in a buggy where he could find the Cliffs. The man pointed to a handsome house on a hill near by. He found the baggage agent and, pointing to the house, told him to send his trunk there; then he set off to walk the distance. On arriving he opened the front door, entered a spacious hallway and saw a gentleman reading a newspaper before an open fireplace.

"The Cliffs, I believe?" said Woolcott.

The gentleman looked up at him over a pair of glasses, somewhat surprised, and replied in the affirmative.

"Are you the landlord?" asked Woolcott.

A twinkle came into the gentleman's eye, and he replied that he was the proprietor.

"I would like a room in your house for a few days," continued the traveler. "Have you a young lady staying with you of the name of Martindale?"

A light seemed to break in upon the gentleman's brain. "Miss Florence Martindale? Certainly. She arrived a few days ago. But she's out in an auto just now. She will not return till late tonight. Be seated and I'll call a servant to show you to a room."

Howard Cliff, banker, entertaining a few friends at his country residence, had sent them off in his car, remaining at home himself. He went himself for the butler, instead of ringing for him, to tell him to show a gentleman to his room who supposed he was in a hotel and who was not to be told he was in a private house. Then Mr. Cliff returned to the guest, followed by the butler, who took him upstairs. While Woolcott was making a toilet his baggage arrived and was sent up to him. When he came downstairs he found Mr. Cliff in the library.

"We have very few guests at present," said the supposed landlord. "You see, ours is a summer house, and we shall close up for the winter within a few days or a week. It depends upon how long I can keep those who are now with me. You will have to dine alone, for all have gone on the auto party."

"I don't like that," said Woolcott. "If you are alone may we not dine together?"

"Certainly."

"What wine have you?"

Mr. Cliff mentioned several kinds of wine, and his guest selected champagne. He asked for a wine card, but the host told him it was unnecessary. Woolcott regaled his host with one bottle and called for another. The dinner was delightfully served, and altogether Woolcott found the landlord a very agreeable companion. Judging by the number of foreign places he was familiar with, Woolcott thought that he must have kept hotels all over the world. Mr. Cliff suggested that, since the auto party would not return till late, perhaps Woolcott would not sit up for them. Since the latter did not relish a meeting with the lady to whom he had come to propose before others he said he thought he would go to bed.

When he went down to breakfast in the morning he met a genial party, every one of whom had been coached with regard to his reception. Miss Martindale had been horrified at the blunder he had made. She had expected him to stop at a hotel and call upon her at her friend's. But Mr. Cliff pleaded with her to permit her friend to remain in ignorance of the situation temporarily and continue to be entertained by the Cliff family.

Miss Martindale advanced with a smile, not unmingled with embarrassment, but refrained from mentioning the mistake. All sat down together to breakfast, and Woolcott thought what a charming place it would be for him to make his proposal.

He had ample opportunity, for the members of the family kept out of the couple's way, having some suspicion of the young man's errand. During the afternoon the two took a long walk and when they came back Woolcott looked very proud of himself. At dinner he remarked to Mrs. Cliff that he had never before stopped at so charming a hotel.

"Hotel!" exclaimed the lady, feigning surprise.

"Mr. Woolcott," said the host, "I have to thank you for making a mistake in taking my house for a hotel. Had you not done so I should not have had the pleasure of entertaining you."

Woolcott saw by the looks of those present, especially his fiancee, that he had blundered, but both host and hostess came to the rescue, and it was not long before he was feeling quite at home and laughing with the rest over his mistake. But it is not to be expected of a man who has won the girl he wants that he will mind a little thing like that.

Cornish Humor.

The magistrate at the Liskeard police court might well have excused the laughter which greeted the remark of a police witness only a short time ago who said with all seriousness: "He was drunk, your honor, and couldn't stand. I told him to go away, and as he wouldn't I locked him up."

The laugh in another court was against the solicitor who severely asked, "Were you present when you heard this?"

Mixed metaphors are not a peculiar nor indeed a common failing of the Cornishman, but a certain eloquent town councilor quite recently got entangled when in the course of a protracted debate on the momentous subject of the local dust bins he declared indignantly, "It is time we put our foot down with a loud voice."—English Illustrated Magazine.

ECCENTRICITY OF GENIUS.

In the Days That Are Gone It May Have Been Due to Eye Strain.

It seems that at last genius is discovered not to be allied to insanity, but that rather all its eccentricities are due to eye strain.

Brain specialists, for instance, are asserting that if Carlyle had had properly adjusted glasses and good electric light to work by instead of a skylight over his desk, and that illumined by a London fog much of the time, he would not have been such a grumbler and dyspeptic. In fact, eye strain was the cause of all his eccentricities.

All geniuses, in fact, would have been optimistic, says science now, if they had only had bifocal glasses at the right time. The same unnormal eyesight is given as the cause of many tragic paintings. That famous artist, Turner, would never have painted the slave ship in a storm, but would rather have depicted the peaceful landscapes that so many artists paint when their eyes are properly fitted with glasses.

Wagner, too, if he had worn the correct spectacles and had had that decided tilt to one eye remedied, probably would never have written about Walkyrie and dragons, but would have written pleasant dances and even ragtime instead.

Darwin also was another victim of eye strain. Doubtless he would never have given to the world his theory of evolution which stirred society up if his eyes had been normal.

De Quincey suffered from bad eyes. Surely he would never have taken opium if he had had glasses. But then, on the other hand, the world would have missed his opium dreams. And, after all is considered, scientists conclude society could better dispense with spectacles than with geniuses.—London Tit-Bits.

Her Only Thought.

The late Duke of Sutherland, who was the largest landowner in Europe, had at Dunrobin castle a small private railway line and often amused himself by driving the engine.

There is a little story that illustrates the reverence in which his highland tenants held the duke.

He was driving his little train one afternoon when he ran down an old woman. She was not seriously hurt—the amateur engineer never went very fast—and after ten or fifteen minutes she came to.

Her first words were these:

"Is the duke very angry?"

Answered.

"Do you dance on your toes, Miss Quickwit?"

"Never, Mr. Clumsey. Other people do that for me."

And he didn't know just what she meant until he tried to get another dance with her.

JUDGMENT IS RESERVED IN ACTION BROUGHT BY FARMER AGAINST COUNCIL

Justice Middleton reserved judgment in the case of George McBain, of the township of Cavan, vs. the Cavan Township, which occupied the attention of the court yesterday afternoon.

In addressing the Judge, Mr. Hellmouth contended that they wanted a declaration that the township would look after the drain, while Mr. Ruddy claimed that the Council had no power to make an agreement regarding the drain. Mr. Hellmouth for plaintiff, and Mr. Ruddy for defendants.

The following is a continuation of the evidence of the plaintiff:

"Then you say your property was not flooded then as much as it is now?"

"Yes; it has extended farther since the drain was put in."

"It was just a winter road before the drain was put in?"

"Yes."

"Were you a petitioner for the drain?"

"I was not."

"You opposed it?"

"Yes."

"You did not appeal against the drain?"

"I did not, but I applied to the Court of Revision a couple of weeks after the Council meeting."

Mr. Hellmouth object to this, contending it had no bearing on this particular question pertaining to the report of the engineer.

"What did the Court of Revision do?"

"They reduced my assessment."

"Did you oppose it before the Private Bills Committee?"

"Yes."

"Did you have any understanding?"

"No."

"Then you brought action for damages for taking away your water course?" Here a strong objection came from Mr. Hellmouth as to the question.

"That fourteen acres is in a state of nature yet?"

"Yes."

"In 1909 it was satisfactory?"

"Yes."

"They wanted you to keep it open?"

"Yes."

"You didn't?"

"No."

"How long would it take to clean it out?"

"A day, probably."

"If you had cleaned it out in the spring of 1910 you would have had water?"

"Likely."

"Did you tell the Council?"

"I told Mr. Kelly."

"Did the Council ever tell you that if you were to clean it out they would pay you for it?"

"Well, yes."

"You would rather suffer than get your pay for it?"

"The Council have stated they would not hold themselves liable?"

"Yes, they have said so."

"They made you a proposition?"

"Yes, they told me that they would fix the gates if I would keep the course clear."

"Did you drive your cows home?"

"Yes."

"How many times?"

"Well, we generally milk twice a day in the summer."

"Did you ever drive the cows down to water from this pasture at your path now?"

"Yes."

"When?"

"Can't fix the date."

"How many times?"

"I didn't count them."

"How many times?"

"Oh, a number."

"Expressly for water?"

"No."

"Your opposition to this drain has cost you considerable?"

"No."

Justice Middleton—Could you have possibly cleaned this course out in the three years?

"Yes, if it had been my obligation."

Mr. W. J. Johnston, a neighbor of Mr. McBain, said he had lived in that vicinity for about 25 years. Owing to the condition of the water course Mr. McBain was forced to take his cattle up to the barns for watering. Witness would not undergo such inconveniences for $100.

Examined by Mr. Ruddy, witness was of the opinion that it could be cleaned out. A good supply of water would be the result. He wouldn't be inconvenienced with the creek for $100 a year.

Witness admitted the drain was for McBain's accommodation.

Then, in 1911, McBain's stock wouldn't be able to get water?

"Not always."

"Did you examine the water?"

"No, but I know it was stagnant."

Jos. Sanderson, whose land adjoins Mr. McBain's, said the stream in question was a good stream before the drain construction. Only on one occasion this summer, since the new drain construction, witness said he had seen running water. The water was stagnant.

"You were opposed to the drain too," said Mr. Ruddy.

"I am not in favor of it."

"Did you see any pools of water in the easterly loop?"

"Yes."

"How many times were you there this year?"

"About five times."

"Did you look for running water?"

"I saw water when I looked for water."

"Did you see running water?"

"I did."

THE DEFENCE.

Robert Vance was the first witness for the defence. Mr. Vance was the drainage referee. He identified the report of drain he made some time ago, and shown in court. He had never considered the loops in Mr. McBain's property, at least he didn't remember. He was not particularly familiar with the loops

Chas. McNeill, who was reeve of the township at time of construction of the drain, gave evidence to the effect that the ditch was completed in the fall of 1908. During his term of office he was never approached by plaintiff. He was at the sitting of the Court of Revision. They had no intention of providing water for McBain The intake was closed and the outlet opened. In 1908 there was a free run of water. It would dam the water up if closed.

"I don't see what this easterly loop has to do with the case," objected Mr. Hell mouth, while His Honor voiced the same objection.

Mr. Ruddy—I have proof there is a living spring.

"I don't care," remarked His Honor, "a living spring may not be the best."

"Is there any damage there by the water being cut off?" questioned Mr. Ruddy.

"None whatever."

"Did you see the condition of the creek before drain construction?"

"It was rather a stagnant creek,"

"What has the ditch been like since?"

"Better."

Witness explained much of the property was beaver meadow.

Thos. Kelly said he was reeve for three years.

"What was the object of putting the words, 'without prejudice' in in the offer?" asked Mr. Ruddy.

Mr. Hellmouth objected to this question.

Witness understood there was no intention of giving Mr. McBain his water.

BANQUET OF TEACHERS AND THE OFFICERS

Last evening some 40 ladies and gentlemen, the teachers and officers of Knox Church Sunday School, sat down to a banquet in the church parlors After all the good things were enjoyed the business of the evening was taken up. An address of some length and of great interest was given by Mr. Andrew MacKenzie, who attended the Sabbath School Convention this year at Ottawa. He discussed the various departments of Sabbath school work, its organization equipment and teaching staff and gave many suggestive hints to the workers. A hearty vote of thanks was extended. Mr. Malcolm Clark, the superintendent and chairman then called on Rev. Mr. Keith. In a brief address he referred to the development of Knox Sunday school and the very excellent staff of teachers and officers at present that promised so much in the training of future leaders for the church. The gathering was dismissed shortly after 10 p.m., after a most enjoyable and helpful evening.

A DEAL IN EGGS

The case of William Scott of Peterborough Cold Storage plant in action against John Hawley was commenced this morning before Justice Middleton. Mr. Scott claims $1,979.77 as the result of loss following a deal in eggs with the defendant Hawley.

Mr Hawley denies the statement of claim and has a counter claim of $2500 for breach of contract, per condition of eggs, which he claims was responsible for loss of a number of old customers. Messrs. D. I Grant K.C. and G. Grant of Toronto, are representing the defendant, and J.H. Watson, K.C. of Toronto and Bennet and Goodwill of Peterborough for plaintiff.

The case is proceeding.

The R. U. L. Club dance will be held to-night in the C.O.F. hall, on Simcoe street.

USE BOUNDARY ROAD FOR TESTING LOCOMOTIVES

If C.G.E. Can Get This Permission the Locomotives Can be Built at the Local Works

The City Council and the Monaghan Council will meet to consider an application from the Canadian General Electric Co. to use the Boundary Road south of King St., and lay a railway track suitable for testing electric locomotives, which have been built in Schenectady because facilities for testing could not be obtained here.

Now, if the company can get the use of this road or rather one side of the road, the locomotives can be built in Peterborough.

Ald. Duncan suggested that the old Chemong road bed might be used.

REV. DR. MARSH GOES TO HOLSTEIN, ONT.

Has Accepted the Call to Take Charge of an Important Congregation

Mention was made a short time ago of the fact that Rev. Dr. Marsh, of Springville, had been favored with a call to take the pastorate of an important congregation at Holstein, Ont This centre is in the west, and a short distance north of London Ont. Dr. Marsh has decided to accept the call, which was absolutely unanimous, and will move to his new field shortly.

During his pastorate at Springville of the last eight years, he has seen the Presbyterian congregation grow from one of 48 communicants to 150 in number, while many adherents of the church have, in the course of events, removed from the neighborhood. In all respects the progress of the church has been good. He was entreated by the unanimous wish of the church to remain, but having come into this neighborhood to recruit his health and that object having been accomplished, he felt that a larger field claimed his attention.

Outside his pastorate Dr. Marsh was a helpful citizen in many ways. He was the founder of the Peterborough Centre of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, and president for several years, and afterwards secretary. His wide acquirements in the science of astronomy gave him opportunity of being exceedingly useful in keeping up and inspiring interest in those who made astronomy a study, or even a pastime. He was ever ready to do what he could to add to programs of local meetings and conventions, and has ever been a popular and well received speaker. Very many friends will regret his departure, while they wish him success in his new field. In this respect Mrs. Marsh will also be missed. Ever cordial and hospitable, she has shared, as the wife of a clergyman should share, in the pastoral work, and for herself will be missed from the church and social circles.

A Presentation

Last night at the armories the N. C.'s who have been attending the fall classes presented Sergeant Instructor Dunkerly with a pair of cuff links as a small mark of their appreciation of his work and the interest he has taken in the men's welfare for the examinations.

LOSES IN APPEAL

An appeal from the judgment of the local judge in the case of Sanderson vs. Gillespie has been dismissed at Toronto. The action was one to recover $250, claimed to be balance due on the 1st of March, 1913, on sale of stock and chattel property sold by plaintiff to defendant. At the trial the action was dismissed with costs.

F. D. Kerr appeared for the defendant.

CITY COUNCIL SESSION

The City Council in session last night made a grant of $100 towards the fund for the widows and orphans of those who lost their lives in the recent marine disaster. But there was some discussion.

Ald Green said he was not in favor of using the people's money. He held that in similar cases not one half of the money reached the intended destination.

Ald Gordon claimed that the storm signals were not regarded and that the companies should be held liable.

Ald Langford pointed out that in a local case such aid was not given.

Ald Anderson thought that a statement should be made to show how the money was distributed. In the case of the Titanic disaster, he said, an immense amount of money had been collected but no statement had been made.

OTHER GRANTS

The regular grant of $75 to the Peterboro Poultry Association was made and $25 was granted to Teachers' Institute.

WELCOME SIR JOHN

Rev. Jas. Price, of St. George's church, asked that the council receive Sir John Gibson when he comes to the city on Thursday to open the bazaar.

Mayor Bradburn felt that action such as this would create a precedent. However, Mr. Price was asked to meet the Reception Committee. Mr. Price's request to hang streamers across the street was granted

THAT SIDING

Action will be taken by the City to have a change made in the order issued by the Railway Board by which permission is given the C.P.R. to provide a siding for the Peter Hamilton Company.

At the order stands, the siding when constructed cannot be removed unless the Board so orders. This situation is not desirable to the city and the by-law passed by Council granting the application of the Peter Hamilton Company, called for the use of the siding only so long as the company continued business.

Ald Anderson explained to council last night, that it was the intention of the company to bring the siding along on their own property and not on Water street as first intended.

TROUBLE WITH WATER

J. F. Morrison, on behalf of himself and other residents on Bolivar street asked council last night to provide for the draining of water from the street.

When informed that council was short of money and asked if he could wait till next year, Mr. Morrison said he had been pleading the cause for the last three years.

He promised to meet members of the council at the street in question and discuss the matter.

THE NEW STREET

John Penrose, Sherbrooke street, and Wm. Kelly sought information regarding the proposed new street between Bolivar and Sherbrooke streets. Mr. Penrose also wanted a crossing on Sherbrooke between Park street and the Boundary.

The matter was referred to the Board of Works. Ald. Duffus and Buller had an argument over the matter and it evidently got on Ald. Johnston's nerves.

"Let's get down to business," urged Ald Johnston. "We didn't come here to do electioneering," he continued.

"Give us a chance to get a little in," answered Ald. Buller with his famous smile.

LEGAL QUESTIONS

Peck, Kerr and McElderry, the city solicitors, wrote and asked for a conveyance of the property given to the Vermont Marble Company for the erection of the factory. Council replied that before the conveyance would be made the Company must first furnish information to show that they had complied with the agreement under which the land was given.

David Conroy asked for a stay of the writ against him by the city and his request was granted. This has to do with the action by the city in regard to the sewer tangle with which he and Mr. Bogue were connected

C. E. Adams, East City, wanted to know what was being done with his claim for $500 damages. The matter was passed on to the Legal Committee.

ARBITRATOR NAMED

The Clerk reported that the Electric Power Company had named Hon. Wallace Nesbitt as their arbitrator for the arbitration proceedings in which the city is interested.

WALTON STREET DRY

Residents of Walton street petitioned for the sprinkling of the street next year. At the request of the Board of Health, Council recommended the water service be given on McDonnel street, west of Park street.

WANT JOB AS CARETAKER AT INCINERATOR

Ten Applications Before the Property Committee

Ten applications for the position of caretaker at the garbage incinerator were received by the Property Committee last night. It was decided that the chairman should make a temporary appointment. A. H. Read, the contractor, recommended the appointment of Wm. Whithers, as he has been employed on the construction work.

Ald Green favored the application of Andrew Forrest, who has had experience in firing a locomotive.

Ald. Langford and Ald. Duncan thought the job should be given to a man who had been a ratepayer for some time. "There are too many outsiders on now," remarked Ald. Duncan.

Ald. Duncan was also authorised to insure the incinerator with Mr. H. P. Lindsay.

The following applications were received:

Wm. Fair, 566 Sherbrooke street, recommended by Sanitary Inspector Spence.
James Armstrong, 57 Hunter St.
Wm. Whithers, 617 Bethune St., recommended by Mr. Read, the contractor.
Andrew Forrest, Downie street, recommended by Mr. H. Evans.
Samuel Martin.
A. E. Naish, 137 London street.
Edward Tighe, Donegal street.
J. W. Edwards, 485 Sherbrooke street.
Alfred Helson, well recommended.
Wm. Seward, 169 Perry street.

The report made to Council was adopted.

THE PETERBOROUGH DAILY EVENING REVIEW

"Why Spend Money on Missions? When The Money Is Needed at Home"

Frank Criticisms of the Laymen's Missionary Campaign.

Both Sides of the Missionary Movement

Arguments For and Against---What Do You Think of Them?

EVERY YEAR THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS ARE RAISED BY THE MEMBERS OF THE PROTESTANT CHURCHES OF PETERBORO' TO PROMOTE THE CAUSE OF HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONS. NEXT WEEK A SIMULTANEOUS EVERY MEMBER CANVASS WILL BE MADE IN THESE CHURCHES FOR A MARKED INCREASE IN MISSION GIVINGS. THERE ARE SOME PEOPLE WHO SAY THAT THEY DO NOT BELEIVE IN THIS MOVEMENT. THEY DOUBT THE SINCERETY OF THOSE WHO ARE BEHIND IT. THEY CLAIM THAT THE MONEY CAN BE SPENT TO BETTER ADVANTAGE FOR OTHER PURPOSES. READ WHAT SOME OF THESE CRITICS SAY AND WHAT CHURCH WORKERS REPLY.

"The heathen are happy in their religions, why disturb them? They are all right if they act up to their lights."—While there is much that is good in heathen religions there is more that is bad. None of them take any account of women. All are more or less immoral in their teaching. In the Hindu triad, or sacred trinity of gods, for instance, not one has an untarnished moral record. There is not one of the three deities who has not committed adultery. The stories of the sensuality and impurity of the gods as recorded in the sacred books and told by its votaries have polluted the imagination of the people. Such religions have no power to give men victory over the sins that enter all our lives. History proves that no other religion can do this but Christianity.

"There are thousands of people in all our cities who are not Christians. Let us Christianize them first."—These people have opportunities to become Christians whenever they desire. There are churches all around them. They are free to attend the services in these churches, to consult their ministers, whenever they wish. If they do not not know about Christ and His teachings it is because they have not taken the trouble to find out. Peterborough has a population of about 20,000. There is a church or mission hall for every 1,000 people. In North Honan, China, there is only one missionary for every 300,000 heathen. Thousands of these Chinese—as the history of missions proves—would gladly become Christians did they have the opportunity. Similar conditions exist in portions of India and Africa. Experience proves that much larger returns may be obtained for the expenditure of a given sum in foreign missions than in trying to reach people in our home cities who refuse to listen when an effort is being made to reach them. Business men who give their money for a definite purpose desire to have their money expended in a manner that will ensure a maximum of results. Therefore, many of them stipulate that a certain proportion at least of their offerings shall be expended for foreign missions.

"Let us pay off the debts on our churches and strengthen them first."—If you were living comfortably in a house partly paid for and saw men around you suffering from the lack of any houses at all, would you not feel called on to help them! That is the way Christians feel about the millions of heathen who have neither churches or missionaries, and who are suffering from the lack of both. A professing Christian who insisted on spending money on himself first when he knew that there were others who needed it infinitely more, would dishonor the cause he claimed to support.

"Do not the givings for foreign misions cripple the work of our home churches?"—The experience of thousands of churches proves that the impulse which leads a man to give money for the benefit of the heathen impels him to see that no equally needy cause is neglected at home. An increase in the givings for foreign missions is invariably attended by an increase in the givings for the purposes of the home church. "The light that shines the farthest shines the brightest nearest home."

"Foreign nations have never spent any money on us: Why should we spend money on them?"—Were it not for the work of the first missionaries we might all be heathen, like the Chinese or natives of Africa and India. In the time of Christ our ancestors were the heathen people of northern Europe. During the first few centuries after the birth of Christ the early missionaries instead of going east to India and China, turned west and north. Thus, in time, our ancestors and the nations to which we belong, were Christianized. Had these missionaries turned east instead of west and north, the people of India and China might have been the Christian people to-day and we might have been the heathen. Seeing that we have not earned the great benefits we enjoy is it not our duty now to extend them to others? "Freely ye have received, freely give."

"Foreign missions never made a real Christian of a heathen, and never will."—In most heathen countries when a native becomes a Christian his friends cast him off; his family disown him. Yet thousands and thousands of native Christians have given up all that they held dear in order that they might be true to the teachings of Christ. In Uganda native Christians were horribly mutilated and hacked to pieces. Thirty-two were slowly burned to death on one great pyre. In all some 200 native Christians perished rather than renounce their faith. In China during the Boxer rebellion thousands of native Christians suffered death and torture rather than prove untrue to their profession. In both countries, as well as in others, the heroism of these native Christians ultimately led thousands of others to become Christians. Japan now recognizes Christianity as one of the three great religions of the country and encourages its teachings. Many of her leading statesmen are professing Christians. China recently issued an appeal to the Christian people of the world to unite in a special day of prayer for the success of the new republic. The history of missions reveals many triumphs such as these.

WHISTLER'S ODD WAYS.

A Portrait That Was Slashed as Soon as It Was Painted.

Lord Redesdale once gave a description of Whistler's methods to a meeting in London in support of a memorial to the great artist. The eccentric master was painting, he said, a portrait of a lady.

Whistler took up his position at one end of the room with his sitter and the canvas at the other end. For a long time he stood looking at his model, holding in his hand a huge brush full of color, such a brush as a man would use to whitewash a house. Then he rushed forward and smashed the brush full of color into the canvas. Then he ran back, and forty or fifty times he repeated this. At the end of that time there stood out on the canvas a space which exactly indicated the figure, the form and the expression of the sitter.

There was a pathetic story attached to the picture. The bailiffs were in the house when the picture was finished. That was quite a common occurrence, and Whistler only laughed, but he went around his studio with a knife and deliberately destroyed all his canvases, including this picture, which was to have been his (Lord Redesdale's).—Dundee Advertiser.

Banquets In Elizabeth's Time.

In Queen Elizabeth's time the first course of a banquet is given as wheaten flummery, stewed broth or spinach broth, or smallage, gruel or hotch pot. The second consisted of fish, among which are lampreys, poor John, stockfish and sturgeon, with side dishes of porpoise. The third course comprised quaker puddings, black puddings, bag puddings, white puddings and marrow puddings. Then came veal, beef, capons, humble pie, mutton, marrow pasties, Scotch collops, wild fowl and game. In the fifth course all kinds of sweets, creams in all their varieties, custards, cheese cakes, jellies, warden pies, suckets, sillibubs and so on, to be followed perhaps by white cheese and tansy cake; for drinks, ale, beer, wine, sack and numerous varieties of mead or metheglin.

The navigation school of the Royal Technical College at Glasgow is claimed to be the most perfectly equipped institution of the kind in the world.

Prof. Grant, of Queen's University, delivered a very fine lecture at the Normal School last night, in dealing with Boundary disputes with the United States.

K.O.C. Players Lost

In one of the hardest fought games of forty-fives that was ever played in St. Alphonsus Lyceum, the West End Pleasure Club last evening defeated the Knights of Columbus. For the past few weeks the K.C.'s have considered themselves unbeatable, but the Westerners came through with an easy win and as a result the St. Vincent Orphanage is to receive a barrel of flour from the Knights of Columbus.

The table where the closest battle was fought consisted of Dr. McNulty, D. Sheehy, and J. Carroll for the Knights, and J. J. Lynch, Geo. A'Hearne and A. Sharpe for the W. E. P. C. At full time they were a tie and amid great enthusiasm the latter won the play off.

FATHER GREAT PIPE.

Eccentric Will of the Famous Dutch Smoker, Von Klaes.

In "Holland of the Dutch" Demetrius Boulger tells the story of the famous Van Klaes of Rotterdam, who was known as "Father Great Pipe."

Van Klaes smoked about half a pound of tobacco a day and to save himself trouble used an enormous pipe, hence his nickname. He built a mansion in Rotterdam, with a fortune amassed in the Indies, and turned it into a museum for pipes and antique instruments used by primitive man for burning hemp or weeds long before the discovery of tobacco. No man who visited his curios went away without a gift of choice cigars. He lived to be ninety-eight and made, while smoking, an eccentric will, which began by inviting all smokers in the country to his funeral.

Each person who attended was to receive ten pounds of tobacco and two pipes bearing the name of the donor, his arms and the date of his death, but he imposed the condition that they should smoke without interruption during the funeral ceremony. Finally his coffin was to be lined with the wood of his old cigar boxes, and beside him were to be placed his favorite pipe, a supply of tobacco and a box of matches, for, as the will sententiously sets forth, no one knows what may happen.

A VOICE FROM THE WEST

Edmonton, Alberta,
November 21, 1913

Dear Editor— Having left the East about six months ago and having taken up my residence in this city I feel that some of my friends and others in your vicinity might appreciate a few words giving my impressions of the West and the progress that is made here.

The old saying "go West, young man," I believe holds as true to-day and more so, than ever in the history of the West. The West stands ever ready to welcome the man with ordinary capabilities and as I look over the vast opportunities of this country, I cannot but feel that anyone with ordinary capabilities is bound to succeed.

I picked on Edmonton as my home because I believe in the future of it. Speaking of the climate, I have no hesitancy in saying that it is the most delightful of any place in Western Canada, and in my mind it is probably the finest in our whole Dominion. We have more sunshine here than in any place I have ever struck and when we speak of sunny Alberta, we strike the right chord. It is true that during the few summer months, we have considerable rain but the autumns are most delightful. At the time of writing we are enjoying the finest sunshine and it is likely that this weather will continue till the end of the year.

Your readers will, no doubt, be interested in the progress that this city is making. Some of them have no doubt, been here, but at the same time, I think that many of your readers have just a vague idea of this city and the surrounding country. We have at the present time a population estimated at 70,000—over 25,000 of which have come here during the last eighteen months. One is liable to give these figures a mere passing notice, but on closer study, we cannot but be amazed at this large number being added to one city's population in so short a time. The meaning of this can be better grasped by imagining the addition of such a number of people to some of the smaller Ontario cities in one year. That holds true of the population holds equally true of the developments in and around the city. We cannot house such a vast number of people without a tremendous expenditure. As a result of this large influx of population, the building line has been particularly brisk. Travelling about the city, we find whole streets being built up with houses in the course of a few months and only when you see this activity in the building line carried on in every part of the city, can you realize what the house problem means. I might state here, however that the severe financial stringency which extends over the whole globe, has checked the building activities in a limited way, but in spite of financial stringencies, this city is bound to expand very rapidly. As houses are erected, the facilities must be extended. One need only look at the expenditure passed by the City Council during the past year to realize the enormity of the public works carried on. Water, sewer and pavements are being extended in every direction as fast as men can be obtained to carry out the work. Street railway lines are being built to serve the outlying districts and in a few short months we find these car lines surrounded by a thickly populated district.

Being populated so rapidly, the electric light system must be extended as well as the telephone. All these utilities are owned by the city, and this accounts for the many millions of dollars that are being spent from time to time. I might mention in this connection that this city has been a firm believer in Municipal ownership, as is evidenced by the fact that all public utilities are municipally owned and operated.

In spite of the fact that developments have been marvellous, I believe that we are only on the brink of much greater things. This city is surrounded with one of the finest mixed farming districts in the country, and in addition to this is taking its place as a distributing centre. When we look at the railroad facilities, we find that Edmonton has not been as fortunate as some of the other cities, on account of it being a terminus of two large railroads, and on what you might call a branch line of the C.P.R. By the expenditure of millions, the G.T.P. and the C.N.R. are pushing their lines through British Columbia. The C.N.R., running in a south-westerly direction, will run into Vancouver, while the G.T.P. is building due west into one of the richest districts in the Dominion—the Fort George district. Its terminus will be Prince Rupert, and with the completion of this road practically a new Empire is being opened, namely, Central British Columbia. It is predicted that by August of 1914, both of these Transcontinental roads will be completed. At that time thousands of tourists will pass through this city en route for the Coast, and this alone will attract many more permanent settlers, and thereby help make this city a better one. Furthermore, Edmonton is the gateway to the great Peace River country, which is attracting thousands of settlers, and with the advent of the railroad into this district, Edmonton is bound to progress as rapidly as as surely as Winnipeg did when the country west of it was opened. A great many more things could be said about the city and the surrounding country, but in a short letter of this kind, I can only touch on a few of the things. Any of your readers desiring information about this district, will be given free and full information by addressing a postal to the Publicity Commissioner of this city.

In conclusion, I repeat that I like the West because of its vastness and its possibilities for development. I like this city because I believe in it and I believe in it because of its permanent growth and the future that lies before it.

Trusting that this may be of interest to some of your readers, and thanking you for this valuable space in your paper, I am,

Yours truly,
A. C. CARVETH.

THE "OUT-PATIENTS."

The Montreal General Hospital Has 15,000 of Them Every Year.

The out-patient department has been a leading feature of the Montreal General Hospital for well-nigh one hundred years, or more explicitly, from its foundation in 1821. The hospital has just added greatly to its facilities for attending to this branch of its work by the establishment on the ground floor of the commodious and modern wing to the east of, and adjoining the old building. Here come every day hundreds of people, poor, unfortunate, afflicted, needy, for the care of the healing hands of the surgeon and physician and none are turned coldly away, even if they have not a cent in their pockets. Here in the course of a year sixty-five to seventy thousand visits are paid by fifteen thousand patients, each coming on an average, four or five times. The only charges are five cents for registration, and five cents for the bottle which contains their medicine handed out at the dispensary. Here is stationed a nurse to follow up certain cases in the homes and to arrange for monetary relief when destitution renders relief necessary and to check cases where charity is likely to be undergoing abuse. All this work is maintained from the hospital fund which is maintained by private subscriptions.

Passing through the temporary entrance in the north end of the outdoor department the patient goes to a suite of offices where a nurse sees and sends him to his clinic. The names of all who present themselves for treatment are inscribed on cards and properly indexed while another set of indexed cards contains observations on their calls and case. Here they receive instructions where to go and pass to the waiting enclosure for their turn, if they are new cases. The old cases sit upon benches till a man calls out their names. The waiting room will contain about three hundred persons.

Supposing his case is a surgical one, and the great majority of cases are, the patient proceeds to the surgeon's receiving room in the extreme eastern wing. Here are found the chief of clinic and his assistants. Men are sent to rooms on his right and the women to rooms on his left for private examination. Here are also the dressing rooms for male and female patients, one across the hall from the other and the female one being on the south side. Then there is a nurse's office and supply room. Next is the general operating room used also for troubles of the nose, throat, eye and ear. A complete sterilizing outfit is in another room. Then are the rooms for recovery from anesthetics. On the north side is a special sanitary tiled room for suppurating cases, then the series of rooms for skin and venereal diseases. These open into a large demonstrating theatre for skin diseases, next a room for nose and throat troubles with a dark room for the examination of special cases. The nose and throat room is beautifully fitted up from a surgical point of view. Noticeable especially, are many steel enamelled nose and throat chairs.

Between the east and west wings in the centre is where the patient gets his cards and a doctor's prescription, has it filled at the dispensary, pays five cents for the bottle, and passed out into St. Dominique street.

The west wing is for medical cases. The patient goes down a long corridor and enters the main medical clinic. There is a central receiving room, three rooms on one side and three on the other for the examination of cases, a theatre for teaching medicine. A series of four rooms and bathroom are provided for diseases of women. Next is a clinic for the nerve specialist, and you pass through a fire wall into the old building. You then find two big rooms for eye and ear cases, a dark room and a group of five rooms devoted to orthopaedics.

Testing the Iron.

The laundress puts a little saliva on the flatiron to see if it is hot enough. If it runs along the iron rapidly it is hot enough, but if it sticks to the bottom and is evaporated the iron is too cold. The reason is that if hot enough the bottom of the drop of saliva is converted into vapor and the drop rolls along the iron rapidly; if too cold the drop sticks and evaporates gradually.

MUSICAL PETERBOROUGH TWO EVENTS LAST EVENING

Morning Musical Society and St. Georges Choral Society Carrying on the Good Work

Within a few years Peterborough will be one of the liveliest musical centres in Ontario. All kinds of musical societies are springing up among all kinds of people. Every church has its musical coterie, and our city church choirs are of the best. Scarcely one evening of the week passes without some concert or recital.

This advancement is due to the enthusiasm and enterprise of local individual musicians of high talent and attainment, and of these Peterborough has more than it realizes.

Among the many agencies for musical education in the city is the "Morning Musical Society," which held its open meeting last evening at the Conservatory parlor. This musical circle is composed entirely of ladies, and its purpose is to study the lives and works of the great master musicians.

Papers were read last evening on "Beethoven" by Mrs. Rollins; "Elgar' by Mrs. Allans; "Mendelssohn" by Mrs. Walker. After each paper, piano and violin solos were played by various members, and vocal solos and duets were also rendered, all these illustrative of the work of the three composers dealt with. A very enjoyable, as well as instructive evening was spent.

ST. GEORGE'S CHORAL

Another musical event of a differend character and on a much larger scale was the Autumn Concert of the St. George's Choral Society, held in the Collegiate Hall last evening. This society has been working hard for some time on "Judas Macabeus" and this is the first public occasion upon which they have given a sample of their work this season. Mr. Devey, the director, is to be congratulated upon his success in getting so large a number of voices together and for the way in which he has trained them. It is to such pioneer work among the people that we owe the cultivation and development of the taste for classical song.

A splendid programme was arranged. Choruses from Handel's "Messiah" being rendered by the large choir. "Lift up your heads," "Mourn ye Afflicted," "See the Conquering Hero Comes," "The Glory of the Lord, these were accomplished with great spirit and effect. "A Fantasia of Nautical Airs" was very well done. An amusing quartet was sung and performed by Mrs. Rush. Miss Alexander, Messrs. Jones and Dickson, entitled "Propundo Basso." Various solos were also sung by Miss Greenhalch, Mr. E. Jones, Mr. G. Harris and others. A Part Song "The Village Blacksmith," was particularly good. Miss Cullen sang "When the Heart is Young" very acceptably.

Mr Devey's object in last night's concert was to give new singers a chance, and in this he is doing an educative work.

Miss M. Flowers was the accompanistc for the evening.

OBITUARY

The Late Mrs. Bird

Mrs. Margaret Bird, aged 96 years, who has for years been a resident of this city, passed away last night in Nicholls Hospital.

The funeral will take place, privately, from the residence of Mr. S. McKee, 559 Water street, tomorrow afternoon to the Little Lake Cemetery. Service at the house at 1.30.

The ground about a plant or shrub should be frozen to a depth of at least two inches before winter protection is applied .

CHURCH NEAR HELL'S GATE

For Services During Summer Season at Stoney Lake

In the close vicinity to Hell's Gate, Stony Lake, an Anglican church is being erected and will be ready for occupation next season.

It will be a frame structure and will be built by public subscriptions. Accommodation is to be provided for 130 people and all denominations will be invited to service.

Rev. A. W. McKenzie, of the Grove School at Lakefield, reported this morning through Mr. F. M. Dela Fosse that the foundation was commenced yesterday.

NOTIFIED OF HIS MOTHER'S DEATH

Word was received last night by Mr. Frank Christopher, 480 Parnell street, to the effect that his mother, Mrs. Joseph Christopher, of the city of Combasso, Italy, passed away at her home on November 20th, and was buried on November 23rd. Mr. Christopher is the only relative in America.

AKEY'S LIVERY STABLE GUTTED BY FIERCE BLAZE

Fire last night gutted the livery stable on Chambers Street, conducted by James Akey. It is supposed that the blaze originated from electric wiring. It was first noticed by Claude Fleetwood, driver for the Dominion Express Company.

Mr Akey was in the office at the time and when he heard Fleetwood's alarm he rushed to the stable which is in the rear of the building. There were twenty-three horses in the barn and all were taken out unharmed. The only equipment destroyed was a quantity of harness. Hay valued at $400 was consumed.

Mr. Akey is grateful for the assistance given by friends, and also the fire department. The total loss is in the neighborhood of $2,000.

The chief and firemen are very grateful to all those who assisted them. Special mention might be made of Adjutant McElheney, who is chaplain to the fire hall; Captain Spencely and three fellow members of the De Laval brigade, and Alderman J. J. Duffus. These men worked untiringly and stayed till after three o'clock.

JAS. BOGUE GETS CONTRACT FOR LAKEFIELD POST OFFICE

The contract for the new Post Office at Lakefield has been awarded to James Bogue, the local contractor. Mr. J. A. Sexsmith secured an appropriation for the building and the people of Lakefield will now be provided with an up-to-date Post Office for which they have long been waiting.

Mr Bogue is at Lindsay working on the new armory.

NOW IS THE TIME TO BUY MATTRESSES

November 27, 28 and 29, we shall display on our floor and in our windows the complete line of the famous "Ideal" Felt Mattresses

And for the first time in Canada we shall show the new patent "NEVERSPRED" Mattress.

The patent on the "Neverspred" is the most ingenious device we have ever seen. We can't explain it in words, you must come in and have it demonstrated.

We shall also show the "HARINFELT" Mattress.

This Mattress combines the good qualities of both hair and felt mattresses. There is an increased ventilating power to these mattresses, because the alternate layers of hair and felt act as a bellows as soon as weight is placed upon it. Not only so, but the "Harinfelt" cannot mat, and so the mattress will never become hard or lumpy.

You will also be interested in the showing of the more moderately priced "ROYAL EGYPTIAN" and "DIXIE" Mattresses.

Moreover, our prices on all these lines are marked down to a figure which is most attractive to you.

Come in and see the display and at the same time note our special showing of "Ideal" brass and steel beds, coil and woven wire springs and babies' cribs.

This is, we believe, the best display of mattresses, beds and bedding that has ever been put before the people of Peterborough.

BURLEIGH FALLS POWER LEASE SAID TO BE CANCELLED

Return of Power Property to the People is Possible

WORTH $750,000

Giving Lease at Nominal Figure Was Work of Laurier Government

The Review is informed to-day that the Ottawa Government has cancelled the lease given by the late government to Mr. Culverwell and others of the Burleigh power. The lease was given originally for one dollar per year for fifty years and entitled the leasee to all the surplus water which was to be handled by the government in the leasee's interests .

Various other favorable powers were attached. It has been assigned with the consent of the Laurier Government at various times, but that government got no further recompense for it. If this report is true and it is believed to be so, this splendid power will again come back to the people. It is well known that Lovesick Lake is to be raised four feet, which will mean an immense addition to the power. The cancellation of the lease will be worth at least three quarters of a million to the public.

The public got one dollar a year for fifty years by the terms of the lease and that was all it got. Moreover the government had to maintain the dam, etc. It is difficult to estimate the immense advantage this act of the Borden Government will mean. A change of government and members works for the people's benefit sometimes. The government may feel obliged to return the dollar a year so far as paid, but certainly no more.

AWARD OF $500 IN BREACH OF PROMISE CASE

Defendant Must Also Pay Costs—Plaintiff Asked $500

Damages of $500 was awarded the plaintiff, Miss Ellen E. Smart, in the breach of promise case which came before Justice Middleton yesterday afternoon at the High Court sittings. During the year of 1912 and the winter and following spring, the plaintiff was employed by a farmer in Cavan by the name of Sanderson.

The defendant was also employed by the same party and it was there the promise, it is alleged, of marriage was made.

Mr R. E. Wood represented the plaintiff, who claimed $1,000.

LAURIER HAS NEW SLOGAN AT HAMILTON BANQUET

Change of Tactics on Part of Opposition Is Indicated by Stress Laid on the High Cost of Living—Fielding Tariff Not For All Time Declares Sir Wilfrid and Advocates a General Reduction.

HAMILTON, Nov. 27.—The expected change in front of the Liberal party of Canada came here last night when the anti-Dreadnought slogan was relegated to a secondary place and the leaders at the Liberal Club Federation banquet issued a cry for cheap food and the cutting down of food tariffs. The concern of Canadians was not the price of Dreadnoughts but the cost of feeding a family, declared Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the guest of honor, and the Liberals assembled echoed the sentiment with fervor.

The autonomy of Canada was asserted and the action of the Borden Cabinet, in its entire administration subjected to ruthless censure. The navy question was branded as a football which the Government had bandied about with careless abandon. The emergency was characterised as non-existent. If it had been the Liberals to a man would have voted for the passing of the $30,000,000 subscription.

W. B. Preston, as toastmaster, welcomed the occasion as one marking the adaptation of historic principles to the twentieth century systems. In the young men of the country the Opposition found its opportunity. There the youth of the day was the backbone of national enterprise.

Sir Wilfrid received an enthusiastic ovation on rising to speak. The naval question, he said, had been complicated by the actions of the Conservative party, who played with it as with a football, knicking it one way and kicking it another way to suit the exigencies of the moment or the temper of the audience.

The question was not free from difficulties, and those difficulties were enhanced and made worse by the position of the nations of Europe. "The condition of Europe to-day," he said, "is a disgrace and a shame to the civilization of the twentieth century. Europe to-day is an armed camp. The leading nations of Europe—England, Germany, France, Austro-Hungary, Russia, Italy — each of these nations is spending upon its armament from one-third to over half of its revenue. Yet there is not at present among these nations any discord.

"They are friendly, I say, but they are distrustful of one another, and it is because they are distrustful that they dare not act as between man and man and say 'let us be friends.' That is what they call the European concert; I would call it a furnace. And there are men who want us as Canadians to step into that furnace.

"Speaking as a Liberal to Liberals, I believe, nay, I feel certain, I am convinced in my mind and heart, the policy which has been followed by the Liberal party upon the ground of absolute autonomy is the only policy that will be acceptable to the Canadian people.

"It is true I might say something about reciprocity," commented Sir Wilfrid, "but I have no recriminations to make. The problem is before us. Let us bury the past and look to the future. There our duty lies. The situation requires action, prompt, unhesitating action. The policy I give you at this moment, the policy I believe every patriot in Canada ought to now support, and the policy I believe it to be the duty of the Government to immediate inaugurate, is a policy of absolutely free food—food free from customs duty.

"It will be said to me," the Liberal chief said, "if you advocate that policy do you not advocate a revision of the tariff to that extent. Certainly I do.

"Somebody will say that the tariff which is in force to-day is the Fielding tariff of 1897. So it is, but the Fielding tariff was made for the needs of that time, not for all eternity. It has been the policy of the Liberal party at all times to stand up far as possible for stability in tariff, but when the needs of the people call for action, action must be taken."

"Stand to your ideals. Stand fast, stand true. Fulfill the great duties that belong to British citizenship. Keep your ideal before you like the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night which guided the people of God from the tribulations of bondage to the promised land.

"Let my last word be this: Let us all together, old and young, join hands, gird our loins, buckle on our armor, unfurl our standard, and go forward together in service, in earnest, whole-hearted, unselfish service for Canada first, Canada last, and Canada forever."

Mr. Rowell followed, dealing especially with Ontario politics and problems and was given a warm reception.

DYNAMITED PLANT

Striking Copper Miners Sought to Destroy Compressor House

CALUMET, Mich., Nov. 27.—The Michigan copper mine strike took a serious turn again last night when an attempt was made to blow up the compressor house at the Ahmeek mine. A heavy charge of dynamite was exploded by a time fuse, but the force of the explosion was spent outside the building, and the most serious damage consisted of shattered windows in the compressor house and at No. 1 and No. 2 shafts, one hundred feet distant.

Both shafts resumed operations this week. It is believed that the compressor machinery was uninjured.

Within two hundred feet of the explosion is a bunk house, occupied by mine guards. Officers think that those who planned the dynamiting expected the explosion would destroy the bunk house as well as the compressor.

PEACEFUL SITUATION IN THE MEXICAN OILFIELDS

U. S. Officer Sent to Tuxpam Finds No Necessity For Landing Troops—Result of Rebel Victory May Be the Recognition of Carranza as De Facto President of Mexico—Protecting El Paso.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27—The rout of the Mexican federals near Juarez by the Constitutionalist forces and a wireless report from Rear-Admiral Fletcher indicating that conditions in the oil regions near Tuxpam were not as threatening as previously had been reported held the interest of official Washington yesterday in the Mexican situation.

The wireless message to the navy department from Admiral Fletcher, who left Vera Cruz on the battleship Rhode Island late Monday night with John Lind, the special American envoy, to investigate alleged threatening conditions in the oil districts of Tuxpam and Tampico, brought evident relief to officials here. The admiral's report regarding the Tuxpam field, where British and American interests are situated, gave indications that no immediate aggressive action on the part of the United States to furnish protection would be necessary.

The border situation, as a result of the vigorous operations near Juarez and the possibility of another siege of the border city aroused the war department to action to afford ample protection for El Paso and the neighboring border territory, and late yesterday orders were issued for the movement from Fort Douglas, Utah, to El Paso of the Twentieth U. S. Infantry, which will be used to preserve order within the city limits.

It was suggested last night that one important result of the rebel victory at Juarez might be to bring into greater prominence the question of recognition by the U. S. Government of Gen. Carranza's constitutional party as the de facto government of Northern Mexico. Now that Gen. Carranza can claim that his party is in practical possession of all the northern states of Mexico it is expected that he will comply with the further requirements of international law by setting up on a permanent capital at Hermosillo or Magdalena, and completing the organization of his provisional government.

Rebel Triumph Complete.

EL PASO, Nov. 27.—Villa's army, returning from its battle at Mesa, began arriving in Juarez shortly before noon, the men in good spirits and well supplied with ammunition which they had captured from the federals.

Fifteen captured federal field pieces and 15 machine guns were brought to Juarez at about the same time the rebel army commenced coming in. A troop review, which was in the nature of a triumphal parade, was at once started and was reviewed by Gen. Villa from an automobile.

Four train loads of federal prisoners, numbering more than 400, it was said, were brought to Juarez at 11 o'clock, Gen. Villa accompaying them in a special car. It was stated that all former rebels who were found among the captives were executed on the field of battle.

It is claimed most of the cars used in transporting the prisoners to Juarez were captured from the federals.

Tins can be cleaned with soap and whiting, rubbed on with a piece of flannel.

TASK IS STUPENDOUS.

Railway Rates Case at Ottawa an Ocean of Figures.

OTTAWA, Nov. 27.—Some idea of the big task of deciding what reductions shall be made in the freight rates in the west was given before the Railway Commission yesterday afternoon, after F. H. Chrysler, K.C., acting for the C.P.R., got going in his cross-examination of the Government expert, J. P. Muller. They waded into the acres of figures which are enclosed in six big volumes, when the solicitor for the railway company sought to prove that while these figures were all right, and the many pages devoted to the C.P.R. were quite accurate they didn't prove anything, that is, as regards how much real profits the company was making.

The combination so mysterious to the laymen, "operating ratio," which really means the ratio of the expenditure to the revenue was the centre of most of to-day's activity. The report of Mr. Muller had shown that the amount of revenue of the C.P.R. in proportion to the expenditure, was much greater in the four divisions west of Port Arthur than they were in four divisions east of that point—the system is divided into eight divisions. The gross profit on the cost of operation in the system west of Port Arthur is 66.56 per cent., while the gross profit on the system east of Port Arthur is 35.87 per cent.

Mr. Muller says this shows that the railway is making much more profits in the west than in the east.

PRINCE IS DEAD

Son of Matabele King Was Miner Near Manchester

LONDON, Nov. 27.—Prince Lobengula, the son of the famous King of Matabeleland, who caused the British Government so much trouble in the eighties of the last century, died in poverty in a humble dwelling at Pendleton, near Manchester, which he had been occupying with his white wife and their four children. He was 37 years of age.

After the Matabele war he came to England, and performed in an African show, afterwards playing a part in the pantomime "Robinson Crusoe," in which he personated "Man Friday."

For some years he had been working in a coal mine, and death was caused by consumption, which was accelerated by the fumes of the underground workings.

He once appealed for aid to King Edward and the Colonial Office, but his petition was ignored.

Two Cruisers For Fish Poachers.

OTTAWA, Nov. 27.—Two fast cruisers have been built in Dublin and fitted with high speed Glasgow engines to the order of the Canadian Government, to stamp out poaching by American and Japanese vessels in the Canadian fisheries on the British Columbia coast. The value of British Columbia fisheries has been greatly impaired by these poachers, and there was no vessel on the Canadian coast speedy enough to cope with them.

The first of these vessels will reach Victoria, B.C., by way of Cape Horn about the end of the year and the second one about a month later. The ships cost $150,000 each.

GIVEN SIX YEARS.

Robert Gordon, Who Slew Father, Pleads Guilty to Manslaughter.

GODERICH, Ont., Nov. 27.—Six years in Kingston Penitentiary was the sentence passed upon Robert Gordon at the Huron County Assizes yesterday morning for the killing of his father, Hugh Gordon, a well-known farmer of the Township of McKillop, on April 23 last. The grand jury brought in a true bill for murder, but by an arrangement between the crown prosecutor, Dudley Holmes, K.C., of Wingham, and counsel for the prisoner, the indictment was changed to manslaughter, and the prisoner pleaded guilty.

Robert Gordon and his father, Hugh Gordon, had been plowing on their farm on the day of the tragedy, and on drawing his team into their barn young Gordon struck one of the horses with a strap. This angered the father, who rushed at the son, and the latter picked up an iron bar and dealt his father a fatal blow on the head.

Mr. Justice Britton, who presided upheld the grand jury in its return of the true bill, saying it was perfectly right. Using such a weapon as Gordon had on his father, even in hasty temper, would have warranted a true bill, said the judge. In pronouncing sentence he said he was doing it first as punishment for the prisoner and second as an example to prevent a recurrence of a similar act.

Warspite Is Launched.

DEVONPORT, Eng., Nov. 27.—The British super-dreadnought battleship Warspite, an improvement on the Queen Elizabeth, was launched here yesterday in the presence of an enormous crowd. She is to be driven entirely by oil engines, and has receptacles for the storage of 4,000 tons of liquid fuel, sufficient to enable her to go round the world.

The armament of the Warspite will consist of eight 15-inch guns and several anti-air guns.

She was laid down on Oct. 31, 1912, and her estimated cost when completed is $14,000,000.

Workman's Fatal Fall.

PORT COLBORNE, Nov. 27.—Petro Pignatte, an Italian, aged 34 years, was killed yesterday morning by falling through the roof on the new addition to the Government elevator, in course of construction. He leaves a widow and three children in Italy.

What a Child Needs Most.

It is not, after all, a smattering of chemistry or an acquaintance with the habits of bees which will carry our children through life, but a capacity for doing what they do not want to do, if it be a thing which needs to be done. They will have to do many things they do not want to do later on, if their lives are going to be worth the living, and the sooner they learn to stand to their guns the better for them and for all those whose welfare will be in their hands.

The Bane of Curiosity.

"Curiosity has been the bane of womankind ever since the first apple was ripe," declared Bulger as he stormed out of the house and slammed the door behind him.

On the way down to his office he stopped ten minutes to see a man replace an automobile tire, seven minutes to watch a steeplejack painting a church spire and fifteen minutes to catch sight of a noted actress who was expected to come out of a hotel side door.

HE FOILED SIX BANK ROBBERS

Masked Men Enter B. N. A. Branch, But Manager Closed Safe Door

VANCOUVER, B.C., Nov. 27.—Six masked men, heavily armed, entered the Agassiz branch of the Bank of British North America and attempted to hold up manager and celrks, but owing to the quickness of Manager A. McCallum the robbers were forced to decamp without getting any money.

They are now being pursued by a posse of provincial and special police, and it was reported over the telephone yesterday they were surrounded in the woods.

Just as the bank was about to close Tuesday the six men appeared suddenly before McCallum and his clerks. The manager was near the open door, and as the leader of the gang approached and demanded money, presenting a heavy calibre rifle, he stepped suddenly forward and struck the gun from the robber's hand and reached forward and slammed the heavy door closed. The men then ran for the nearby woods.

SIR JAMES ON HOLIDAY.

He Liked His Last So Well He Will Take Some More.

TORONTO, Nov. 27.—For some time past Sir James P. Whitney, Prime Minister of Ontario, has been ill and during the past few days has absented himself from his office. Last night the following statement was given out by Sir James: "I have not been well and I have taken recreation and a holiday and feel that I have benefitted considerably by them. So much so that it is my intention to make some more without any particular notice being given. With regard to the nature of my proposed recreation, I would not care to say anything."

Big Harbor Work Begins.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—Contracts for the construction work of a great harbor at Blacksod Bay, County Mayo, on the west coast of Ireland, are being completed and signed in London to-day, according to The Pall Mall Gazette. This work is being undertaken in furtherance of a scheme for the establishment of a new line of steamers running between Blacksod Bay and Halifax and Boston. A new railroad to connect Blacksod Bay with the already existing railroads in Ireland is also to be constructed. Henry C. Long, a Boston engineer, is to have charge of the work.

Bigamist Sentenced.

NEWCASTLE, N.B., Nov. 27.—James Barnhardt, arrested at the instance of his Campbellton wife for bigamy, was sentenced yesterday to four years in Dorchester penitentiary at hard labor.

Barnhardt admitted he had forced wife number two to marry him by threatening her with a breach of promise suit when she wanted to break the engagement.

Co-Operative Stores Assign.

REGINA, Nov. 27—The Saskatchewan Purchasing Co., Ltd., the only attempt ever made in this province to establish co-operative stores as known in Great Britain, has made an assignment to the Dominion Trust Co., and will be closed out. This company started at Broadview and has been operating 14 stores.

BIS SHOPS DESTROYED

With a Loss of Nearly a Million Dollars the Block I. Shops Are Now a Mass of Charred Ruins — Six Hundred Men Are Out of Work—Repairs to Waterworks Accountable For Loss.

SARNIA, Nov. 27. — At an early hour yesterday morning Port Huron was visited by a most disastrous fire, which completely destroyed the Block I. shops of the Grand Trunk Railway. The mammoth shops of the company comprised a coach and cabinet department, freight car department, blacksmith department and lumber yard. To-day the entire plant is a mass of ruins, nothing being left standing but the charred walls of some of the buildings. In addition to the destruction of the plant, some sixteen railway coaches that were under construction and receiving repairs were destroyed, including freight cars, buffet cars and parlor cars.

By the destruction of the shops some 600 men are thrown out of employment. Of this number are some scores of Sarnia men.

Everything in the shops was destroyed, with several thousands of dollars' worth of tools belonging to the employes. One Sarnia man estimates his loss at $200. The total loss will reach near the million mark. Only two weeks ago, the terrific waves of Lake Huron worked $50,000 damage to the shops, which are at the mouth of the river. This work was just being repaired and things getting in good order again.

The reason given for the wiping out of the plant is that no water was available for the firemen of the city or the private brigades of the company, owing to the pumps being shut down while repairs were being made to a broken water main. For more than an hour no water was played on the building.

The following comprised the plant: On the ground floor of the main building, which was nearly 800 feet long and two stories high, of brick construction, were the general offices, stores department, the enlarged machine shop, and the coach shop. On the second floor was the draughting office, with its valuable plans and drawings; the record room with its various records, which will be hard to replace; the paint room for sash and doors used in the coaches; back of this the cabinet shop and upholstery department, where the fine work was done on the coaches. In this one room were fourteen coaches, all of which were destroyed.

A rough estimate of the loss is that it will run close to a million dollars. Nor does this take into consideration the loss of the pay envelopes of 586 men.

Edmonton Has Big Fire.

EDMONTON, Alta., Nov. 27.—A $200,000 fire broke out Tuesday evening in the McKinney wholesale block on Fourth street, in the wholesale district, and badly damaged the building and destroyed almost all the stock of the wholesale firms which were occupants. The cause of the fire is as yet unknown.

HON. J. E. LARUE DEAD.

Prominent Citizen of the Province of Quebec Was 69 Years Old.

QUEBEC, Nov. 27.—Quebec has lost another prominent citizen in the person of Hon. Jules E. Larue, ex-judge of the Superior Court of this province, who died last evening in his 70th year after only four days' illness. On Saturday last he complained of being seriously ill, and a doctor was called in. It was discovered that the invalid was suffering from peritonitis. An operation was performed, but complications set in, and on Tuesday last all hope was given up and the end came last evening. He was born in this city July 7, 1844; was educated in the Quebec Seminary, and graduated B.C.L. at Laval University in 1865, and was called to the bar the following year. He was created Q.C. by the Marquis of Lorne in 1882, and was appointed judge of the Superior Court in 1886.

Smaller Warships.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—The Globe claims semi-official authority for stating that the "all big gun" era will come to an end with the completion of the group of vessels to which the Warspite belongs. It says the ships of the royal sovereign type, about to be laid down, will be of a new design smaller than that of the battleships now under construction, and adds that the British Admiralty's decision in this connection was due to the lessons learned during the recent naval manoeuvres on the east coast of Great Britain when the submarines demonstrated their ability to take such offensive action as to render battleships almost impotent.

Run Down by Gravel Train.

PORT HOPE, Nov. 27.—An Italian named Antonio Andriola died at the hospital here yesterday morning as the result of injuries sustained by the gravel train on the new C.P.R. running over him near Newtonville. The unfortunate man had both legs severed above the knees and, in addition, was frightfully bruised. He was about 19 years of age.

CANADA CAN'T

Some people are hard to convince and the old saying "convince a man against his will, he's of the same opinion still," holds good with editors. A certain Liberal newspaper insists that Canada can build Dreadnoughts because she can build ships to sail on the Great Lakes. We confess to more or less ignorance of ship-building on the Lakes, but it would scarcely be possible to launch a Dreadnought on the Pacific ocean from the shores of Lake Huron or Superior. But the bald truth is a battleship is a much different craft from the boats that sail the Lakes. Possibly, we could build part of a battleship in our maritime shipyards, but even the United States send over to Great Britain for certain portions of their own warships Quite recently a large order was sent to Britain for turbines—and no American complained that this was jeopardizing their independence or talked of 'America can't.'

It is true that Canada has "done things." She has built railways, she has developed the great West, and is doing this to-day.

But has Canada done this alone or is she doing it unaided to-day? Are we having no help? Who are the greatest pioneers of the West? What is our emigration agent doing in London but calling Britishers to the assistance of Canada? If we can hire Britishers to work on land and cannot do without them, why should we be averse to using them on the sea, or rather, paying them for helping us there? We cannot do without the British emigrant and we cannot do without his navy.

Let Liberals acknowledge this fact and be honest. The question of building war-ships can wait, it is not a pressing one; Canada would not go into a decline if she did not build a Dreadnought within the next 25 years. What we want is naval defence, and not merely to boast that we can build as good a battleship as Great Britain. We have had this naval defence and have now, free gratis and for nothing, from Great Britain. If this miserable position does not constitute a sufficient emergency in itself to justify Mr. Borden's contribution, then we have lost our self-respect.

LAWS TO THEM THAT USE THEM

"We have a sort of Curfew Law," says a contempory in a sneering tone, speaking of the question of keeping boys and girls off the streets after certain hours. Now, why this particular Curfew Law should be so objectionable to this paper is a little beyond us. We confess, as one of those boys might say—"You've got me there!" This particular Curfew Law may not be the acme of all legislation upon this subject, it will not usher in the millenium or turn bad boys and girls into angels. It was never intended to put all little boys and girls to bed by nine o'clock, p.m. sharp, the law was not directed against the children but at the parents via the offsprings for whom they are responsible.

This Curfew Law is all right, and if our contempory would only stick out for its enforcement it would do more good than by sneering or complaining that the law is defective. Despite these discouragements, this law has done some good in our city within the last month or so, the police have taken hold of this weapon, as the result of the recent agitation, and we have received very favorable reports that a distinct improvement is noticed in the conduct of young people on certain streets. The police are to be congratulated upon this and they should take courage and put in operation all the legislative machinery they have for the prevention or extermination of crime and lawlessness in every department of city life. They have the people and our columns behind them in insisting upon this Curfew Law being judiciously carried into effect.

THAT IRON STRING

Honesty is no longer a virtue which is its own reward. Mr. Chalmers at the Ad. Club in Toronto the other day, said "the man is an absolute fool who is not honest nowadays." So that honesty is a law in economics. "It is stupid for a man to put things into print to-day that which cannot be backed by merit," said Mr. Chalmers.

He went on to say that "Salesmanship is nothing more nor less than making the other fellow feel the same as you do about your goods." The first thing necessary, then, is to be convinced that you have got the goods. There is certainly no success in this world without egotism. Self-reliance is an essential qualification. "Trust thyself!" said Emerson, "all hearts respond to that iron string."

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Globe says, in a sort of pleading voice: "East Middlesex has a chance to do a real service to the cause of Temperance," and under its breath it added— "and to the Liberal party."

East Middlesex is under Local Option and has abolished its own bars. All other districts can do the same under the present government if they are in earnest about it.

This "Abolish the Bar" policy is an extremists' measure, created for party purposes, and insistance upon it will only antagonize moderate men who are just as much opposed to the liquor evil, but would let the people do their own cleaning up.

Yet another great British Scientist has passed away in the person of Sir Robert Ball, the eminent scientist. Amongst his better known works are "The Story of the Heavens," "Time and Tide," "The cause of the Ice Age," "The story of the Sun." Science and scientists pass away but the earth and the stars remain

The Ottawa Journal is wrong in stating that it is only recently that public corporations in England have taken steps to suppress the habit of expectoration in public conveyances and sidewalks. This has been in force in most English cities for at least five years, and in some places ten or more years ago. The Brockville Times suggests that perhaps the habit is not so prevalent in England as in the United States and Canada. There are certainly no public spitoons in England, and the habit is not officially recognized as a necessary one. But Englishmen are not free from it by any means. They may be a little more ashamed of it than the average Canadian, who will often punctuate his conversation by clearing his nasal and bronchial organs. But why did we ever get on this subject, anyway. It is all through reading the Brockville Times.

"Waiting at table is an honest, honorable occupation, and it ought to be placed on the same business basis as plumbing and carpentering," says the Toronto Star. The waiter might take exception to being classed with the plumber, but why did not the Star include editors in its classification? They surely are waiters of the patientest kind. They serve up the choicest of mental comestibles every day, and they get their "tips" too, but these latter are not in current [illegible]

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF
BAYARD VEILLER

"When?" Mary was standing rigid now, and the rare color flamed in her cheeks. Her eyes were blazing.

"Less than an hour ago."

"Where?"

"In this room."

"What was he doing here?"

"Talking to my father."

The seemingly simple answer appeared the last straw to the girl's burden of frenzied suspicion. Her voice cut fiercely into the quiet of the room.

"Joe, turn on that light! I want to see the face of every man in this room."

The blaze of the chandelier flamed brilliantly over all. Griggs moved stealthily a little nearer the door into the passage.

But Mary's next words came wholly as a surprise.

"Dick," she cried, "what are those tapestries worth?" She pointed toward the draperies that shrouded the great octagonal window.

"Oh, $200 or $300, I suppose," he answered. "Why?"

"Never mind that. How long have you had them, Dick?"

"Ever since I can remember."

"And they're not famous masterpieces which your father bought recently from some dealer who smuggled them into this country?"

"I should say not!"

"It's a trick! Burke's done it!" Mary's word came with accusing vehemence.

There was another single step made by Griggs toward the door.

Mary's eye caught the movement, and her lips soundlessly formed the name:

"Griggs!"

The man strove to carry off the situation, though he knew well that he stood in mortal peril. He came a little toward the girl who had accused him of treachery.

"He's lying to you!" he cried forcibly, with a scornful gesture toward Dick Gilder. "I tell you those tapestries are worth a million cold."

Mary's answer was virulent in its sudden burst of hate.

"You stool pigeon! You did this for Burke!"

"I swear I didn't! I swear it!"

"It's a frameup!" Garson broke in ferociously. His tones came in a deadened roar of wrath.

Gilder Lunged Toward Garson.

On the instant, ... e that further subterfuge could be of no avail, Griggs swaggered defiance.

"And what if it is true?" he drawled, with a resumption of his aristocratic manner. He plucked the police whistle from his waistcoat pocket and raised it to his lips.

He moved too slowly. Garson had pulled the pistol from his pocket, had pressed the trigger. There came no spurt of flame. There was no sound—save perhaps a faint clicking noise. But the man with the whistle at his lips suddenly ceased movement, trembled horribly and in the next instant crashed to the floor, dead.

In the first second of the tragedy Dick had not understood. But the falling of Griggs before the leveled weapon of the other man, there to lie in that ghastly immobility, made him understand. He leaped toward Garson—would have wrenched the pistol from the other's grasp. In the struggle it fell to the floor.

Before either could pick it up Chicago Red called his warning.

"Somebody's opening the front door!"

Garson sprang to the octagonal window as Dick took possession of the pistol.

"The street's empty! We must jump for it! Come on, Mary," he cried.

Already Chicago Red had snapped off the lights of the chandelier, had sprung to the window, thrown open a panel of it and had vanished into the night, with Dacey at his heels. As Garson would have called out to the girl again he was interrupted by Dick:

"She couldn't make it, Garson," he declared coolly and resolutely. "You go. I'll take care of her!"

"If she's caught"— There was an indescribable menace in the forger's half uttered threat.

"She won't be."

"If she is, I'll get you, that's all." Garson said as he dropped out of sight.

CHAPTER XV.

Within the Toils.

THE going of Garson left the room deathly still. Dick turned to Mary and took her hand in his. His arm swept about her in a protecting embrace—just in time or she would have fallen.

A whisper came from her quivering lips. Her face was close to his, else he could not have caught the uncertain murmuring. The muscles of her face twitched. She rested suddenly against him as if bereft of any strength of body or of soul. Yet, in the intensity of her utterance, the feeble whisper struck like a shriek of horror.

"I—I—never saw any one killed before!"

Before he could utter the soothing words that rose to his lips, Dick was interrupted by a slight sound at the door. Instantly he was all alert to meet the exigencies of the situation. He stood by the couch, bending forward a little as if in a posture of intimate fondness. He heard the noise again presently, now so near that he made sure of being overheard, so at once he spoke with a forced cheerfulness in his inflection.

"I tell you, Mary," he declared, "everything's going to be all right for you and me. It was bully of you to come here to me like this."

The girl made no response. Dick, in nervous apprehension as to the issue, sought to bring her to realization of the new need that had come upon them.

"Talk to me," he commanded very softly. "They'll be here in a minute. When they come in pretend you just came here in order to meet me. Try, Mary. You must, dearest!" Then again his voice rose to loudness as he continued: "Why, I've been trying all day to see you. And now here we are together, just as I was beginning to get really discouraged. I know my father will eventually"—

He was interrupted by the swift swinging open of the hallway door. Burke stood just within the library, a revolver pointed menacingly.

"Hands up, all of you!" The inspector's voice fairly roared the command.

The belligerent expression of his face vanished abruptly as his eyes fell on Dick standing by the couch and Mary reclining there in limp helplessness.

"What are you doing in this house at this time of night?" Dick demanded. "I recognize you, Inspector Burke. But you must understand that there are limits even to what you can do. It seems to me, sir, that you exceed your authority by such an intrusion as this."

Burke waved his revolver toward Mary.

"What's she doing here?" he asked.

"You forget yourself, inspector. This is my wife. She has the right to be with me—her husband!"

"Where's your father?" he questioned roughly.

"In bed, naturally," was the answer. "I ask you again. What are you doing here at this time of night?"

"Oh, call your father," Burke directed.

"It's late," Dick objected. "I'd rather not disturb him, if you don't mind." Suddenly he smiled very winningly and spoke with a good assumption of ingenuousness.

"Inspector," he said briskly, "I see I'll have to tell you the truth. It's this: I've persuaded my wife to go away with me. She's going to give all that other sort of thing up. Yes, we're going away together. So, you see, we've got to talk it over. Now then, inspector, if you'll come back in the morning"—

As he spoke the white beam of the flashing searchlight from the tower fell between the undrawn draperies of the octagonal window. The light startled the inspector again, as it had done once before that same night. His gaze followed it instinctively. So within the second he saw the still form lying there on the floor.

There was no mistaking that awful motionless, crumpled posture. The inspector leaped to the switch by the door and turned on the lights of the chandelier. In the next moment he had reached the door of the passage across the room, and his whistle sounded shrill. His voice bellowed reenforcement to the blast.

"Cassidy! Cassidy!"

Cassidy came rushing in with the other detectives.

"Why, what's it all mean, chief?" he questioned.

"They've got Griggs!" Burke answered. There was exceeding rage in his voice as he spoke from his kneeling posture beside the body, to which he had hurried after the summons to his aids. "I'll break you for this, Cassidy," he declared fiercely. "Why didn't you get here on the run when you heard the shot?"

"Hands up! All of you!"

"But there wasn't any shot. I tell you, chief, there hasn't been a sound."

Burke rose to his feet. His heavy face was set in its sternest mold.

"You could drive a hearse through the hole they made in him," said Cassidy. Burke wheeled on Mary and Dick. "So," he shouted, "now it's murder! Well, hand it over. Where's the gun?" He nodded toward Dick as he gave his order, "Search him!"

Dick took the revolver from his pocket and held it out.

TUMOR IN THE STOMACH

Completely Removed When She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

NEWBURY, ONT., April 4th. 1913.

"Some years ago, I was sick in bed, and thought I was going to die. I had a growth in my stomach, which the doctors said was a Tumor and they said that the only thing to do was to go to the hospital and have the tumor cut out. I dreaded an operation although both doctors said it was the only cure. I said I would die before being operated on.

At this time, my mother in Alvinston sent me some "Fruit-a-tives" and induced me to try them as she had heard of another woman who had been cured of a similar growth in the stomach by taking "Fruit-a-tives".

To please my mother, I began to take "Fruit-a-tives" with the happy result that they cured me. I have not been to see a doctor since and my health is first class.

I recommend "Fruit-a-tives" every time I get a chance and I will be glad to have you publish this letter as some other woman may now be a sufferer from the same trouble and "Fruit-a-tives" will cure her" MRS. A. McDONALD.

50c a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Cheer Up.

"I sometimes wonder if life is worth living," mused the pessimist.

"It is," replied the optimist. "It is worth living much better than most of us live it."—Lippincott's.

Blinding the Idols.

While repairing a temple the Chinese cover up the eyes of the idols, in order that the deities may not be offended at the sight of the disorder.

After all, there is nothing in this world but character.—Bishop Fowler.

BREEDING ABNORMAL FISH.

Curious Custom of Chinese and Japanese Origin.

The "telescope" fish, a monstrous variety of carp, is a creation of the Chinese and Japanese fish breeders, who are past masters in the art of deforming nature. It has an almost globular glistening body, gilded on the sides, double dorsal fins and a long tail of peculiar shape. Its eyes and their sockets are very prominent and resemble the object glasses of telescopes, whence the name telescope fish. A carp possessing this abnormal feature was discovered in Japan in the 16th century, since which epoch the peculiar character has been perpetuated and combined with many variations in form and coloring by careful selection and crossing.

The variety known as Yen-tan-yen or "veil tail" preserves the normal structure of the eye during life, but its delicate transparent tail attains an enormous size and falls in graceful folds, like a veil, producing effects that a "serpentine" dancer might envy, when a little fish moves in the sunlight.

Other shape varieties of the telescope fish are the "sheep's nose," which owes its name to the convexity of its body; the "pig's snout," which has a head resembling those of Asiatic swine, and the "fan tail," which raises and spreads its tail in the manner of a fan-tail pigeon.

The Chinese breeders of telescope fish disdain these abnormalities of structure and devote their attention chiefly to coloring. By modifying the temperature of the water, and by impregnating it with lime and iron, they produce startling shades and markings. Among the innumerable varieties thus obtained we may mention the "spotted," with a belly of silver, and sides and back marked with blue, yellow, black, rose and carmine dots; the crimson "ruby" and the "superb," with glittering scales, scarlet belly, and black or bright red markings on the back.

Shrewd Sexton.

Among the tourists who travel through France, a considerable number visit the cathedral at Rheims, a magnificent example of Gothic architecture. In the tower there is an enormous clock, and it is the sexton's business to wind it every day—a very tiring job, as the weights are naturally extremely heavy.

The sexton, however, is a very shrewd fellow. Whenever he shows the trippers this wonderful piece of mechanism he remarks: "Ladies and gentlemen, if you do not believe me regarding the heaviness of the clock weights, try for yourselves."

Each of the trippers immediately gives a turn or two to the wheel, and as there are some 200 visitors a day the trippers unconsciously and eagerly wind the clock for him, and in addition, give him an extra tip for being allowed to do his work.

DOCTORS DID NOT HELP HER

But Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Mrs. Bradley's Health—Her Own Statement.

Winnipeg, Canada. —"Eleven years ago I went to the Victoria Hospital, Montreal, suffering with a growth. The doctors said it was a tumor and could not be removed as it would cause instant death. They found that my organs were affected, and said I could not live more than six months in the condition I was in.

"After I came home I saw your advertisement in the paper, and commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it constantly for two years, and still take it at times, and both my husband and myself claim that it was the means of saving my life. I highly recommend it to suffering women."—Mrs. ORILLA BRADLEY, 284 Johnson Ave., Winnipeg, Manitoba, Can.

Why will women take chances or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

The Letter M.

The Hebrew name of M was Mem, water, and it is curious to note that the original form of this character in the most ancient manuscript is a waving line, which to the not too particular ancients represented water. By some philologists the letter M as used by the Phoenicians is supposed to have come from a picture representing the human face, the two down strokes representing the contour of the countenance, the V stroke signifying the nose, the two dots, long since disused, and a stroke beneath the V representing the eyes and the mouth. The old Phoenician form of the letter does indeed bear a comical sort of resemblance to the human face.

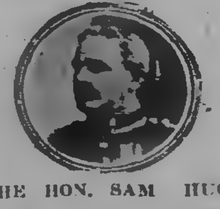
MINISTER OF MILITIA OPENS NEW ARMOURIES AT OMEMEE

Reeve R. J. Mulligan Reads Address of Welcome on Behalf of the Citizens



COL. THE HON. SAM HUGHES

The Minister of Militia and Defence.

OMEMEE, Nov. 27 — Wednesday afternoon was a red-letter day in our local history of progress. The new armories were opened, with much eclat and jubilation by the Minister of Militia. About 2 p.m. a special arrived from Peterboro bringing to town Colonel, the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence, accompanied by Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., of Peterboro; Mr. J. A. Sexsmith M.P., Col. Winters military secretary of the Minister of Militia and Mr. J. Kendrey, ex-M.P. Colonel Hughes travelled in his private car "Boleen" and had inspected the schools at Campbellford en-route.

A large concourse of citizens and the 45th Regimental Band met the distinguished party at the depot, the band playing as the informal greetings took place, and along the line of march, via Sturgeon, King and George streets to the Armories, which were soon packed to the doors. During the preface of the function the band played "Rule Britannia" and "The Red White and Blue." Major H. Fee then introduced Mr. A. E. Bottum of Bobcaygeon, Warden of Victoria, as the chairman of the meeting.

A CIVIC ADDRESS

Reeve R.J. Mulligan was called upon to present the civic address of welcome, which was as follows:—

To Colonel the Honorable Sam Hughes, M.P., Minister of Militia and Defence of the Dominion of Canada.

Sir— The Municipal Council of the Corporation of the Village of Omemee on the occasion of the opening of the Armory, erected by the Government of the Dominion of Canada, under your direction, desire to extend to you a cordial welcome in the heartiest terms within their power to express.

In so welcoming you the Council realize with great satisfaction that they are voicing the warm feeling of esteem and the honor in which you are held in your personal and official relations by the citizens of this portion of the constituency which you have represented in the Parliament of Canada for many years with such positive efficiency.

The decision of the Government on your advice, to construct an armory in this little militia centre, was much appreciated by the inhabitants of the municipalities to be served and now that the fine building is ready for the important purposes to which it is to be devoted, their desire to declare their gratitude to you and through you to the Government.

In so approaching you it is with pardonable pride you are reminded that the township of Emily and the village of Omemee are in accord with your sentiments as a military leader of world-wide experience, and that in all the years of their history they have given freely from their homes many sons to take their places in the ranks of the stalwart men who, time to time, have been called into service for the defence of the Empire.

At Omemee, Nov. 26th., 1913.

Signed

R. J. MULLIGAN,
Reeve.

On rising to respond, Colonel Hughes was presented with a handsome bouquet of white roses by Miss Jessie Lamb, whose gift the Minister of Militia announced the acceptance of and kissed the pretty little maid. The Colonel expressed the pleasure it was to meet so many of his old friends and to be back again in the old town of Omemee. He reasoned that liberty must exist from law and the latter was supported by a national army as was the preservation of the order of civilization. The Colonel cited many countries of Europe as models by military training and in the Dominion of Canada nearly every successful man was a military man or some of his ancestors had been, and to him came the benefit of military training. Toronto has had physical training for 40 years, said the Minister, and not a boy appeared in the Police Court. On the question of the canteen in camp, the speaker said that no liquor would be countenanced while he was Minister of Militia; he hoped to bring the militia in harmony with the better element. Liquor had been too long associated with them and good boys could not be procured and protected from the drunken beasts. Absence of liquor gives us the best men; we sustained no loss under the new law. The Department of Militia is looking after the interest of the mothers, when looking after the interest of the sons. Clergymen and educationists are backing the movement because of the cadet feature and the system of drill which produced control as opposed to the uncontrolled of the streets. Col Hughes became reminiscent and referred to many of his confreres when he drilled the regiment and to his early return to the armories when he hoped to see a hardwood floor replace the concrete to the South African heroes produced by the 45th, he closed his address by handing over the keys of the amory to Captain Thorn. The Minister of Militia presented Sergeant Cottingham with a beautiful copy of "Holy Writ" from Mr. G. H. Hale, of Orillia for being the best drilled and best set-up soldier of "D" Company.

SANG "O CANADA."

The chorus of 50 voices, under the direction of Reeve Mulligan, sang "O Canada," the audience joining heartily in the chorus of one verse.

Dr Mason, M.P.P., spoke in congratulatory terms of the Minister of Militia and "D" Company of Omemee.

The 45th Regiment Band gave a selection.

MR. J. H. BURNHAM, M. P.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., of Peterborough, made a happy speech of congratulation, showing that the mass of the people would endorse the expenditure for drill halls, that were not used for military training alone, but for gymnastics and public meetings of all kinds. The speaker inferred that "Halls" should almost be the making of the public life of Omemee. He praised the Minister of Militia for training the masses to be well able to defend the country, for banishing liquor from the camp and concluded that self-respecting and temperance people would support the Minister of Militia if they felt they deserved the Halls.

COL. HOPKINS.

Col. Hopkins of the 45th, said that it was a duty, a privilege and an honor for him to do his best for the regiment of which "D" Company was the best in the last camp. He complimented Captain Thorn, Lieuts. Henry and Sherin on their valuable assistance.

Mr. Sexsmith, M.P., of East Peterborough, made a congratulatory reference to the Hon. Minister of Militia of whom Canada and the British Empire were proud of.

Col. Pick, of the 34th Regiment, Cannington, spoke of the armory, its benefits to a small place and the possibility of organizing a Cadet Corps of ladies.

Major H. Fee showed the need for a drill hall and expressed regret at leaving "D" Company which under Captain Thorn, he hoped would be supported by Capt. McCrea and all others. To the ladies he expressed profound thanks.

LT. COL. E. B. CLEGG,

Officer Commanding the 57th Regiment, who with other officers of the Regiment, attended the opening of the new armories.

The band rendered "The Lass of Gowrie" and other airs.

Mr. Jos. T. Beatty, ex-Reeve of Omemee, explained the way the armory was procured, and continued the praise to Col. Hughes by saying "He is the best man that stands to-day, under the British Flag."

Col. Harry Ward, of Port Hope, eulogized Colonel Hughes and wondered the Col. had not been elected to Parliament at the age of 10 years. He endorsed the action of the liquor question and complimented the Choral Society of Omemee.

The vocal organization rendered a selection.

Reeve I. H. Fee, of Emily, made a brief speech.

Capt. Stocker alluded to the beauty of the armory and extended congratulations to Major Fee.

MR. J. H. BURNHAM, M. P.,

Who took part in the ceremonies.

The band then played "The Maple Leaf," all standing and singing.

Three cheers were given for the Minister of Militia and "tiger" attached, after which the afternoon exercises were concluded by "God Save the King."

Chairman Ivory gave the High and Public Schools a half holiday.

The 45th Band assisted at the afternoon and evening exercises.

There was ample supplies of provisions unconsumed.

THE ARMORIES.

The armories stand on George St. South, on a piece of old government-owned land that was added to for space. The building is constructed according to the latest methods of modern sanitary improvements, has comfortable quarters for the company, a large rotunda, and is furnace-heated and electric-lighted. The grounds are architecturally laid out; will be decorated by a couple of cannon and surrounded by a handsome iron fence.

THE BANQUET.

In the evening a grand banquet was held in the new Armories by invitation of Major H. Fee, and the other officers of "D" Co. The floral decorations of the tables were most beautiful, and the multi-colored display of the ceiling and walls perfected a unique combination fit for fairyland. The tables groaned under the weight of toothsome viands, which were superbly served by an efficient staff of young ladies and gentlemen. The first toast was that of "The King," which called forth a hearty response from the band of "God Save the King," which the entire assemblage sung standing. The second toast of "Our Guest" was proposed by Major Hopkins and responded to by the Minister of Militia, who, after expressing his friendship for Omemee people, then spoke of the reasons he had for building drill halls, of his having measured the permanent force with the militia, and found the former not equal to the latter. The Colonel spoke of having given Canadian officers practical trips to Europe, where they observed the manoeuvres of many different military units. These trips are to be continued. The Hon. speaker then treated his audience to a trip through Scotland, reciting much poetry illustrative of his theme. To stock brokers, gamblers, etc., he attributed the cause of wars, and not to soldiers. The Minister stated that young soldiers were trained mentally, physically and morally, and in patriotism so strong that 1,000,000 would be sufficient force to keep any enemy out of Canada.

Much applause greeted the Minister of Militia.

A piano duet by Misses Brown and Grandy was much enjoyed.

To the toast of "Our Country," proposed by Warden Bottum, the audience sang ensemble, "The Maple Leaf," and Dr Mason, M.P.P., replied in brief, but statistical terms, showing Canada to be the best country on the face of the earth.

Mr Gordon Wright, of Peterborough rendered a vocal solo that called forth an encore.

The toast of "The Divisional Staff" was proposed by Col. Hopkins, and replied to by Col. Hemming, commanding the Third Division, in brief, but commendable style.

"The 45th Regiment" was proposed by Col. Birdsall of the 40th Regiment, and Major H. Fee responded, saying that Col. Hopkins and the men were trying to make the regiment one of the best in Ontario. He thanked the ladies and gentlemen for their help in making the banquet such a success.

Capt. Crawford, of Lindsay, spoke to the same toast and spoke of the good fellows the officers of the 45th were.

"Sister Corps" called forth short addresses from Col. Stocker, of the 46th Regiment; Captain Thorn, of the 45th and Dr. Wood, of Lindsay, who spoke flatteringly of the 45th.

Capt. John McCrea, of town, a veteran of the South African war, made a neat little speech of sorrow for Col. Hughes when in South Africa, and of gladness that he had "come into his own."

At the announcement of the toast to "The Ladies," the band struck up "The Girl I Left Behind Me," and and Messrs. J. T. Batty and G. A. Jordan championed the fair sex in rousing speeches that evoked much laughter. They were assisted by Lieut Warren in studious and appropriate oratory.

Col Hopkins, in introducing the toast of the "County Council," spoke of the help in money of $250 from that corporate body in a time when the regiment was about down and out. Messrs. McEachern and Rogers were coupled to this toast and spoke briefly.

Reeve R. J. Mulligan made some humorous remarks about Omemee's greatness when called to respond to the toast of "The Omemee Council."

"The Township Council" was replied to by Reeve J. H. Fee, of Emily.

"The School Board" was assigned to Mr T. C. Ivory, who was absent when his name was called.

"The Board of Trade" was championed by Messrs. T. J. Parsons, W. H. Curry and J. J. Lamb.

In proposing the toast "To the Health of Col. Hopkins," the Hon. Col. S. Hughes gave a brief sketch of the 45th Regiment, which had for its officers in command; Col. Cubitt, Col. John Hughes, Col. S. Hughes, Col. Sylvester and Col. Hopkins.

Proceedings concluded with "The National Anthem." A special train left Lindsay at 7 p.m. and returned at the close of the banquet. Some of the military men present at the banquet were:

Hon. Col. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia.

Col. Hemming and Lieut. Dunbar, of Kingston.

Col. E. B. Clegg, Major V. Eastwood, Capt. J. H. Eastwood, Capt. Fee, (24th Field Battery); Capt. McPherson, Capt. Hounsell, Capt. Carruthers, Capt. Langford, Capt. McLean, Lieut. E. Worth, Lieut. W. Worth, Lieut. Beck, and Mr. C. E. Jamieson, of the 57th Regiment of Peterborough.

Lieut. A. C. Winslow, of the 46th Regiment, Millbrook.

Col. Stocker, of 46th Regiment.

Of the 45th Regiment—Col. Hopkins, Major Fee, Major Williamson, Major Hopkins, Capt. Crawford, Capt. Warren, Capt. Thorn, Lieut. Sherin, Lieut. Henry, Lieut. Sutcliffe.

Many of the military officers were accompanied by their ladies.

To Major Fee and the staff of officers of "D" Company belong the credit of the success of the brilliant opening of our armories.

JUDGE BARHORST
DOES HIS DUTY TO RHEUMATIC SUFFERERS

If you suffer from Rheumatism and don't read this advice, then the terrible disease must have robbed you of your power to be fair to yourself. Read it:

"I, John Barhorst, Justice of the Peace of McLean Township, Ft. Loramie, Ohio, do certify that after treatment by three doctors without result, I have been cured of a very bad case of Rheumatism by using two bottles of RHEUMA. It is now two years since I used the remedy, and I am still as well as ever. Previous to using RHEUMA I was a cripple, walking with crutches, and I feel it my duty to let other sufferers from Rheumatism know what it will do. The result seems almost miraculous to me. I have advised RHEUMA to at least a dozen persons, and each one speaks as highly of it as I. I will advise any one suffering from the disease if a two-cent stamp is enclosed."—May 31, 1912.

You can secure a bottle of RHEUMA for only 50 cents at the Warne Drug Co. and they say, if not as advertised, money back. It's just as good for Gout, Arthritis, Lumbago and Sciatica.

Six do the Work of SEVEN

Six shovelfulls of coal will do the work of seven in a Hecla Furnace.

You can see it for yourself. Have the Hecla Dealer show you the steel-ribbed Fire-pot—a fire-pot that radiates the heat so quickly that it never becomes red hot—and it is guaranteed never to burn out. This fire-pot (our patent) has three times more radiating surface than that of any other Furnace. It draws the heat from the coal instead of letting it go to waste up the chimney—Feel the smoke flue—It is always cool.

Investigate the Hecla and you will make a big saving in your coal bill. It not only saves 1 ton in 7, but it is absolutely proof against leaking gas or dust.

JUDGMENT IN EGG CASE

Defendant Must Pay $1000 to the Plaintiff

The case of Scott vs. Hawley, after a session extending all day was brought to a close last evening with the judgment that defendant pay the plaintiff the sum of $1,000 cash and that each pay his own costs which, judging from the array of witnesses in court, and the other legal expenses will run over $500.

The case was one of the most unusual heard in a local court for some time. Mr. Hawley had some twenty witnesses from Toronto, while Mr. Scott's list totalled 30 with several out of town witnesses.

Mr. Scott claimed $1,970.18 as damages while Mr. Hawley had a counter claim of $2,500.

The defence claimed that the additional shipments of eggs were not up to the standard and owing to the conditions of the eggs he lost a number of customers. He therefore put in his counter claim of $2,500.

BE UP TO DATE.

Halloween "Critters" That Talk and Move.

NEW JACK HORNER PIE.

Do you know the very latest, up to date, sauciest novelties that this mad, funny Halloween season has brought forth? No mere pictures these. No inanimate affairs to be looked at once and then forgotten. The really new Halloween "things" are full of life and action. They move, they squeak, they bow, they raise their hats, they open their jaws, they turn somersaults. They do as many tricks, in fact, as though their pumpkin heads and grotesque bodies had indeed been bewitched by the spirits that prowl abroad on Halloween night.

Accordingly the inevitable black cat is meowing, the gollywog clown is whirling around in somersaults, and the pumpkin jack-o'-lantern is uttering funny squawks through a wide open mouth that opens and closes, and so it goes.

Perhaps the most alluring of the Halloween creatures is a black cat with paper muslin body, concealing a little bellows, to be pressed between the fingers. The one pressure makes the "meow" and causes the cat to lift up before its face a cunning little pumpkin shell mask. The Jack Horner pie seen in the illustration is an appropriate centerpiece for the Halloween supper table and when filled with these funny "moving" favors creates a jolly lot of sport among the guests.

The Home Beautiful.

Painted and enameled chairs of the colonial style are most fitting for bedroom furnishing.

A simple striped paper in two toned grays is a most appropriate background for "period" furniture.

In pondering the fall wall paper problems a good suggestion for guidance is that dark papers make a room seem smaller, and red should not be used in living rooms as it absorbs light and is a nerve irritant.

Bedroom furniture which is dark and gloomy may be transformed into articles of beauty by the use of varnish remover and ivory or cream paint. Additional attraction may be given by painting gay wreaths or nosegays on the repainted furniture.

To Dress Like Eskimos.

The girls of the Phoebe Ann Thorne Open Air Model school at Bryn Mawr, which was opened this fall under the direction of Bryn Mawr college, will wear Eskimo suits this winter with furs. Only twenty girls will be allowed to take advantage of the school this year; but, no doubt, it will be enlarged if as successful as it is hoped that it will be.

CANADIAN GENERAL HAS PLENTY OF ORDERS

General Manager Nicholls Speaks Most Hopefully of Outlook for the Coming Year

Toronto News.

The Canadian General Electric Company is in a very fortunate position at the present time; there are orders on hand that will carry it well through the coming year. This was one of the statements made by Mr. Frederic Nicholls, the general manager during the course of an interview this morning with a representative of The News.

Mr. Nicholls was discussing the rumor that the company had laid off a number of its hands at the plant in Peterborough. "No," he remarked, "we are not contemplating any radical reductions in our working force. We now employ in our several factories and departments over five thousand people, and I try to consider their welfare as well as that of the shareholders, and give them steady employment."

Turning to the prospects from an operating standpoint, Mr. Nicholls said: "Up to the present we have been working at concert pitch in all departments, and a little slackening up would be welcomed, provided that it was not too prolonged.

"This company has always had faith in Canada's future, and for the last twenty years additions to our manufacturing facilities and the assets have been constantly made. In fact, I may say that they have increased at the average rate of one million dollars per year for over twenty years."

"Why is it that your company is so busy?" asked the representative of The News, "at this time when many industrial concerns are complaining of a serious falling off in the volume of trade?"

"This is a rather difficult question to answer," answered Mr. Nicholls. "But I may say, in the first place, that we cover a very wide field of enterprise and our output is varied. Secondly, that the tremendous expansion of Canada in population, with its resultant expenditures for railway construction public works and lighting and power distribution has called for large quantities of machinery and apparatus such as we manufacture. And lastly, and with all due modesty, I think I can attribute part of our activities to the fact that during the many years this company has been in existence it has achieved a favorable reputation."

Mr. Nicholls was asked if there was any truth in a rumor heard on the street during the course of the morning to the effect that the Canadian General Electric Company was about to announce an increase in its dividend.

"I can say nothing on that point till the matter has been considered by the board," rejoined Mr. Nicholls. "A meeting of the directors is to be held within the coming week, when any announcement that is to be forthcoming will be made."

"Is there likely to be a bonus as was the case last year?"

"I cannot say."

The impression prevailing on the Street is that there is not likely to be an increase in the dividend at the present time, though some lean to the belief that a bonus may be declared.

PUPILS ANSWERED ALARM OF FIRE IN GOOD TIME

Report on the Annual Fire Drill With Time for Each School

Yesterday afternoon Fire Chief Howard, accompanied by Aldermen Gillespie, Anderson and Duffus, and J. J. Turner, Jr., and B. F. Ackerman, the latter two being members of the Board of Education made the annual trip to the schools. Unexpected by the pupils and teachers an alarm of fire was rung and the time taken by the children in leaving the buildings is recorded in the following report of the Fire Chief:

School	No. of Pupils.	Time.
Central, No. 1	160	36 sec.
Central, No. 2	320	60 "
West Ward	425	60 "
Queen Alexandra	350	44 "
New East Ward	300	54 "
South Central	325	35 "
King Edward	425	49 "
St. Peters	331	64 "
St. Marys	225	31 "
Sacred Heart	270	30 "

Chief Howard was well pleased with the orderly way in which the pupils marched out, mentioning in particular Sacred Heart School and South Central.

The Fire, Water and Light Committee last night passed a motion, recommending that a by-law be prepared giving authority to issue debentures for $8,000 to provide a one piece motor-driven apparatus for the fire department, the by-law to be voted on at the next municipal elections.

No action was taken regarding petitions for a fire alarm box at corner of Lock and Romaine, and lights on Romaine street west of Park street.

Stars That Outshine the Sun.

One of the Government astronomers, referring to stars that are so distant that they have no measurable parallax, asserts that one of these, the brilliant Canopus, can be said with confidence to be thousands of times brighter than our sun. Whether we should say 20,000, 10,000 or 5,000 no one can decide. The first magnitude stars, Rigel and Speca, also are at an immeasurable distance and must, in view of their actual brightness, enormously outshine the sun.

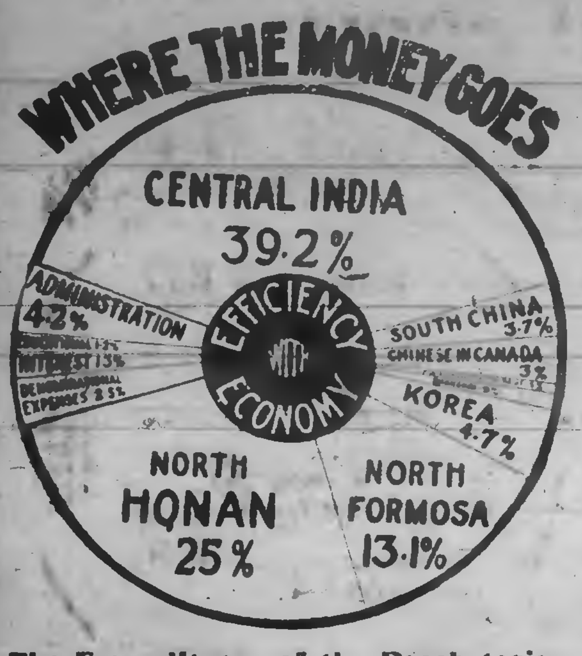
How Much of the Money Given for Missions Ever Reaches the Foreign Field?

Does It Not Require $9 to Send $1 Abroad?



The Expenditures of the Presbyterian Church on Foreign Missions

¶ There is a general impression that mission funds are handled inefficiently — that it takes a lot of money to send mission funds abroad.

¶ The facts are: Few, if any, business enterprises are handled as economically or obtain as large returns for the money expended, as do our Home and Foreign Mission Boards.

¶ Note the two diagrams on this page: The smaller one shows how the money spent by the Presbyterian Church in Canada for Foreign Missions is apportioned. This church has been made responsible for conducting the work of evangelization in certain mission fields. Other denominations are responsible for other mission fields. Thus the work has been organized and placed on a business basis. Overlapping is thereby avoided. Note that out of every $100 raised for foreign missions only about $9.00 is required for all purposes not directly missionary in character and that only $4.2 is required for purely administrative purposes.

¶ The large diagram to the right shows how the money raised for both home and foreign missions by the Church of England in Canada is expended. Note that only $4.5 dollars is required out of every $100 raised for purely administrative purposes, and that $90.2 out of every $100 goes direct to the mission fields. That record speaks well for the manner in which missionary funds are handled.

¶ The great Methodist and Baptist denominations have records that are equally creditable.

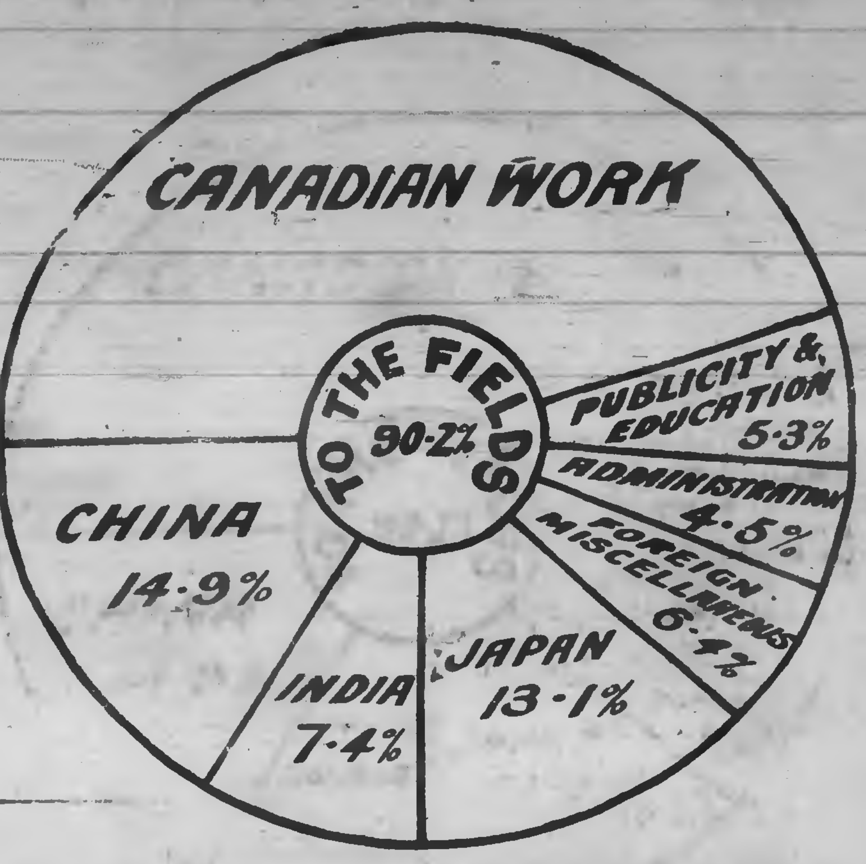
MOST OF THE MONEY IS SPENT AT HOME.

¶ Some people have an impression that Protestant churches spend most of the money they raise for missions on the foreign fields. The reverse is the case. Note once more the large diagram. This shows that 48 % out of 90.2% is spent on the Canadian mission fields. In addition large sums are spent in Canada on the colleges and for other special work connected with the church the expenditures on which are not included in those dealt with in the diagram which refers to home and foreign missionary expenditures only.

¶ The Methodist Church in Canada expended last year $384,253 on home missions and $297,982 on foreign missions, not including some special expenditures for hospital purposes. In addition several hundred thousand dollars was spent for special work in Canada by the home church.

¶ The Baptists of Ontario and Quebec alone last year gave to home missions $122,446, foreign missions $75,628.25.

¶ Out of $1,200,000 apportioned by the Presbyterian Church in Canada for work this year, $325,000 was set apart for foreign missions, $425,000 for home missions and $450,000 for other work connected with the home church in Canada. Thus the work of the home churches is not being neglected



The Expenditures of the Church of England in Canada on Home and Foreign Missions

GENERAL SIR CHARLES WARREN, Governor of Natal: "For the preservation of peace between the colonists and natives, one missionary is worth a battalion of soldiers."

SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, Governor of Cape Colony: "I have relied more upon the labors of the missionaries for the peaceful government of the natives than upon the presence of British troops."

LORD JOHN LAWRENCE, Viceroy of India: "Notwithstanding all that the English people have done to benefit the country, the missionaries have done more than all other agencies combined."

Cookery Points

Three Fireless Cooker Recipes.

For beef roll take ten ounces of lean beef from the shoulder or shin. Take two ounces of sausage meat, with an equal quantity of stale breadcrumbs. Cut the meat into slices one-half inch thick. Mix crumbs and sausage meat and spread on the meat. Roll up and tie firmly. Try out two ounces of fat salt pork and brown the meat in it. Take from the fat and place in an earthen dish. Add to the fat one tablespoonful of flour and brown. Then add one-half pint of boiling water. Boil five minutes. Season with one half teaspoonful salt, one-half teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce and two tablespoonfuls of tomato catsup. Pour over the meat and cook about five hours between thoroughly heated roasting plates.

Beef a la Mode.

Take one pound of the shoulder of beef and two slices of bacon. Salt, pepper and flour the meat. Put in an earthen dish and add three whole cloves, one-half dozen allspice, one slice of onion, one teaspoonful of powdered thyme, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar and half a pint of hot water. If liked, turnips and carrots may be added. Cook five hours, using two roasting plates.

Sheep or Calf's Heart.

Stuff with sausage and breadcrumbs. Season with salt and pepper and dredge with flour. Put into an earthen dish and add one tablespoonful of tomato catsup and one slice of onion. Cover with boiling water and cook for five hours, using both radiators.

Fruit Babies.

Some delicious little fruit babies are sold in one of the shops that has made a name for itself as the home of unusual sweets. Each stands three or four inches high, and each has for a pedestal a square sand cooky. The little fruit baby is made in this way:

His two feet are two almonds implanted firmly in the cooky before it is baked—with pointed toes and rounded heels of course. The two legs are two plump figs that, by means of pushing and pulling, have taken on themselves the outline of the full breeches of the small Dutch boy.

The body, like a loose blouse, is a bigger fig. The arms are strings of raisins, four or five—that end in hands made of a half of a shelled peanut. The head is a big, square caramel, the face part white, with rich chocolate features, the hair part brown. A tiny cap made from a piece of a fig is perched rakishly over one corner of the funny square head.

Fruit Salls.

This is a toothsome confection in which figs are the principal ingredients. Grind separately and then together twice, equal quantities of dried or pressed figs, stoned dates, seeded raisins and nuts (hickory nuts, walnuts or pecans). Take the white of one egg and the same amount of cream, stir together and work into it sifted confectioner's sugar until it is quite stiff. Then work enough of this into the fruit mixture to bind it together. Powder the hands with some of the sugar and roll the candy into balls the size of marbles. These will be improved if allowed to stand a day or two.

Spiced Vinegar.

There are a number of good, blended, spicy vinegars one can make. It is more a matter of taste than materials necessary. One piquant and tasty vinegar is made by adding to a quart of cider vinegar one ounce of celery seed, one tablespoonful each of peppermint and spearmint, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, three small onions, four whole cloves, one teaspoonful of whole pepper, half of a grated nutmeg, one teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sugar. At the end of three weeks strain and bottle. To be used to flavor salad and in making meat sandwiches.

Egg Pie.

Fry four large sliced onions in clarified dripping, drain these well and mix them with a rather thick white sauce, adding in at the same time three hard boiled egg sliced. Line a shallow pie dish with paste, fill up with the mixture, cover with mashed potatoes and bake in a moderate oven.

Italian Cake.

Mix together two to three ounces of previously cooked rice, two ounces of butter, six ounces of grated cheese, one whole egg and pepper and salt to taste. Steam this mixture in a buttered basin or mold for one hour and ten minutes, turn out and serve with tomato sauce.

Good cooks may be born but education will do a lot for a poor one.

INGENUITY IN SUICIDE.

This Parisian Planned a Most Dramatic Taking Off.

Some years ago, when there was an epidemic of dramatic suicides in Paris, a man who had visited the French capital told of an extraordinary suicide he had heard of in that gay city.

"He was a Frenchman who was nothing if not original," said the teller of the tale, "and even when he grew despondent he planned his death in a most original fashion. He locked the door of his room in the Rue Nitot and, removing the weights of the window cord, fastened them to the window itself. He added to the weight of the window by attaching six flatirons. On the sill he adjusted a large triangular bread knife, such as is used by chefs, and made ready a small balloon, capable of lifting fifty pounds.

"The ingenious Frenchman then put his head out of the window after attaching the balloon to his neck and by releasing the clamp that held the window cut his head off completely with the improvised guillotine. The decapitated body was discovered several days later, but it was not until the balloon and the head were found a week later in the field of a peasant eighteen miles from Paris, that the method of suicide was really known."

Buried Upside Down.

If Major Labelliere of Dorking was buried on the top of Box hill, head downward, in 1800, he probably got the idea from Mr. Hall of Leith Hill place, who in 1767 built the tower on the neighboring Leith hill and was buried there six years later. The usual Leith hill story, as recorded by one writer, is that the tower "marks the spot where an eccentric farmer of the neighborhood was buried on horseback upside down, so that when the world was turned, as he believed it then soon would be, topsy turvey, he might at last come up in the right position." The tradition might easily be transferred from one hill to its neighbor. There seems no doubt, however, that Mr. Hall was buried on the summit of Leith hill.—London Chronicle.

Strong Influence.

Friend—You have great influence over your husband. He never left your side all yesterday. How did you manage it?

Wife—Oh, I just sat firmly on the tails of his coat; that's all.

Doesn't Deserve Help.

The man who is willing to let other people bear his troubles isn't worth relieving.

Fate's Perversity.

A commuter was in a dreadful wreck. The collision had been head on, four coaches were telescoped, flames burst forth, the shrieks and groans of the dying mingled with the hiss of escaping steam.

The commuter, black as a coal, was dragged out by the feet from under a mound of charred and badly mangled corpses.

"Are you hurt?" he was asked.

The commuter opened his eyes and stretched himself, then, rising, snarled:

"Hurt? Me? Of course I ain't hurt! I never am! I can't be! I carry an accident insurance policy."

WRS. ROGRS STRUTHERS HOLDS A UNIQUE DISTINCTION

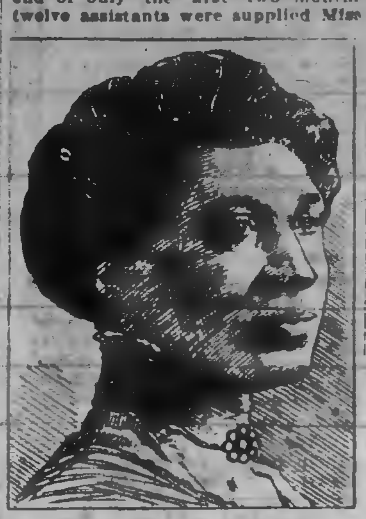
MRS ROGERS STRUTHERS HOLDS A UNIQUE DISTINCTION.

Toronto Woman Who Recently Married Doctor In City's Employ Was Doing Slum Work When She Got Idea Which Is Spreading All Over the World—Watching Death of Children.

The first municipal school nurse in the world — such is the distinction which belongs in a very absolute way to Mrs. Struthers of Toronto. The lady is better known to the world as "Lina Rogers," to which she lately appended the surname "Struthers" by her marriage, some two and a half months since, to Dr. W. E. Struthers of Toronto.

Lina Rogers was graduated from the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto, in—well, a year not very long gone, to judge by the merry look of her when talking.

It was while she was engaged in settlement work, in a welter of sorry life in New York City, that her own prolific Big Idea began to lay its hold on Lina Rogers. There were children thronging the streets of the slums—children whom the public schools of the city had rejected as either diseased or abnormal— unfit, at any rate for association in classes with their fellows. The health of well children was being safeguarded, but nothing was being done for the little outcasts. Conditions went to the heart of the worker, but, knowing that more was to do than to feel, she fixed her firm young hand to adjust the matter. She took her idea to the Board of Health of New York City and obtained license to try it out on a limited range of schools, all she could manage. The experiment succeeded to such a degree that at the end of only the first two months twelve assistants were supplied Miss Rogers, and at the end of three months the handsome sum of $30,000 was given toward the development of the project.



MISS LINA ROGERS STRUTHERS.

After six years' strenuous work in New York, a period sufficient for perfecting the system, Miss Rogers left for Pueblo, Colorado, to experiment further in public school nursing, with the Board of Education as controlling agent. The scheme worked out to such advantage that when, upon the recommendation of Mr. John Ross Robertson, of Toronto, and the Local Council of Women, Miss Rogers was invited by the Board of Education to direct the municipal school nursing, she accepted.

In eighteen out of twenty-one States, according to Mrs. Struthers, medical inspection in public schools is controlled by the Board of Education. Mrs. Struthers thinks this the ideal system, and the fact that she does should carry weight, as she is the only professional in the world who has had a seasoned experience with both methods. She reserves that the personnel of the boards must always be considered. In Toronto, the most felicitous relations have existed between the Board of Education and the Board of Health, where, except in the case of contagious disease, the Board of Education controls inspection.

The Toronto Public School medical staff comprises at the present time thirty-seven nurses, twenty-one medical inspectors, and three dentists, one inspector, and the other two dental surgeons. Mrs. Struthers directed the nursing staff until her recent marriage, when her post was resigned to one of her nurses, Miss Paul, who at present conducts the operations.

The leaven of Public School nursing in Toronto has spread by degrees to other cities, which constitute the lump on the national bakeboard. By degrees, too, has the lump grown less reluctant. Public school nurses, many trained by Mrs. Struthers, operate now in Victoria, Vancouver, Edmonton, Regina, Winnipeg, London, Galt, Stratford, Hamilton — all the leading Canadian cities, omitting (for some obscure cause) Ottawa. Public Schools in Montreal have had nurses for several years, but their number being seven (or not many more), and their management being three quite separate agents, success has not conspicuously crowned their efforts.

A nurse and organizer who holds the distinctive title of president of the Canadian Public School Nurses Association. Mrs. Struthers is also a writer on professional matters. She is president of the Editorial Board of "The Canadian Nurse," and has just completed a valuable work, "The Public School Nurse," a history and handbook.

Was He Right?

When the late King Edward was asked upon one occasion what he would do if the people of England abolished the monarchy and instituted a republic, he said: "What should I do? Nothing! The people of England would ask me to be their first President!"

Knew His Ground.

"You say this man is no chicken stealer?" inquired the judge.

"Yassah," replied Mr. Rastus Pinkley. "Dat's what I said."

"What do you know about the facts in the case?"

"I isn't s'posed to know nuffin 'bout de facts in de case. I is an expert witness foh de defense."—Washington Star.

Got His Reward.

"George," said his fiancee, "is your watch correct?"

"Yes," replied George, with a merry laugh. "It is keeping better time since I put your picture inside the case."

"Oh, you flatterer! How could that be?"

"Well, you see, when I placed your picture inside the case I added another jewel!"

Bad Judgment.

"There is one discordant note in your garden, my dear madam," remarked the aesthetic landscape architect.

"What is that?" asked the lady, much alarmed.

"I notice," he replied, with a shudder, "that you have a dogwood planted near some pussy willows."

Historical.

"Now, children," said the teacher of the juvenile class in history, "can any of you tell me Nero's greatest crime?"

"Playing the fiddle," promptly replied the youngster at the foot.

A Tale of the Three Cities

By CLARISSA MACKIE

At that point where the River Han empties into the great Yangtzekiang are the Three Cities, each crouching behind its high wall. On the south bank of the Yangtze is Wuchang. On the north bank of the river and separated by the busy little Han are Hanyang and Hankow. Along the river front at the lower end of the city of Hankow are situated the foreign concessions, with their protecting warships in the stream.

There is a saying that whatever evil is plotted in one city finds effect in the second and is avenged in the third of the Three Cities.

It remained for Cecil Rollins, English agent at Hankow, and his American friend, G. P. Bardwell of Shanghai, to discover the truth of this adage.

This story might never have been written if Rollins had not kicked his Chinese caddie one September day out on the Hankow golf course.

Of course Lan Ping had been often kicked by various masters, for he openly invited chastisement by his idleness and stupidity. Today he had failed to retrieve Rollins' ball when the sphere had sailed out of bounds, and only the aforementioned kick had aroused him from a squinting stare at the smoke hanging over the arsenal.

Instantly, as though the kick had actually impelled him in the proper direction, Lan Ping trotted after the ball.

"Idiot!" fumed Rollins impatiently.

"What else can you expect from a cross eyed Chinese?" yawned G. P. Bardwell.

Rollins lifted a blond eyebrow. "I'm not superstitious that way," he grunted.

"Fact, combined with what is simmering yonder." Bardell nodded toward the city.

"Simmering? Well, it's rotten hot out here, too!" ejaculated the Briton.

"I don't mean that sort of heat. Your caddie is more absorbed in watching for the broth to bubble over than he is in chasing your golf balls."

"What broth?"

"The revolutionary kind."

"Bah! Do you believe that rubbish? I had the notion you had lived in China long enough to take these local theatricals at their face value."

"I do. That's why I'm here now. Do you know, Rollins, I've more than a smattering of the language, and during the week I've been here in Hankow I've heard things. Man, things are going to happen right now—right here!"

"Eh? What? When? Blankety blank!" As these words exploded off Rollins' tongue he glared down at the lean and yellow hand that insinuated itself at his elbow. The yellow hand held the missing golf ball.

Even the self contained Bardwell looked disturbed when he realized that Lan Ping might have been standing there unseen for several minutes, long enough to absorb the meaning of what the foreigners had said. Not that much had been said on either side, only there are times when even a faint interest in secret affairs is highly imprudent.

This was one of the times, for China was on the eve of turning over and awakening from her long sleep.

The smoke hanging over the arsenal where half naked men worked day and night might be one indication of the stirring of the ancient empire.

The sun was setting and the gray of early twilight had clouded the golf course when the two friends gathered up their clubs and moved toward the stables.

"China never will wake up," yawned Cecil Rollins as he looked around for a Chinese to fetch his horse, but the stables were deserted, even to the very horses, as was proved when the two men looked inside.

"This is a bally fix!" growled Rollins.

"Lan Ping, of course," was Bardwell's comment. "Come along, Rollins. We'll have to foot it in."

The two men left the clubhouse and went down the road that led to the city. Off to the northwest where the railroad turned to the north there was a strange confusion of sounds. They had yet to learn that the first note of the revolution had been sounded. The locomotive whose shriek they had heard a short while before had found torn up tracks and met disaster beyond the city walls. Rebels were rejoicing over the wreck of the passenger train and the many victims of the catastrophe.

Darkness had settled over the road. Here and there a lamp swinging from its wooden post cast a feeble radius of light.

Halfway down the road there crossed another road at right angles. This road, leading to Hanyang by devious ways, was darker than the road to the golf course. Just as they reached the junction of the two roads something happened.

Dark forms came hurling out of the Hanyang road and enveloped the two foreigners in a writhing mass of arms and legs and dodging heads, and when the confusion was over Cecil Rollins was gagged and bound in a sedan chair, while G. P. Bardwell, in the same helpless condition, occupied another chair.

From his uncomfortable position in the chair, swinging along under the heaving shoulders of four bearers, Bardwell twisted his head until he could peer out through a crack in the door and see where they were being taken by their captives.

At last when Cecil Rollins and Bardwell, freed from their bonds, faced each other once more it was in a tiny stone cell, stifling hot and with but one visible aperture—a small window set high in one wall. From a lantern hanging outside this window there shot a ray of red light into the darkness of the cell.

"Rollins?" asked G. P. Bardwell doubtfully, and he was relieved to hear the Briton's affirmative.

"How did it happen?" asked Rollins.

"Lan Ping, of course, and the bubbling of the revolution pot," was Bardwell's disgusted reply.

"Of course we must get out of this. You know we can't let them boil us in oil or anything of that sort," said Rollins. "You take one side of this cell and I'll take the other, Bardwell."

"Wait a bit," said the other cautiously. "If you've got any plans to discuss you might exercise your German, eh?"

Rollins appeared to think so, too, for after that they conversed in German.

"First, let me repeat to you an ancient saying of the Three Cities," said Bardwell to his friend, and thereupon he related the adage that declares whatever evil is plotted in one city finds effect in the second and is avenged in the third.

"Our capture was plotted in Hankow. We are imprisoned in Hanyang. Our rescue must lie in Wuchang, across the big river. Let us get out of this and try to get across to Wuchang. I know a chap in the mission there—John Hildreth. He will take care of us."

They solemnly shook hands over the resolution, and then they examined the cell for a means of exit. There was none save the wooden door, which appeared to be fastened from without by a wooden bolt.

Bardwell brought forth matches and deliberately proceeded to set fire to the ancient door where it was latched. After repeated attempts the worm eaten wood ignited and burned slowly giving forth an acrid smoke that soon filled the little cell, but the wood burned sullenly until there was a charred spot that Bardwell could break away with his fist. The rotting bolt went with it and the door swung open.

In the corridor Rollins stumbled over their bags of golf clubs, and with an exclamation of delight he thrust two of the iron heeled sticks in Bardwell's hands and kept two himself.

"Right ahead," was Bardwell's advice, and so they forced themselves away from the smoke that hid their escape. The corridor turned and twisted, and from rocky walls on either side their hands encountered earth that narrowed down to a three foot hole in the ground. Crawling through this aperture, they found themselves outside the walls of Hanyang, with Tortoise hill looming above them.

"Cut around to the right! Follow the wall to the river front! Use your clubs!" were Bardwell's directions. And Rollins followed them to the letter. They met only two Chinamen, and both went down into the water filled ditch under the sharp blows of the iron clubs.

Panting for breath, they reached a flight of greasy stone steps. At the foot of these were a number of sampans. In a moment they had entered one and were putting forth across the river toward the Wuchang shore.

In the middle of the stream they paused and looked back at the two cities. From the direction of the railway there came the sound of firing and the red scourge of fire was licking the outskirts of the cities.

Over on the Wuchang shore the river front was alive with people watching the flames, and from within the ancient capital of Hupeh province there came a restless murmur, as of countless people running to and fro in fear as the rebels pillaged the city. The firing of Hankow had been the signal.

The sampan drifted down the middle of the stream, plainly visible to the watchers on shore. But who was interested in fishermen tonight when the world was being made over? Not the people of the Three Cities.

It was long after midnight when the watch of the man-of-war Dillworth spied a sampan bobbing along under the counter of the big vessel. A sharp hail was satisfactorily answered. A ladder went over the side, and presently two much bedraggled men, clinging affectionately to several golf clubs, arrived on deck, where they were immediately escorted to the officers' quarters.

At dawn as they turned into the berths provided by the hospitable British officers, bathed, fed and clothed and in a contented frame of mind, Cecil Rollins remarked to his American friend:

"By the way, Bardwell, old man, I thought you quoted a proverb—something about evil plotted in one city finds effect in the second and is avenged in the third. Now, where do we come in? How about the third city?"

But G. P. Bardwell, unable to explain the fallacious prophecy and entirely thankful for his rescue from a Chinese mob, merely turned over in bed and grunted:

"It's just an American joke, Rollins."

"That's just what I thought," murmured Cecil Rollins with evident relief, "but," he added thoughtfully as he looked at his bruised wrists, "I fancy the next time I kick a Chinese Caddie—why, I won't don't you know."

And he had a quiet laugh all to himself.

MAY USE SPACE UNDER THE SIDEWALK FOR COAL STORAGE

But Board of Works is not in Favor of Allowing Elevator for Turnbull Building to be Provided in Simcoe Street Walk

Messrs. W. G. Morrow, F. J. Might and Wm. Langford, sr., waited on the committee of the whole council last night, asking permission to use space under the sidewalk on Simcoe street to provide a coal storage apartment and also an elevator, which would be used for receiving cases of goods at the new Turnbull building.

The committee heard the application and passed it on to the Board of Works, but the members, after receiving the report of the City Engineer, recommended that permission be given only for the coal storage room, under an agreement protecting the city.

Mr Parsons's report follows:—

According to the plans it is proposed to use a space under the sidewalk about 20 feet long and for the full width of the sidewalk, about two-thirds of this to be used for a goods elevator. There will be an opening in the coal storage apartment near the outside of the sidewalk and an opening from the elevator apartment approximately 5x6 feet. This is near the outside of the sidewalk also.

The contractor, Mr. Langford, informs me that it is the desire of the company to extend the areas to the outside of the proposed new curb on Simcoe street, as it will be when the street is paved. I consider that the granting of this application is largely a matter to be determined by the Board of Works, as it will determine the policy to be followed in the future.

It is true that these areas are allowed in most large cities, but I also think that it is true that the large cities regret that such a policy was ever started. As the city grows larger, the space underneath the roadway becomes filled with pipes and conduits until finally it becomes necessary for the space underneath the sidewalk to be used for public utilities. When this time arrives there is also a great deal of confusion and trouble caused on account of areas having been allowed underneath the sidewalk. The sidewalk is a part of the public street and I do not see why the owner of the property adjacent to it should have the exclusive right to use parts underneath the sidewalks. That is practically giving them a certain part of the street, also causing a certain amount of obstruction on the sidewalk. It is my experience that elevators of this kind are kept open longer than they need be and are a general nuisance to the public using the sidewalk. My opinion is that provision should be made just inside the building for the storage of coal and for goods elevator. I will suggest that it might be advisable to allow them to carry a chute from the coal storage room to the outside of the week, to be removed at any future time when required by the city authorities. The coal storage in the walk is not so objectionable in my opinion as the elevator, as in the case of the conduits being run in the sidewalk they should be supported by the sidewalk itself, but I am opposed to allowing the elevator in the sidewalk under any conditions whatever.

A SENSIBLE REPORT

Members of the Board thought the report to be a good sensible one.

Mr. Parsons said Toronto had these underground elevators with the openings in the sidewalk, but he believed the city regretted their action. He knew that Ottawa did.

In Toronto he said the rental was 4c per square foot each year.

The Board recommended that the company be charged 2 cents per square foot.

FILLED UP NOW

Regarding the necessity of providing space for conduits, Mr. Parsons explained that already on Simcoe street from the sidewalk to the middle of the road there was a water main, gas main, service drain and a conduit.

CITY'S USE OF LOT

The account of B. F. Ackerman for the use of property by the city for storage purposes was left in the hands of the chairman and City Engineer.

A QUESTION OF HOSE

"What's done with all this hose?" asked Ald. Johnston, when an account from the Fire Department for hose was read.

If properly taken care of, he thought the life of the hose would be longer.

The chairman pointed out that it was not possible to give the hose the same care as the Fire Department gave.

The Engineer said the department had not received any hose since he took charge. The Fire Chief asked credit for 750 feet of hose as he wants the slate cleaned. The Board of Works has counter accounts.

The respective chairmen will attempt to adjust the matter.

SUITABLE SWING IN C.P.R. BRIDGE NOW SEEMS CERTAIN

Offer of the Company is Satisfactory to The Council

The telegram received from the C.P.R. by Mayor Bradburn, saying that the company would place a swing in their bridge, was read at a committee of the whole council last night as follows:

"Telegram received, Company willing to provide serviceable swing, centre span on Otonabee River bridge, giving about 37 feet clear. Opens both sides of pivot pier."

"That's good enough," remarked Ald. Duncan.

A letter from Mr. Burnham was also read as follows:

Gentlemen,—I had the pleasure of meeting your committee this morning with regard to the C. P. R. bridge. A telegram having come from the C.P.R. to the Mayor this morning agreeing to put in a 37 feet swing opening in the middle span, has proved, I understand, acceptable to your committee. So far as the Government is concerned, we all must assume that what is to be done meets with their approval with regards to their rights and privileges as guardians of the public interest.

I am glad to find that your committee is content with the assumption that what suits the Government will do well enough for the city also.

Yours truly,
J. H. BURNHAM.

After a short discussion it was decided to send two telegrams, the copies of which read like this:

Hon. R. Rogers,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa,—

Have received telegram from C. P. R. saying they are willing to provide swing in centre span Otonabee River bridge, giving about 37 feet clear opening both sides of pivot pier. If, in opinion of Government, this will serve purposes of navigation, City Council is satisfied.

MAYOR.

F. L. Wanklyn,
Executive Assistant C.P.R.
Montreal,—

Your telegram received. Have telegraphed Minister of Public Works that if in opinion of Government, a swing in centre span giving 37 feet clear opening, both sides of pivot pier, will serve purposes of navigation, the City Council is satisfied.

MAYOR.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES

A "Big Sister" Club is being organized at the Y.W.C.A. on Simcoe street. This "Big Sister" Club is one of the most interesting and friendly of all "Y" clubs. A series of travel talks on different countries, various evenings with Dickens, Scott, Shakespeare and Longfellow, pleasant hours with great musicians will be among some of the "Big Sister" Club work. But knowing all work and no play is poor policy, we think the "Big" sisters and "Little" sisters and "Middle-between" sisters would all enjoy at odd times a snowshoe by moonlight, a romp in the "Gym.," a skating party, and, of course, the ever present, always enjoyable, far from being forgotten sociable cup of tea, and the "eats" that go with it.

The membership book is wide open waiting for your name. We're looking at you and wanting you to come along and make the "Big Sister" Club also a "Big Success" Club. It's up to you! Are you coming?

Come in and ask us about it. We'll be glad to tell you.

New instruments have been ordered from the Old Country, and by the first of the year the band will be considerably strengthened. Bandmaster Ayling is in charge.

GOOD INCREASE IN PRICE OF LOTS

In speaking of the progress of this section of the city Mr. Fife told the Review that lots on the corner of Princess and Aylmer streets, which he sold for $250 last June, were sold last week for $500 each.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1913, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,367 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 427 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto

Do We Dodge Death?

Can we mortals always be trusted to do the right thing? The fear of death is general. Life is sacrificed every hour because the rules of health are not obeyed. Death is the one great monster of dread and from whom all flee. Yet how many safeguard their living in such a way as to avert his coming? The rules of health are violated because of the immunity we feel but finally the penalty must be paid. No argument is needed to enforce the lesson. Everybody knows it. The rules of right living are clear, explicit. Vice, intemperance, wrong living, overeating as well as overdrinking, continue to pay their tribute to the undertaker and the graveyard.—Leslie's.

EAST MIDDLESEX

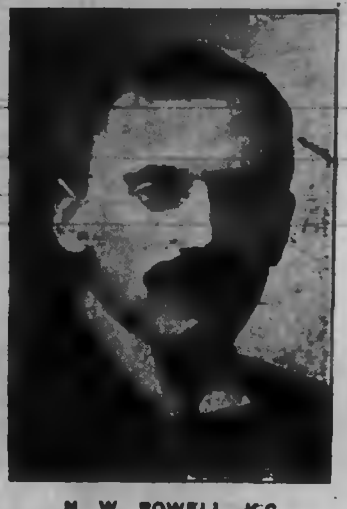
MR. N. W. ROWELL OPENS BAZAAR TO-NIGHT SIR WM. MEREDITH COMING FOR SATURDAY

An Array of Prettily Decorted Booths and Many Novel Features to be Seen at Armories

To-day's official opening of St. George's Bazaar at the armories will be at 8 p.m.

The opening ceremonies will be as follows: As the procession enters the balcony the band of the 57th Regiment will perform a "fan-fare." Following this the St. George's Choral Society will sing "O Canada."



N. W. ROWELL, K.C.

The chairman, E. A. Peck, Esq., M.P.P., will then introduce N. W. Rowell, Esq., the leader of the Opposition in Ontario, who will make the opening speech. A vote of thanks will be proposed by His Worship Police Magistrate Dumble. Sheriff Hall will second the vote of thanks.

The St. George's Choral Society will then sing another chorus.

Sir John Gibson, Lieutenant Governor of Canada, and Lady Gibson, were met at the C.P.R. station yesterday by Rev. James Price, of St. George's Church, Mayor Bradburn, Aldermen Gillespie, Johnston and other members of the Council and citizens, who escorted the distinguished visitors to the Armories, where Col. Clegg received him as became one old army officer another.

After the reception dinner was served in the band room, which was attended by many of our distinguished citizens, and a toast was proposed to the King.

Sir John and Lady Gibson then addressed the company from the balcony of the Drill Hall. He said that he had accepted the invitation of Mr Price because he thought it was useless to refuse, as Mr. Price was determined he should come. The object was a good one and deserved all the support he could give to it. But there was another reason for accepting this invitation and it was that he wanted to come to Peterboro. The last time he was in the city it was to lay the foundation stone of a Presbyterian church. He was himself a Presbyterian, but he had made it a point to make no distinction in the matter of patronage. All the churches were doing a good work and the differences in these later days were very small. There was abundant evidence of cooperation and good will among those engaged in carrying on the Christianizing of the people. Looking at it from a mere material standpoint with all these strangers coming into the country, the churches were doing a splendid work in keeping the social element alive and ought to be encouraged.

He said he was greatly pleased with the Armories, and the splendid equipment of the building; he thought that every member must ance.

POWERS IN CONFERENCE

British Diplomat Discusses Mexican Question With Wilson.

No Damage Has Been Done to Property of Foreigners at Turpam or Tampico — Two British Cruisers Have Arrived on the Coast—Great Britain's Attitude Towards Monroe Doctrine Stated.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Another visit paid yesterday to President Wilson by Sir William Tyrrel, private secretary to Sir Edward Grey, the British Minister of Foreign Affairs, has revived reports of a British-American understanding with reference to the Mexican situation.

No information as to the reason for Sir William's call at the White House was furnished, other than a brief statement by him in response to an inquiry that he was sailing for England on Saturday and had called on the President merely to say goodbye.

This was the third conversation that Sir William Tyrrel has had with President Wilson within a week. It has been admitted that he discussed Mexican affairs with the President and Secretary Bryan on previous visits.

A telegraphic report from Rear Admiral Fletcher Wednesday told of ascertaining that no damage had been done to either British or American interests at Turpam or its vicinity.

Yesterday the Navy Department received a despatch from Admiral Fletcher reporting his arrival at Tampico in his flagship, the battleship Rhode Island. He said that everything there was quiet. At Turpam and Tampico there are extensive British and American interests.

The most interesting information in Admiral Fletcher's report was that the British armored cruiser Suffolk, flagship of Rear Admiral Craddock, had arrived at Tampico. He reported also that the British armored cruiser Berwick of Rear Admiral Craddock's squadron had arrived at Puerto, Mexico, formerly Coaxocoalcos, the Atlantic outlet of the Tehauntepec railroad.

The Monroe Doctrine.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—The Thanksgiving dinner of the American Society here last night was noteworthy because of the pronouncement of the British Government's endorsement of the Monroe doctrine by Viscount Haldane, Lord High Chancellor. Three hundred and fifty American men and women, with a large number of British guests, were present and they cheered Lord Haldane's words again and again.

He said that the United States considered herself responsible for the liberties of the smaller nations of that hemisphere. He could see what was in the mind of the President of that time — that the responsibility rested with the United States to secure good government and fair treatment for those countries.

Lord Haldane eulogized President Wilson and his expressed declaration that the policy of the United States is not one of conquest or annexation. "The world," he said, "looks to the United States, with its enormous position and possessions, to carry on its traditions without adding to its possessions. That is our course also. Nor is it the case that when the United States intervenes in any matter it is done for its own advantage. It was not the case with Cuba, to whom the United States restored independence. Britain itself has done the same thing in South Africa, where we gave back liberty to those with whom we fought."

He interpreted President Wilson's policy to mean that the United States was ready to accept the responsibility of insuring good terms herself in those countries and to those who went there, and the the United States should set up high ideals of policy, of justice and of righteousness.

Lord Kintore spoke of the coming celebration of the century of peace between the two nations. He said he hoped it would eventually be followed by the celebration of the millennium of peace.

Rebels Moving To Tampico?

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 28.—There is a report current here that the rebels have evacuated Victoria, capital of the State of Tamaulipas, and are moving in the direction of Tampico, but the report has it that they practically razed the city and destroyed the archives.

Such reports of developments through the country as are available indicate rebel progress almost at all points, although the tone of the reports emanating from the War Department is optimistic.

Rebels Routed?

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28. — Despatches to the constitutionalist headquarters here report an engagement at La Crus, on the Linares branch of the Mexican National Railway, between Monterey and Tampico, in which the constitutional general, Antonio Villarcalis, is said to have been routed the federal troops under Rubio Navarette, and to have taken their trains.

The same despatches declared the constitutionalist generals, Aguilar and Abel Salzar, were moving on Tampico with about 7,000 men.

Three Were Drowned.

MARSHFIELD, Ore., Nov. 28.—Fourth Officer Shane, Quartermaster Oswald and Seaman H. Hansen of the steamship President, from Seattle for San Francisco, were drowned fifty miles off Coos Bay Wednesday night when they attempted to rescue an unidentified steerage passenger who had been swept overboard by a heavy sea. The men put out in a ship's boat to effect the rescue, and the boat was swamped.

Arrest Not Political.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28. — After receiving a cablegram from his Government, Gen. Cammero, Nicaraguan Minister here, last night issued the following statement:

"The legation of Nicaragua desires it to be known that the Government of Nicaragua is not proceeding against Gen. Jose Zelaya in the case of extradition, for political animosity, but only in fulfilling the decision of the Supreme Court of Nicaragua, which has indicted Gen. Zelaya for the crime of murder.

Trapper Found Dead.

HUNTSVILLE, Nov. 28—With lantern in hand and a few mink he had taken from traps he was examining along the shore, Christopher Sawyer, a guide and trapper, was found dead on the shore of Lake of Bays, near Dorset, two days ago. Sawyer, who was an elderly man, had spent many years in this district and was well-known to camping and tourist parties. Heart failure is given as the cause of death.

France's Big Deficit.

PARIS, Nov. 28.—The Chamber of Deputies yesterday took up for debate the question of the new loan of $260,000,000 to cover the budget deficit, and it is expected a vote will be reached by Friday night or Saturday.

G.O.M. OF CANADIAN BAR.

Sir Aemilius Irving Dies In Toronto Aged 91 Years.

TORONTO, Nov. 28.—Sir Aemilius Irving, the Grand Old Man of the legal profession in Canada, passed away at his residence, 19 Russel street, at the age of nearly 91 years. He has suffered from a protracted weakness, due to old age.

Sir Aemilius Irving was born at Leamington, England, on March 2? 1823, the son of Hon. Jacob Aemilius Irving. His mother was a daughter of Sir Jere Homfray, Llandaff House, Glamorganshire. He came to Canada with his parents at the age of 11.

On coming to Canada the Irvings lived at Lundy's Lane, and later in North York. Sir Aemilius was educated at Upper Canada College, and was an honorary LL.D. of Toronto University. He was called to the Bar in 1849, and was appointed Queen's Counsel half a century ago by Viscount Monck. He had been a bencher of the Upper Canada Law Society since 1[illegible]4, and treasurer of the society since 1893, following Edward Blake in that office.

Until this summer he appeared at Osgoode Hall regularly day by day, heavily wrapped up, and often with a plaid about his shoulders even in the warmest weather.

He sat as Liberal member in the Commons from 1874. to 1878.

The Ontario Government appointed him a royal commissioner on several occasions, and for years he has been counsel for Ontario in the arbitration for the settlement of disputed accounts between the Dominion and the Government of Ontario and Quebec.

Believe This If You Like.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The American prints a despatch from Orange, Texas, stating that Miss Jessie Wilson and Mr. Francis Sayre were married there at the same time as the wedding was being performed in the White House. Mr. Sayre is a prosperous young planter, and his bride is the daughter of a wealthy farmer.

Chilian Battleship Launched.

NEWCASTLE, Eng., Nov. 28.—The Chilean battleship Almirante Latorre was launched yesterday at the Elswick shipyards. Her displacement is 28,000 tons and her engines are expected to develop over 37,000 indicated horsepower. The contract calls for a speed of 23 knots.

Kingston To Have Wireless.

KINGSTON, Nov. 28. — Kingston will have a wireless station in a short time, located near Cataraqui bridge. Apparatus has arrived from Toronto and an expert is here to supervise the work.

MAY BECOME PRESIDENT OF THE NEW YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD.

A. H. SMITH

William C. Brown resigned recently as president of the New York Central Lines, of which he was the head since February, 1909. The boards of directors of the various lines of the New York Central system at a meeting in the Grand Central Terminal accepted the resignation, which becomes effective on January 1. Ill health is given as the cause of his retirement.

No successor to Mr. Brown was chosen at the meeting. Officials of the company said that it was expected that the next president of the New York Central Lines would be Alfred H. Smith, probably to be elected at a meeting in the near future. Mr. Smith is now senior vice president, having been promoted to that position last March.

HOME RULE DEADLOCK CONTINUES SAYS ASQUITH

Eagerly Awaited Speech of Prime Minister Conveys No Ray of Hope to Those Who Anticipated the Announcement of a Conference—He Denies Reports of a Split in the Liberal Government.

LEEDS, Eng., Nov. 28.—Premier Asquith's speech yesterday, at the meeting of the National Liberal Federation, which was eagerly awaited because it was expected to throw light on the question of how far the negotiations for a settlement of home rule by agreement had been successful, disappointed those who were sanguine of a peaceful issue.

"I should be deceiving myself," he said, "if I said that I saw at this moment a prospect of agreement. But I cannot concur with those who say time has been or is being wasted."

The Prime Minister declared that there was no foundation for the statement that on this or any other matter the Cabinet was divided, which the Conservative press had been proclaiming for the last few days. With regard to a possible settlement by consent, he held it should be carried beyond the reach of electoral or parliamentary vicissitudes, otherwise the Irish question would continue to be the football of party politics to the infinite injury of both Ireland and the United Kingdom as a whole.

It was in this spirit, said Mr. Asquith, that he took upon himself to invite, not a conference of party leaders, but a free and unprejudiced interchange of views and suggestions. He had no reason to despair regarding the acceptance of the invitation by the leaders of the Opposition. The Government was not going to make, either on its own initiative or on the suggestion of others, any surrender of principle, but it had not closed any door on a reasonable way of peace.

There was no ground whatever, he declared, for the demand made by the Conservatives for a general election. It could not be fought on the single issue of home rule, and could not result in a settlement of the question. So far as he was concerned, he would not advise any such course. The Government was determined to give home rule to Ireland, and was not going to be frightened or arrested by menaces of civil war.

The Prime Minister also disappointed those who had been expecting some pronouncement from him indicating the prospect of a decrease of the vast expenditure for armaments, concerning which much dissatisfaction has been expressed among the Liberals recently.

He, and every one of his colleagues in the Government, he said, lamented as much as any man in the assembly, the huge diversion all over the world of national wealth into non-productive channels. A Ministry, which out of wantonness or levity, in a burst of vainglorious rivalry, added as much as a pound to the expenditure for that purpose, was committing a national crime. They could not plead guilty to that reproach. They were charged with a solemn trust, and in its performance it was their duty to maintain a vigilant watch on what the rest of the nations were doing, and be constantly ready. He thought the problem could be met by the co-operation of the great powers of the world, brought about by the demands of the people.

BATTLESHIP LAUNCHED.

Big British Vessel Is To Be Called Emperor of India.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS, England, Nov. 28.—The British battleship Emperor of India, the last of the four battleships on the 1911-12 naval construction program, was launched here yesterday. It was a first intended to call her the Delhi. Her construction had been considerably delayed owing to labor troubles at the shipyard so that the new vessel is not of such type as some of the ships already launched. She was laid down on May 31, 1912.

The British Admiralty yesterday departed from its recent custom and invited the naval attaches of the foreign embassies in London to be present at the launching, its reason for doing this being probably because the details concerning the new battleship were already known.

French Army Aviators Killed.

EPERNAY, France, Nov. 28.—The two aviators who were burned to death when their biplane caught fire Wednesday near Chantemerle were identified yesterday as Capt. Briot of the Artillery, and Sapper Pouillard.

As the men attempted a landing on the outskirts of Chantemerle, the machine crashed into a hedge. The tank then exploded, covering the aeroplane and its occupants with burning oil. The machine was destroyed and the bodies were badly charred.

One Killed by Train.

AMHERST, N.S., Nov. 28.—Ralph Noyes of Malden, Mass., was instantly killed, and W. R. Cray of Dartmouth seriously injured when the westbound express on the I.C.R. ran into a hand car at Little Fork, two miles this side of Athol, shortly before noon yesterday. Noyes and Cray were members of a surveying party.

Bank Figures In Deal.

GALT, Nov. 28.—The Merchants' Bank here figured in another important real estate deal by securing the large block adjacent to the corner they recently bought. The figure paid was large, and it is expected they will commence a new building in the spring.

CONSERVATIVE DEFEATS FUSIONIST CANDIDATE IN EAST MIDDLESEX

AN INCIDENT OF THE CAMPAIGN

There were several surprises for both sides. For the Liberals the surprise was the large majority given for Mr. Laidlaw in the home township of Mr. McFarlan, West Nissouri. This was partly due to a bitter fight over the continuation schools in this usually Conservative township.

HARDINGE TAKES SIDES

Viceroy Condemns Natal's Invidious and Unjust Laws

LONDON, Nov. 28.—The advices received yesterday from Durban are symptomatic of the grave results likely to follow the embitterment produced in the minds of the South African Ministers by the speech of Baron Hardinge, Viceroy of India, at Madras on Wednesday, in which he sympathised with the passive resistance by the Natal Indians to "invidious and unjust laws," and demanded an impartial inquiry into these.

The viceroy's speech is variously explained here as an unfortunate indiscretion and as the result of grave feeling in India calling for such outspoken sympathy. There is little doubt, however, in the minds of those who have studied the situation that it will encourage the Indians in Africa to violent resistance.

Five East Indians Killed.

DURBAN, Natal, Union of South Africa, Nov. 28.—Five East Indians were killed yesterday in another serious affray between the strikers and the police, which occurred on the Blackburn sugar estate, in the Mount Edgecombe district, about 14 miles to the north of Durban. The most important sugar crushing mill in Natal is located there.

The police were obliged to fire several volleys before they succeeded in quelling the rioters.

THINK MINISTER A SUICIDE.

Rev. Mr. Butler Had Been a Victim of Melancholia.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., Nov. 28.—Residents of the district who were intimately acquainted with Rev. Frank Butler, whose body was found by the water near St. Joe Island two weeks ago, with the throat cut, scout the theory of murder as advanced before a coroner's jury, and believe he ended his own life. They say he had suffered from melancholia for a year.

He came from a point down the line as a Presbyterian student and preached at Sowesby, and was later sent from there to St. Joe Island, where he boarded with a family by name of Pateman.

It was at first thought that murder had been committed as the cheek bone was broken and the throat cut from ear to ear, but Dr. Wallace who made the autopsy, said that it was apparent from the wound that the man had committed suicide as the lobes of the ears were cut by a knife, and he believed that the cheek bone was broken when Butler fell on the rocky shore.

Butler had left all his valuables at the boarding house. He was about 36 years of age and has relatives in England.

Radial Line Begins Monday.

ST. CATHARINES, Nov. 28.—Electric cars carried the Lincoln County Council from St. Catharines to Niagara-on-the-Lake yesterday afternoon, and next Monday a regular passenger service will be commenced from the city to the Niagara Township line. The remainder of the distance, which is very short, will be completed within a few weeks, when a through service will be inaugurated.

No New Trial For Campbell.

MONTREAL, Nov. 28. — William Campbell, the negro sentenced to death by Justice Cross at the last session of the Criminal Court who was condemned to be hanged on next New Year's eve for the murder of George Muir last August, will have to ask the Governor-General for clemency as his application for a new trial was rejected by the Court of Appeal.

Oil Boat Launched.

JARROW, Eng., Nov. 28. — The largest oil-carrying vessel in the world, having a capacity of 15,000 tons of oil, was launched here yesterday. The vessel was christened San Hilario by Mrs. Herbert J. Carr of New York City.

The new ship is one of ten tank steamers of the same size now being constructed for the Eagle Oil Transport Co.

Craig Murder Trial To-day.

SHELBYVILLE, Ind., Nov. 28.—Dr. William B. Craig, dean of the Veterinary College at Indianapolis, will be placed on trial before Judge Blair here to-day to answer to an indictment charging him with the murder of Dr. Helene Knabe at Indianapolis on the night of Oct. 23.

Fight Over Continuation Schools Figured in the Result

LONDON, Nov. 28.—John McFarlan, of Nissouri, yesterday defeated John W. Laidlaw, Alliance-Liberal candidate for the Legislature, by a majority of 293. The vote was a large one, totalling 4,237, of which Mr. McFarlan received 2,265 and Mr. Laidlaw 1,972. The majorities by townships were:

	McFarlan.	Laidlaw.
London	523	...
Dorchester	105	...
Nissouri	...	120
Westminster	...	215
Totals	628	335

The fight was a warm one, Mr. Rowell, the Liberal leader, appearing several times in the riding.

The temperance issue while it played a large part in the fight, did not altogether account for the result, according to Conservative organizers. Mr. McFarlan's own township, Nissouri, gave a majority against him of 120. This was on account of a bitter fight over the continuation schools in the district, they declare.

The Conservative majority shows a considerable reduction in comparison with that obtained in last year's by-election, when the late member, Geo. Neely, was returned by 539.

The conditions at that time were, however, unusual, the Liberal candidate, Mr. Sutherland, meeting with much opposition within the party ranks on the ground that he lacked sympathy with the "abolish-the-bar" campaign, and that, previous to his candidacy, he had been rated as an Independent Conservative.

The fusion of Liberal and temperance policies in the case of the present candidate consolidated the two elements in the vote.

FREIGHT AND PASSENGERS.

C.P.R. Lawyers Say Mr. Muller's Division Is Unfair.

OTTAWA, Nov. 28.—The afternoon session of the Railway Commission in the western freight rates case continued yesterday with the cross-examination of the Government expert, J. P. Muller, by the counsel for the C.P.R. It was a careful examination of the members in the various exhibits to try to show that in Mr. Muller's divisions of costs of operations between the passenger and freight businesses, the passenger end of the company operations was being charged with too much of the costs and the freight business charged with too little.

Mr. Chrysler for the C.P.R. gave figures to show that freight locomotives used up more coal per mile than did the passenger locomotives.

Mr. Pitblado, acting for Manitoba, asked if the C. P. R. could give the difference in the cost of passenger and freight crews. The information will be forthcoming.

PRINCE SHOULD ATTEND.

Presence at Panama Opening Would Allay Ill-Feeling Says Paper.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—A suggestion that the Prince of Wales should attend the official opening of the Panama Canal is under consideration by King George, according to The Liverpool Courier. Such recognition of the International importance of the event would be popular in the United States, The Courier says, and would help to obliterate some of the ill-feeling caused by the British Government's decision against official participation in the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco.

Hon. Wm. George Cadogan, aide-de-camp to the Prince of Wales, replying from Oxford in response to a telegraphic inquiry as to what truth there was in The Liverpool Courier's report respecting a visit to the United States of the prince, says:

"As far as I know there is no truth in the statement."

Subterranean Blaze.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Nov. 28. — The fire department has been called upon to fight a curious underground fire that has been burning over an extent of ten acres of land south of the city for several weeks. The fire is slowly consuming some substance a few feet under the surface.

The firemen fear to open up the earth and thus give the smothered blaze a chance to get a firmer hold and as the underground conflagration is about a mile from the nearest fire plug there is no way to get water to it. The scene is an old city garbage dump.

Last Trip From Montreal.

MONTREAL, Nov. 28.—When Captain H. G. Kendall, R.N.R., takes his big ship, the Ruthenia, out of port early to-morrow morning, the last of the ocean liners to clear from Montreal this season will have gone. Then the five months' winter rest will settle down on the river front.

Premier Left Hot Springs.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Nov. 28.—Robert Laird Borden, Premier of Canada, left for Washington last night, on his way home. He will be Secretary Bryan's guest at luncheon to-day and will call upon President Wilson to pay his respects.

THE RUSE IN EAST MIDDLESEX

The result of East Middlesex by election is entirely satisfactory and very encouraging to the Conservative party in Ontario. There was a slight reduction in the majority compared with the last election, but the wonder is that a Conservative candidate can get a majority at all in Provincial elections. They way in which Conservative candidates are misrepresented and besmirched by the Liberal organization is enough to make any respectable Canadian pause before voting for one.

This election was a distinctly "abolish the bar" contest, at least the Liberals perpetually dinned that in. The Liberal candidate was a sort of cross between a Liberal and a Dominion Alliance man, a very ingenius hybrid quantity, bred purposely to stalk the unwary Conservative voter who appeared to have special tendencies toward that excellent temperance organization. So that we say it is a wonder many more were not caught in the trap. The Christian Guardian with the best of misguided motives "put it up to" the members of the Methodist church that they must vote for Mr. Laidlaw whether they were Liberal or Conservative, as he represented Temperance, pure and simple. The ruse has failed, as it deserved. Let us be straight.

OUR COUNTY COUSINS

The Review has received a very long letter, too long to print, from a farmer in or near Keene. We are always glad to hear from farmers, it is like a refreshing breeze from the country fields—not to mention the farm yard. But we must ask this particular country correspondent to cut his epistles down very considerably. Furthermore, we would ask him to get as near to facts as possible when he is quoting what we say in these columns. He accuses us in his letter of having called the farmers a "bunch of idiots, stubborn mules, thick-necked, short-sighted lot of jackasses!" We confess that our vocabulary hitherto has not contained these choice epithets, and we disclaim any credit for inventing them, we leave all that to our country correspondent.

But we are not annoyed at him, we take his criticism all in good part and try to believe that he is "fooling" us a little. The editorial on the "Deserted Village" was written with the intention of getting in touch with country readers with the purpose of mutual benefit. The city editor does not despise the farmer, he may not always know as much about farm work and country conditions as the men on the spot. But there are editors who are not absolutely ignorant of these conditions. Some editors have been on the spot themselves and can take the farmer's point of view. We believe the city can be of great help to the country and that the country can be of like assistance to the city, there is too wide a gulf between the two and both suffer for the separation. A closer communion of country and city would be for the good of both. But this will not be brought about by each calling the other names, or attributing sinister motives. Our chief point was the conservation of young life. To stop the wasteful and disastrous drainage of country life into Canadian and American cities. Young people complain that country life is monotonous and are deserting the farm and the village to be caught in the vortex of the city. This is bad for our national life and it is bad for trade, and we believe that the increase in the cost of living is due to a large extent to this drainage of our best rural life.

If our country correspondent or anyone else will write us along these lines and try and put all they have to say on one sheet of note paper, or even less—for short letters are the especial delight of editors—then we will print their epistles gladly and enter into a good-natured discussion on this very important problem of the conservation of young rural life.

CONTRADICTORY POLITICS

"If there ever comes a day—and I pray God it will not—Great Britain will find that every party in Canada will rally to her help." These were the words used by Sir Wilfrid Laurier the other day at Hamilton, and so far as they go they are so good. It is certainly a relief to have this assurance from such a source, but it would be still more gratifying if this profession of loyalty was backed by some action in the way of preserving the peace of Great Britain. It is well to know that you have friends when trouble comes on, but it is better if those friends will do their best to keep the trouble off. This was the object of the "emergency" contribution and the moral effect of the proposal was a good one despite the ultimate rejection of the proposal by the Senate.

"Not Dreadnoughts but free food is what the people want"—this is another declaration of Sir Wilfrid at Hamilton, and it is a very strange one after all that has been said about the building of a Canadian Navy!

Now, we would like to know just where we are. Here we have been trying to persuade Liberals from their Canadian Navy proposals, as a policy of waste and financial disaster, and now Sir Wilfrid turns round and tells us we don't want a navy, but food.

That the question of the cost of living is of far more importance than the building of a navy must be admitted by everyone who has the proper development of Canada at heart. Canada is an agricultural country. It is a continent, not an island. The words of Henri Bourassa, uttered at Smith Falls, are very much to the point here, and we quote them:

"In matters of defence each self-governing colony should take the most effective means of protecting its own territory. In maritime countries, like New Zealand or the Straits, national defence is primarily naval. In continental countries such as Canada or India, the first object should be land or coast defence. It is absurd to pretend that any given policy of defence should be adopted in Canada, because it has been accepted in New Zealand, or vice versa."

ORIGIN OF CANCER

Dr. E. Robinson, in a paper presented at the Paris Academy of Medicine, which gained the prize offered for the best work on cancer, announces his method for determining cancer in the first stages. It has heretofore been very difficult because of the confusion with tuberculosis symptoms and other growths of various kinds, not cancerous. Dr. Robinson, after experimenting on hundreds of patients, declares his method infallible.

The formula he communicated to the Academy is a hypodermic solution. Then the temperature of the patient is taken every three hours. If it mounts from half to one and one-half degrees the disease is cancer, otherwise the temperature remain satationary.

Tests have been made 300 times in Paris hospitals with satisfactory results.

The above item of news will have some interest to many readers who watch the advance of medical treatment of cancer. A disease which many people dread as much as the "white plague," which has occupied public attention of late. The difficulty with the treatment of cancer seems to be in discovering its origin. It will be seen from the above report that there has been some confusion with tuberculosis symptoms and other growths, not cancerous. The thought has come to us as to whether all diseases have not a common basis or origin. If there is a possibility of confusing cancer with tuberculosis in early stages, it would appear that these, and possibly most diseases, spring from the same root, and that the various ills that flesh is heir to are merely different expressions of one inherent tendency. This opens up a big subject, and one which we leave to our doctors, and possibly theologians.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

If brass is very much tarnished it will be found wise to wash it thoroughly in a warm, soapy water, to which ammonia has been added. Then polish it with a tried metal polish.

BLACK, GREEN or MIXED

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF
BAYARD VEILLER

At this incriminating crisis for the son the father hastily strode into the library. He had been aroused by the inspector's shouting and was evidently greatly perturbed.

"What's all this?" he exclaimed.

Burke in a moment like this was no respecter of persons.

"You can see for yourself," he said grimly to the dumfounded magnate. "So," he went on, with somber menace in his voice, "you did it, young man." He nodded toward the detective. "Well, Cassidy, you can take 'em both downtown. That's all."

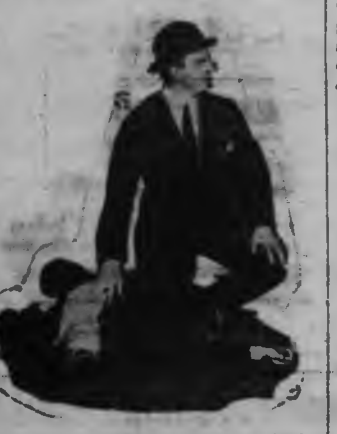
The command aroused Dick to remonstrance against such indignity toward the woman he loved.

"Not her!" he cried imploringly. "You don't want her, inspector! This is all wrong!"

"Dick," Mary advised quietly, "don't talk, please."

"What do you expect?" Burke inquired truculently. "As a matter of fact, the thing's simple enough, young man. Either you killed Griggs or she did."

The inspector with his charge made a careless gesture toward the corpse of the murdered stool pigeon. Edward Gilder looked and saw the ghastly, inanimate heap of flesh and bone that had once been a man. He fairly reeled at the spectacle, then fumbled with an outstretched hand until he laid hold on a chair, into which he sank helplessly.



"You could drive a hearse through the hole they made in him."

"Either you killed him," the voice repeated gratingly, "or she did. Well, then, young man, did she kill him?"

"Good God, no!" Dick shouted, aghast.

"Then it was you!"

"No, no! He didn't!" Mary's words came frantically.

Burke reiterated the accusation.

"One of you killed Griggs. Which one of you did it?" He scowled at Dick. "Did she kill him?"

"I told you no!"

"Well, then," he blustered to the girl, "did he kill him?"

The nod of his head was toward Dick. Then as she remained silent, "I'm talking to you!" he snapped. "Did he kill him?"

The reply came with a soft distinctness that was like a crash of destiny.

"Yes."

Dick turned to his wife in reproachful amazement.

"Mary!" he cried incredulously.

"You'll swear he killed him?" Burke asked briskly.

"Why not?" she responded listlessly.

At this intolerable assertion as he deemed it Edward Gilder sat rigidly erect in his chair.

"God!" he cried despairingly. "And that's your vengeance!"

"I don't want vengeance—now!" she said.

"But they'll try my boy for murder," the magnate remonstrated, distraught.

"Oh, no, they can't!" came the rejoinder.

"What's the reason we can't?" Burke stormed.

"Because my husband merely killed a burglar. He shot him in defense of his home!"

* * * * * * *

In his office next morning Inspector Burke was fuming over the failure of his conspiracy. He had hoped through this plot to vindicate his authority, so sadly flaunted by Garson and Mary Turner. Instead of this much to be desired result from his scheming the outcome had been nothing less than disastrous.

Some one had murdered Griggs, the stool pigeon. The murder could not go unpunished. The slayer's identity must be determined. To the discovery of this identity, the inspector was at the present moment devoting himself by adroit questioning of Dacey and Chicago Red, who had been arrested in one of their accustomed haunts.

"Come across now!" he admonished. His voice rolled forth like that of a bull of Bashan. He was on his feet, facing the two thieves. His head was thrust forward menacingly, and his eyes were savage.

"I don't know nothin'!" Chicago Red's voice was between a snarl and a whine. "Ain't I been telling you that for over an hour?"

Burke gave Dacey, who chanced to be the nearer of the two, a shove that sent the fellow staggering halfway across the room under its impetus.

"Dacey, how long have you been out?"

"A week."

"Want to go back for another stretch?"

"God, no!"

"Who shot Griggs?"

The reply was a chorus from the two:

"I don't know—honest, I don't!"

In his eagerness Chicago Red moved toward his questioner.

"Honest to Gawd, I don't know nothin' about it!"

The inspector's fist shot out toward Chicago Red's jaw. The thief went to his knees under the blow.

"Now, get up—and talk!" Burke's voice came with unrepentant noisiness against the stricken man.

Cringingly Chicago Red obeyed as far as the getting to his feet was concerned. While he got slowly to his feet he took care to keep at a respectful distance from the official.

Cassidy entered the inspector's office to announce the arrival of the district attorney.

"Send 'im in," Burke directed. He made a gesture toward the doorman and added, "Take 'em back!"

"I came as soon as I got your message," the district attorney said as he seated himself in a chair by the desk. "And I've sent word to Mr. Gilder. Now, then, Burke, let's have this thing quickly."

The inspector's explanation was concise:

"Joe Garson, Chicago Red and Dacey, along with Griggs, broke into Edward Gilder's house last night. I knew the trick was going to be pulled off, and so I planted Cassidy and a couple of other men just outside the room where the haul was to be made. Then I went away, and after something like half an hour I came back to make the arrests myself. When I broke into the room I found young Gilder alone with that Turner woman he married, and they were just talking together.

"I found Griggs lying on the floor—dead! The Turner woman says young Gilder shot Griggs because he broke into the house. Ain't that the limit?"

"What does the boy say?"

"Nothing. We've got Chicago Red and Dacey, and we'll have Garson before the day's over. And, oh, yes! They've picked up a young girl at the Turner woman's place. And we've got one real clew—for once!" He opened a drawer of the desk and took out Garson's pistol, to which the silencer was still attached.

"You never saw a gun like that before, eh?" he exclaimed. Demarest admitted the fact.

"I'll bet you never did! That thing on the end is a Maxim silencer. There are thousands of them in use on rifles, but they've never been able to use them on revolvers before. That thing is absolutely noiseless. I've tried it. Well, you see, it'll be an easy thing—easiest thing in the world!—to trace that silencer attachment. Cassidy's working on that end of the thing now!"

CHAPTER XVI.

Who Shot Griggs?

FOR a few minutes longer the two men discussed the details of the crime, theorizing over the baffling event. Then Cassidy entered.

"I got the factory at Hartford on the wire," he explained, "and they gave me Mr. Maxim himself. He said this was surely a special gun, which was made for the use of Henry Sylvester, one of the professors at Yale. He wanted it for demonstration purposes. Mr. Maxim said the things have never been put on the market, and that they never will be. I got this man, Sylvester," Cassidy went on, "on the phone too. He says that his house was robbed about eight weeks ago, and among other things the silencer was stolen."

"Is there any chance that young Gilder did shoot Griggs?" asked Demerest.

"You can search me!" the inspector answered. "My men were just outside the door of the room where Eddie Griggs was shot to death, and none of 'em heard a sound. It's that infernal silencer thing. Of course, I know that all the gang was in the house."

"Did you see them go in?"

"No, I didn't, but Griggs"—

"Griggs is dead, Burke. You're up against it. You can't prove that Garson or Chicago Red or Dacey ever entered that house."

"Well, then, I'll charge young Gilder with murder and call the Turner woman as a witness."

"You can't question her on the witness stand. The law doesn't allow you to make a wife testify against her husband. No, Burke, your only chance of getting the murderer of Griggs is by a confession."

"Then I'll charge them both with the murder," the inspector growled vindictively. "And, by ——, they'll both go to trial unless somebody comes through. If it's my last act on earth, I'm going to get the man who shot Eddie Griggs."

Burke, after the lawyer had left him watched the door expectantly for the coming of Aggie Lynch, whom he had ordered brought before him. But when at last Dan appeared and stood aside to permit her passing into the office, the inspector gasped at the unexpectedness of the vision. The next instant the inspector forgot his surprise in a sincere, almost ardent admiration.

The girl was rather short, but of a slender elegance of form that was ravishing. Her costume had about it an indubitable air, a finality of perfection in its kind. On another it might have appeared perhaps the merest trifle garish. But that fault was made into a virtue by the correcting innocence of the girl's face. It was a childish face, childish in the exquisite smoothness of the soft, pink skin, childish in the wondering stare of the blue eyes, now so widely opened in dismay, childish in the wistful drooping of the rosebud mouth.

"Now, then, my girl," Burke said roughly, "I want to know"—

There came a change, wrought in the twinkling of an eye. The tiny, trimly shod foot of the girl rose and fell in a wrathful stamp.

"What do you mean by this outrage?" she stormed. Her voice was low and rich, with a charming roundness that seemed the very hallmark of gentility. "I demand my instant release."

His Steady Job.

This happened to a social worker. She had been interested in the case of a needy family. The father had been "sent up" several times for short terms for minor offences, but was now supposed to be "out" and working at a steady job. One day she thought to inquire.

"I haven't seen your father for some time," she remarked to the 11-year-old daughter. "What is he doing now?"

"I think he's doin' a year, mum."

THE SCALE TURNED

By ARTHUR GRIGSBY

Edwin Hoxie, an American artist seeking subjects for his brush in Spain left Madrid to go to the mountains of Toledo, some sixty miles from the capital. Arriving at an inn midway between the plain and the summit of the range, he concluded to make it his headquarters, going about among the mountains sketching. He arrived in the evening and concluded to put off any work till the morrow. The inn being in a lonely spot and at the time apparently no other boarders in the house, he seated himself on a veranda where he could overlook the plain far below, and called for supper.

The cloth was laid by a girl in a short petticoat encircled with stripes of various gay colors, beneath which appeared a dainty foot and ankle.

Hoxie was very young, and youth is unthinking. He permitted himself to gaze too admiringly on the senorita and did not take the pains not to do so while she was looking. He spoke some Spanish and began to chat with her, but could get nothing except "Yes, senor," and "No, senor," for she was a diffident little thing, especially in the presence of one in the social scale so far above her.

There were many points in the vicinity where attractive views were to be obtained, and Hoxie attended to his work, not thinking about the girl when doing so. But in the evening between supper and bedtime he needed company and after supper would invent ways to keep her with him on the veranda. The inn was kept by her aunt, and the two women were the only persons in the house besides the few wayfarers who stopped there. The aunt Hoxie addressed as senora, the girl as Pepita, which was her name. When he was not out sketching he was continually calling on the one or the other for something—either a glass of wine or a bit of cheese or for Pepita to bring her guitar and play for him.

"You are troubled about something, Pepita," he said one evening to the girl while she waited upon him at supper. "What is it?"

"Nothing, senor," she said.

"Yes, there is something you fear. Tell me."

"Well, then, senor, there are bandits in these mountains. You should not go out sketching."

"You must be mistaken. I asked about that before coming here and was told that I would be as safe here as in Madrid."

This did not appear to relieve the girl's fears. There is something that draws a man to a woman who fears for him, and Hoxie drew the girl to him and kissed her.

"It is very lovely for you," he said, "to be anxious for my safety. Don't worry. I think I can take care of myself."

There was a sound in some shrubbery just beyond the veranda. Pepita started, gasped and trembled. Hoxie looked up at her, surprised, and was about to ask her what had frightened her when she ran into the house.

The next evening was very warm, and Hoxie lay smoking in a hammock in the yard. The moon was at the full and in the rare atmosphere at such a height cast a bright light. Hoxie dozed. Suddenly he roused himself and looked upon a shadow cast by the moon on the ground directly before him. It was the shadow of a man with arm uplifted. The closed fist seemed to grasp something, for there was a protrusion from it not clearly enough shadowed for Hoxie to discern what it was. Hoxie divined that it was a weapon of some sort, most probably a knife.

Whatever was done must be instantaneous. Hoxie's reasoning certainly was. He reasoned that some one was about to kill him; that the murder would be committed silently. The only method of escape seemed to be to call to some one. This might frighten off the murderer.

"Senora!" he called without displaying any alarm in his voice.

"What do you wish, senor?"

"A glass of wine."

At the first word the shadow withdrew so that he did not see it. His enemy had sprung back.

"Never mind," Hoxie said, rising as he spoke. "I will drink it in the house."

Not daring to betray his knowledge of his danger by looking back, he walked into the house without turning his head. He had not seen his enemy—only his shadow. Nor did he see him later. His coolness had saved his life. His enemy quite likely was in such condition of mind that a word spoken by the man he would kill was enough, momentarily at least, to deter him, and before he had time to begin again it was too late.

Hoxie was never in a hurry about anything. He said nothing to the landlady about the matter, preferring to think it over before doing so. He remembered the sound in the bushes, where the evening before he had kissed Pepita, and her fright. Here was an explanation.

"Pepita," he said the next morning when he was alone with her.

"Yes, senor."

"You have a lover, one whom I have never seen."

"Yes, senor."

"Is he a good fellow?"

"Yes, senor," faintly.

There was silence for a few moments, when Hoxie added: "I am going down to Toledo. Goodby."

NEW GUN FOR AIRSHIP.

Belgian Officer Makes Remarkable Record With Weapon.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—The new automatic machine gun for air craft, the invention of Col. Lewis, a retired United States army officer, was given exhaustive tests yesterday at Bisley in the presence of a distinguished gathering of British army officers and foreign military attaches. The new gun resembles a large rifle in appearance, but it has an outer jacket covering the barrel. It weighs only 27 pounds. The action is totally automatic and the gun is capable of firing eight hundred rounds a minute.

With the gun mounted on a Grahame-White aeroplane, Lieut. Stellingwelf of the Belgian army scored eleven hits in fourteen shots, from an altitude of 600 feet, on a target of white sheets twenty feet square. Those present were greatly impressed with the demonstration.

Dresses Shocked Canadiennes.

The party of Canadian girls from Regina, Canada, who have just left Britain after a three weeks' tour, are agreed that the styles in dress affected by English girls are far from modest. "We are used to a great deal in the matter of women's dress in Canada, but we have been astounded and shocked in England," said one. "Far from appealing to us as evidence of good taste, the indiscriminate use of absolutely transparent materials in the dress of English girls simply amazed us. This was particularly noticeable in London and other large cities. The popularity of these base styles are not to the credit of the English girl."

Retort Was Familiar.

Hon. Jas. K. Pinder, M.P.P. for York County, New Brunswick, once did some work for the Dominion Government on Grand Island Bar in the St. John river, which was severely criticized by his opponents.

The next year Mr. Pinder was speaking in the House, when a festive member called out:

"What about Grand Island Bar?"

"My hon. friend should know all about 'bars'," retorted Pinder, "for he's been working on them all his life."

OBITUARY

The Late James Galvin

At eleven o'clock yesterday morning the hand of death removed one of Peterborough's most widely known and highly respected citizens in the person of Mr. James Galvin 187 Stewart street. Although the deceased had been suffering from the effects of a paralytic stroke by which he was stricken three months ago he had been up and around. Yesterday morning as he was sitting in his home he took suddenly ill and passed away in less than an hour.

The late Mr. Galvin was born in Smith township some 63 years ago, but for the past twenty-six years he had resided in this city. He was connected with the Peter Hamilton Company for a number of years, and his duties as salesman put him before the public whose confidence he won by his straightforward business principles.

He is survived by a sorrowing wife, five sons, Roy, of Rochester, and Hubert, Keber, Elmer and Frank, at home, also four daughters, Mrs. J. Deannard, of this city; Mrs. H. L. Wheeler and Mrs. J. B Winchell, of Rochester, and Miss Bernadette at home.

The funeral will be held at 9 o'clock on Saturday morning from the family residence, 187 Stewart street, to St. Peter's Cathedral and Cemetery.

MAYOR BRADBURN WILL NOT SEEK THIRD TERM IN OFFICE

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly permit me to reply through your columns to the ratepayers who have by written requisitions and personally asked me to be a candidate for the office of Mayor of the City for the year 1914. I appreciate deeply the kind things that have been said to me and the expressions of confidence conveyed in the requests but under the circumstances I regret that I cannot comply with the requests. It has been usual in Peterborough for a Mayor to occupy the position for two years, and earlier in the year I stated to members of the Council that if any Alderman wished to be a candidate for the position when my second term had expired I would recognize the custom and would not oppose him. I therefore will not be a candidate for the office for next year.

I desire to heartily thank those who have requested me to be a candidate. I have endeavored to give good service to the ratepayers while I have been a member of the Council, and it is gratifying to know that my efforts have been appreciated, and I hope that those kind friends who have written and spoken to me will accept my thanks for their kindness.

Yours very truly,

W. H. BRADBURN,
Mayor.

CHARGED WITH SELLING LIQUOR IN "DRY TOWN"

Norwood Hotel Proprietor Appears Before the County Police Magistrate

The case of D. N. King of Norwood charged with selling liquor during fair day at Norwood, is proceeding before County Police Magistrate Edmison this afternoon. King pleaded not guilty.

Mr Gordon requested that the two provincial detectives be produced, as he said he had evidence that they were intoxicated before they went to Kings, Magistrate Edmison contended Mr. Gordon was entitled to this request,

Harry Solomon, one of the special officers of the liquor license expartment, said that his duty was to look into the violation of liquor law. He stopped off in Peterboro on his way to Norwood last October about the 14th. On arriving at Norwood he remained at the station and went to Mr. King's hotel in the morning. After getting fixed up at King's he went to the fair grounds, where he took pictures all day. On going back to the hotel he found three men back of the bar and a large number of men drinking at the bar. Mr. King was also behind the bar. Arthur Greene said to me. "Have a drink." I said all right. The bartender asked me what I would have, and I asked for the best. He gave me whiskey A stranger with Greene and witness got the three drinks for fifty cents. Just as he was going out of the bar he met a friend, and they went back and had some more whiskey. After, they went back to Toronto.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gordon, witness said that he was a Russian Jew. He denied ever being engaged in a pool room. On arriving here they took a hack.

"Did you or Greene have a bottle of whiskey on the train?"

"I didn't, and I don't know about Greene."

He admitted having a drink in Peterborough on arrival from Toronto. Then he went to the Chinese restaurant and had supper. He denied refusing to pay for the meal, and also the policeman chasing them to make Greene pay for his meal. He didn't know anything about the racket.

The police informed Greene at the station that the Chinaman wanted the money for his meal. He denied being intoxicated, and he didn't know about Greene.

be proud to belong to such an institution.

Sir John spoke at some length upon the rifle ranges which had lately been instituted. He said he knew nothing more necessary than rifle shooting for a man that pretended to be a soldier. "A soldier may be well up in drill, but if he cannot shoot he is nothing but a duffer."

Sir John's speech was punctuated and interrupted by the crowing of the roosters in the poultry stall, and this caused some merriment, the ladies particularly enjoying Sir John's discomforture. But the Lieutenant General of Canada was not to be crowed down by a cock; "go on" he said "I can keep up the opposition." Sir John is the double of Mr Andrew Carnegie in appearance.

A PRETTY SCENE.

Last evening there was a good attendance, and the great drill hall with its well laid out booths and their charming lady attendants, made a very pretty picture. When you enter, the first attraction you encounter is the Gypsy Booth on the left. This is composed of a Rest and Smoke Room, very cosily furnished with easy chairs, little tete a tete tables and rugs, while the walls are draped with Canadian ensigns. The bright electric stoves and the subdued lights make this feature very seductive to the weary visitor. There is also a "fish-pond" in connection with this booth, which contains fish not to be caught in the lake. Then there is the Gypsy Palmistry department, where you have your palm read if you place a twenty-five cent piece upon it. The ladies who conduct this feature are all real "Gypsies," at least they are real palmists, and one of them is an expert in this wonderful science. and she told the Review representative so many nice things about himself that on coming out he forgot all about the loss of his quarter.

The ladies in charge of this booth are Mrs. Grant, Dunsford, W. H. Hill. R. Turner, F. Roy; the Misses M. Burritt. R. Robertson, Clementi. Cumin. Archer. Spence, Margaret Eastwood Jessie Matthews, Margaret Hayes.

It would take too long to enumerate the many and various features. Each booth has its peculiar attractions.

The St. George's booth is in charge of Mrs. H. Rew, Miss Welch, Mrs. Price, Mrs. Bell. Mrs. Cooper, Mrs. A. Cuff, Mrs. Close, Mrs. J. Holmes, Mrs. F. Holmes, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. E. Mitchell, Mrs. W. Rew, Mrs. Roboinson, Mrs. Sowden and Mrs. Wise.

The St. John's booth is in charge of Mrs. Aylmer, Miss Pook, Mrs. Fleming, Miss Stapleton, Miss Irene Pentland, Miss Morphet, Miss Kincaid, Mrs. Peter Campbell and Mrs. A. H. Stratton.

The ice cream booth is conducted by Mrs. N. C. Mills, Mrs. George Wilson, Mrs. John Hill, Miss Hilda Thompson, Miss Kate Wilson, Miss Xenia Mills, Miss Josephine Mills.

The touch table is in charge of Miss Clementi, Miss Stevenson and Miss Stapleton.

The young ladies' booth is attended to by Misses Wise, Tasurf, Newton, Myers, Jay, Horsfield, Price, Wilson, Wood, Mills.

The doll booth is in charge of Miss Horsfield, Miss A. Clementi, Miss G. Cuffe, Miss G. Crowe.

The Fish Pond is in charge of Miss E. Horsfield, Mr. W. Fuller, Mr. Rew and Mr. Jubb.

The Aviary booth is in charge of Mr. G. Rew, Mr. W. Rew, Mr. Clinton Wilson and Mr. Fred Holmes.

The dairy booth is attended by Mrs. Thomas Graystock, Miss Dixon, Miss Meta Dixon, Miss Elizabeth Graystock, Mrs. John Thorn, Stewart's Hall, Otonabee; Mrs. William Pickle, R. R. No. 8, Peterborough; Mrs. John Collins Smith's Bank, Otonabee, and Miss M. A. Thorn.

Mrs. Travers, assisted by the Girls' Reading Circle, conducted the tea room.

Fine show stalls are also arranged by Messrs. A. Comstock & Son; J. J. Turner & Sons, Peterborough Light and Power Company, J. M. Greene Music Company and Grant and Thorpe.

The 57th Regt. band is in attendance with excellent programs of music for each day. There are also gramaphone selections given at intervals.

Everybody should secure a copy of the St. George's Bazaar Guide Book. This is a neatly gotten up volume reviewing the whole bazaar and containing the names of all those taking part in the opening ceremonies, giving an outline of the various features and a list of the names of stall-holders.

Beside all this the book contains valuable information relating to the history of the English Church in Canada and particularly the history of St. George's Church in the south end of the city. There is also a list of the chief cities of the Dominion with a brief description of the situation and character of each.

The book can be bought at the armories, or at Trebilcock's, Cubitt's or Soden's bookstores, for five cents.

ONE OF FOUR HUNDRED.

English Girl Captures Rare Prize In the Matrimonial Stakes.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Ernest W. Darrow, a contracting mason of Patchogue, Long Island, celebrated this Thanksgiving Day by taking his pick of over 400 women who had offered to be his life mate. Darrow had been advertising for a wife since last May, and not only did the several hundred applicants besiege him by letter, by telegraph and telephone, but many visited him in person.

It was learned yesterday that Miss Julia Stagg, an English girl who landed in Canada from England nine months ago, and went to live in Brooklyn, had won, and the couple were married late yesterday afternoon. According to the terms of his advertisement, Darrow, who announced that he made $50 a week, and that he had four motherless children, will turn over four-fifths of his weekly salary for the support of his wife and children, and household expenses.

SOOTHING STEINITZ.

Pathetic Scene After Lasker Had Beaten the Old Master.

For thirty years the late William Steinitz beat every player who ventured to oppose him and was at last beaten by a mere youth. I had prophesied that his hour had come, writes Robert J. Buckle in the Chess Amateur, and at Hastings the moment he saw me he rushed in with a redhot attack. "How dare you say Lasker would beat me?" he almost screamed in response to my outstretched hand and attempt at a smile of welcome.

Lasker had actually beaten him, as I had foretold. The crowd looked on for a row. We were in the dining room of the Queen's—a score of masters present. I took his arm and led him outside.

"You had no right to say it," he cried, "and I demand an explanation." He continued to protest until we had reached a quiet corner. "Why did you say it—why did you say it?" he repeated shrilly.

I waited till he had blown off steam, then "Because you were sixty," I said. That softened him. He examined me with his innocent blue eyes.

"A man of twenty-two," I continued, "after a hard day's play is fresh next morning. A man of sixty-two is still brain fagged. You were giving the odds of forty years. It was too much."

A REAL POET.

Arthur Stringer Seems Awfully Practical for a Bard.

Arthur Stringer, the Lake Erie poet, who doesn't deny the charge that Mitchell Kennerly is bringing out a new volume of his lyrics, is not as ethereal looking as he might be.

He stands, in fact, just six foot two. He also drives a car, grows fruit, and works on his own farm for the fun of it. While working on his Ontario farm some of his best ideas have taken shape. Besides which he bravely and patriotically smokes home-grown tobacco.

And here is what a sister-poet from a neighboring county said of Arthur's soul: "It thrilled me to think of driving through the open country mile after mile with the author of 'Hephaestus' and 'Sappho in Leucadia.' I pointed out a field of buckwheat in bloom. I watched the soulful eyes of the poet as he studied it. Then he said: 'Makes great pancakes, doesn't it?'

"A little further on I asked him to notice the beauty of an apple tree.

"'That's a russet,' he said. 'Best cider apple in the Dominion!'

"We pounded on a couple of miles more and I implored him to slow down for a clover field. 'Nothing like Alsace for good honey, is there?' he solemnly remarked. A bird flew out of the next field. 'That's a meadow lark,' announced Arthur. 'Great eating!' When I'd almost learned to live this down he stopped the car in front of a Corot-like stretch of woodland. 'Beautiful, isn't it?' I asked him, more hopefully.

"'Which?' he enquired.

"Those dusky shadows, those noble trees!"

"'Yes, but look at that bunch of Morel mushrooms,' he exclaimed, as he got out and climbed the fence. And you can say what you like, but I don't believe that man's really a poet.—Toronto Star Weekly.

Mummies Make Paint.

Mummies are usually preserved in the finest bitumen, and this ancient bitumen has, in the course of centuries, turned the mummies a leathery brown tint. It has been found that when the bitumen and the shreds of mummy are ground down by machinery, a beautiful brown pigment is the result, exactly the tint required for painting certain shades of brown hair.

HARD TO CONVERT.

Eskimos Do Not Christianize Readily Says Explorer.

The Arctic explorer, V. Stefansson, writing of his experience among the Eskimos, tells some interesting anecdotes showing the difficulties of Christianizing the Eskimos.

We settled down to live with these Colville people, says the writer, and commenced making preparations for the winter. The only thing to do was to catch fish.

Now it seems that in Kotzebue Sound, where the Christian doctrines of the Colville people had originated fishing is by nets only. As fishing is practically the only work done there, the missionary had probably said to them, "Do not put out your fish nets on Sunday," meaning thereby, "Do not work on Sunday." However that may be, the prohibition came to our community in the form: "God has said you must not use fish nets on Sunday."

Accordingly, the entire community pulled their fish nets out of the river Saturday night, fished with hooks all day Sunday, and put the nets back into the water Monday morning.

To illustrate one of the phases of the native religion of the Eskimos, we may consider the question of food taboos. In the mountains of Alaska, on the upper Kuyuk and Notak Rivers, and on the headwaters of the Colville, the prohibitions which applied to the eating of the flesh of the mountain sheep alone were as extensive as the entire dietary section of the Mosaic law. A young girl, for instance, might eat only certain ribs; and when she was a little older she might eat certain other ribs; but when she was full grown she would for a time have to abstain from eating the ribs which had been allowed to her up to then.

After a woman had had her first child she might eat certain other ribs, after her second child still others, and only after having five children might she eat all the ribs; but even then she must not eat the membranes on the insides of the ribs. If her child was sick she must not eat certain ribs, and if two of her children were sick she might not eat certain other ribs. If her brother's child was sick she might not eat certain portions, and if her brother's wife died there was still different prohibitions. The taboos applying to the ribs of sheep had relation to the health of her children and of her relatives. They also depended upon what animals her relatives or herself had killed recently, and on whether those animals were male or female.

The Text Was Suggestive.

A young theological student who is now one of the leading Presbyterian divines of Eastern Canada, spent the summer on one of the Nova Scotia mission fields. When leaving, he preached his farewell sermon from the text, "Alexander, the coppersmith, did me much evil."

"Why did you choose that text?" inquired one of the elders.

"I thought it very appropriate," replied the student. "I haven't seen a bit of silver in the collections this summer."

Turning a Tight Screw.

Any one who has attempted to remove a very tight screw knows what a very difficult business it is. After straining and twisting for a considerable time the operators frequently ends by losing his temper and destroying the bite of the screw, which remains fixed as tightly as ever. With the aid of a pair of pinchers, however the affair is quite a simple one. Place the screwdriver in position and then catch hold of the blade with the pinchers just above the head of the screw. Press the screwdriver firmly and at the same time twist round the blade with the pinchers. The tightest screw will yield immediately to this sort of persuasion.

What Good Has Been Done by the Money Spent on Missions?

People who have never followed the work of our Foreign Missionaries may well doubt the results achieved.

Nevertheless marvelous things have been accomplished.

Hundreds of Missionaries have been murdered in different countries when venturing for the first time among the savage, heathen nations. They died bravely. Their courage won the admiration of the natives. Thus the way was opened for Missionaries who followed them.

The following are a few of the accomplishments of Foreign Missions.

CENTRAL AFRICA

In 1875 Stanley appealed to Christains to establish a Mission among the 2.000.000 Heathen Natives of Uganda.

1876 the first Missionaries were sent out. Some died and two were killed while on their way. Two of them reached Uganda in 1877.

In 1882 the Missionaries had their first Baptisms.

In 1893, in a great revival, hundreds were converted.

By 1896 some 100.000 Natives had been brought into close touch with the Gospel, half of them were able to read, 200 Buildings had been raised by native Christains in which to worship God instead of Idols; 200 Native Evangelists and Teachers were supported by the Native Churches and 6000 souls were eagerly seeking daily instructions. All this in the centre of the thickest spiritual darkness in the world.

To-day that immense section of country has been completely changed for the better through the work of the Christain Missionaries.

KOREA

In 1886 when Mr Thomas, a Missionary reached Korea, he and all his crew were murdered. Later other Missionaries were driven away.

Twenty years ago the first 7 Converts were Baptized in the City of Ping Yang.

To-day, in this one City, there is a Christian Community of 33.000 souls.

Forty Two Congregations have branched out from this mother church. In spite of their poverty the poor Christains in this one community in 1911 contributed $30.000 to build their own Churches, support their own Pastors and send the Gospel far and wide to others.

Some 200 Special Bible Training Classes were held during 1911, attended by upward of 10,000 Christains, many of whom walked 50 to 100 miles to attend and paid all their own expenses. They are now sending Missionaries to China.

JAPAN

Fifty years ago there were 10 Missionaries in Japan and no Native Christians.

To-day there are 962 Protestant Missionaries and 700 Ordained Japanese Pastors with 100.000 Japanese children in the Christian Sunday Schools. The influence of Christianity has poured into every realm of Japanese Life and the Government has accepted Christianity as one of the recognized leading religions of the people.

CHINA

In 1889 there were 37,000 Native Protestant Christians in China. In 1900 there were 113,000. In 1910 there were 196,000 with 324,890 Protestant Adherents.

There are 502 Ordained Native Pastors, 7281 Evangelists, 1789 Bible Women and 2955 Congregations. The amount contributed by Chinese for Church Work in 1910 was 150,000. The number of Christian Converts doubled between 1900 and 1910.

There are now 553 Mission Colleges, Academies and Higher Institutions in China, as well as 37[illegible] Primary Institutions with 117.000 Pupils. Protestant Missions are conducting 170 Hospitals, 14 Orphanages and 16 Leper Asylums.

The Bible Societies have printed 16,400,000 Bibles and portions thereof.

A few years ago the Chinese hated the Missionaries.

To-day scores of thousands of Chinese are seeking to learn more about Christianity. Shall we not give it to them?

How Do You Know That Mission Money Is Not Largely Wasted?

Many people have an impression that much of this money spent on Foreign Missions is wasted.

Some people think that the Missionaries have an easy time of it.

These people want to know how it is possible to be sure that if they give money to Missions it will be wisely expended.

For all such here are a few facts.

The work conducted on the Foreign Mission Fields has been thoroughly investigated time and time again.

Invariably the results have reflected the greatest credit on the Missionaries and their native Christian helpers.

A few years ago a Mr. Ellis, a newspaper man of Philadelphia visited all the leading Foreign Mission Fields and stations. He was so much impressed by all he saw he wrote a book on Missions. He urged a great increase in Missionary givings.

At the inception of the Laymen's Missionary Movement 60 prominent Laymen were sent abroad to investi- the work being conducted on the various Mission Fields. They included a number of Canadians.

These men brought back enthusiastic reports. One of them Mr. Severance, a Vice President of the Standard Oil Company, is said to have left checks for $240,000 among the Mission Stations he visited.

Included in their reports were the following: "The Christians of Korea put us to shame in the home land by their greater consecration and earnestness and by their givings also."

Christian Chinese who are now doing a Great Work in their Own Country.

"The number of new converts received into full membership last year was 164,674, or an average of over 450 a day through the entire year. This is a far larger proportionate gain than we had in the home land."

"For every ordained minister at home an average of two converts were added last year. For every ordained Missionary abroad the average number of converts were 14."

"The gain in contributions on the various Foreign Mission Fields last year was $1,360,000. The total gifts were $4,844,000. This is almost half as much as we raised in North America."

Well known public men have made the following statements:

WHAT PROMINENT MEN SAY

Sir Augustus Rivers-Thompson, Lieutenant Governor of Bengal:

"Christian Missionaries have done more real and lasting good to the people of India than all other agencies combined. They have been the salt of the country and the true saviours of the Empire."

WHAT PROMINENT MEN SAY

Hon. Willian Howard Taft:

Until I went to the Orient I did not realize the immense importance of Foreign Missions. You cannot overestimate the immense importance of Christian Missions.

Sir Philip Currie, British Ambassador to Turkey:

"The one bright spot in the darkness that has covered Asiatic Turkey has been the heroism and the common sense of the Missionaries.

Chulalongkom, King of Siam:—"American Missionaries have none more to advance the welfare of my country and people than any otherforeign influence."

CAPITALIZING CHARACTER.

Italian Laborers Ends Strikes by Becoming Their Own Employers.

Wherever one travels through the north of Italy he sees large or small groups of workingmen, skilled or unskilled, with no padrone to drive them, making roads, carting the gravel for railways for the Government, erecting big apartment houses for the working people to live in, extending their operations to every sort of trade by organizing themselves into co-operative societies to undertake big contracts. Binding themselves together to work for themselves and for one another, paying their own wages, carrying the responsibility of properly fulfilling their contract, and depositing a fund to guarantee its completion, they eliminate the intervening contractors entirely, saving the middleman's profit to divide among themselves in proportion to the amount of work which each man has contributed and to the existing wage scale for his trade. Having now become their own employers they have in their own work eliminated the strike.

The labor co-operative society is the latest and farthest advance of collectivism to-day, and some forms of it in Italy are unique. Ask these laborers about their work, how they are holding together, how they secured the contract and the necessary guarantee to obtain it, how they have been able to purchase all the machinery required to carry it out, and they will tell you that there is a co-operative bank in the neighboring city to which they belong, with which their contract is deposited, and which advances them from month to month the necessary funds for equipment, supplies and wages.

Based on assets which had previously been of negligible value to the laborer in the securing of credit—namely, character, thrift, the ambition of every man to get on, his normal impulse to produce the greatest within him, mere numbers which, joined together with their small mites of money are no more to be despised than a Rothschild singly—there have arisen in Italy a host of Banks of the People—Banche Popolari—a veritable army of co-operative savings and loan societies which have given to individual members a credit service previously inaccessible if not impossible, and which now are extending their operations to reliable co-operative groups of workmen. Owned and operated by the people themselves on the most democratic lines, the power is diffused by the single vote which each member wields, irrespective of the number of shares he holds.

Only Looked Like One.

The King of Saxony is a man of democratic tastes, who likes nothing better than to be taken for one of his own subjects. One hot afternoon, when he was out riding, accompanied by an attendant, he came, it is said, upon a butcher who was trying to repair the broken axle of his cart. The king at once offered his assistance, and for over an hour the three men—king, butcher, and attendant—worked in silence beneath the blazing sun.

When they had finished the butcher stared stolidly at the king for a moment. Then his face lighted up as he thought that he saw the explanation of the kindness.

"Oh," he said, "you also are a butcher?"

"No," replied the king regretfully, "I only look like one!"

Home is the place to which some men go in order to get even when disagreeable things happen downtown.

VICTORIA'S NEW HEAD

CHANCELLOR BOWLES ONE OF A CELEBRATED GENERATION.

His Fellow Students at Methodist University Have Risen To Prominence In Many Fields — Dr. Bowles Foremost as Student, Minister, Lecturer and Administrator —Had a Passion for Agriculture.

With the opening of another academic year a new era in the fortunes of Victoria College dawns. Not only are costly and beautiful buildings being occupied for the first time, but a new president is being installed in office. The long reign of Dr. Burwash, which saw Victoria transformed from a small, struggling rural institution into one of the most powerful units in a great federation of colleges, comes to an end, and as he steps into a well-earned and honored retirement his duties are assumed by a younger, but no less able, successor.

Dr. Bowles, eloquent preacher and erudite professor, is one of the leaders of Methodism. Alike as student, minister and lecturer, he has taken a foremost place among his fellows. Born on the farm and still cherishing a warm love for rural life, he was early destined by his parents for the ministry. His father, the late George Bowles of Mono Road, was an exceptional character, being not only a good agriculturist, but also a lay preacher of no mean talents. Throughout the County of Peel he was well known as an expounder of the gospel, and was welcomed in even the largest churches in the district. Influenced by the example of such a father, no less than by the desires of his mother, the son early decided to make the ministry his calling.

It is now thirty-two years ago since the young farmer left the parental home, traveled to Cobourg and enrolled his name as a student at Victoria. Dr. Nelles was then Chancellor, Dr. Burwash was one of the senior professors, and among the undergraduates were such men as Eber Crummy, C. C. James, Donald Hossack, C. W. Kerr, L. E., Horning, A. L. Langford and J. R. L. Starr. Even in such company young Bowles distinguished himself. Though by no means a recluse, he was a diligent student, and he soon took and held the lead in his class, with the result that at graduation in 1885 he was the gold medallist of his year. Following his arts course he took up divinity and gained his B.D. along with his M.A. in 1888, being again a gold medallist.

Just at the time that Dr. Burwash succeeded Dr. Nelles as president Dr. Bowles left the college, was ordained and entered upon his first charge as a minister of the gospel. There seems to be a sort of tradition that he began at once at the top and was placed in immediate charge of a metropolitan church, but such was not the case. His first pastorate was at Islington, and it was from there that he went as assistant to Rev. James Henderson in St. James' Church, Montreal. Then followed a period of three years when he was minister of the Methodist Church at Gravenhurst, while it was not until after he had served a term at Clinton Street that he became pastor of a really large church.

During the time that he was stationed at Islington he had exchanged pulpits on several occasions with the minister of Sherbourne Street Church, Toronto, and the people of that congregation had come to entertain feelings of admiration for the young divine. Years elapsed, but he was still remembered, and when it came time to select a new minister for their pulpit he was chosen. From Sherbourne Street he passed to the Metropolitan in the same city, and from the Metropolitan to Grace Church, Winnipeg, occupying in his course three of the most important charges in the Methodist denomination. So popular did he make himself in Sherbourne Street that influential members of the congregation secured his return after he had concluded his ministry in Winnipeg.

His future work, however, was to be in the preparation of young men for ordination. Scarcely had he been back a year in Toronto than he was offered the chair of homiletics in Victoria. He felt called on to undertake the work and resigned from the active ministry, being succeeded in the pulpit of Sherbourne Street Church by Rev. George Jackson. Subsequently he was appointed to the chair of systematic theology in the college, lecturing on this subject in addition to his work in homiletics. His selection as successor to Dr. Burwash was made in the spring, though his formal installation took place in October.

Such has been the career of the new head of Victoria, the man who is called upon to maintain the traditions established by Ryerson, Nelles and Burwash. That he will do honor to the position few can doubt, for he unites in his personality many of the characteristics that have made his predecessors famous. He takes office in the prime of life, being forty-nine years of age this year. He is virile, energetic and blessed with a sound constitution, and, above all, he approaches his new work with enthusiasm and hopefulness.

Personally, he is a man of simple tastes and of retiring disposition. It is true he has won fame as a preacher, but he has never thrust himself into the limelight. Such distinction as has come to him has been quite unsought. His city life has no dulled his fondness for nature and his devotion to the soil. He is still a farmer in heart, delighting in the processes of agriculture and the life of the country. He subscribes to farm papers, and reads Government bulletins on agriculture.—W. A. Craick in The Toronto Globe.

Inland Revenue Grows.

Inland revenue of Canada for September totaled $1,886,040, as against $1,799,522 last year.

Musical.

It was at a musicale given in an old-fashioned country house, and the soprano was screeching her loudest.

"The room is cold," complained one of the guests," and I would like to stir the fire in the grate, but I don't know how to do it without interrupting the music."

"That's easy," suggested his companion; "stir it between the bars."

No Use.

Mrs. Exe—If I had a husband who drank as hard as yours I'd make him buy a plaster and stick it over his mouth.

Mrs. Wye—That wouldn't do any good. He'd buy a porous plaster.

Horses Not Like Machines.

Animals are not like the machinery on the farm. They have a mind and sensibilities that should be given some consideration by those who have to work with them. A machine can be neglected and misused, and the greatest harm that can come of it is that the owner will have to buy a new machine, but an animal that is treated in a similar manner is made to suffer pain. Horses get tired and need good food, water and rest. Don't treat them like mere machines.

Asthma and Air.

Most cases of asthma are the result of a bad atmosphere. The catarrh has extended down from the nose and throat into the bronchial tubes and set up a spasm, which is the source of this distressing malady. No asthmatic can afford to keep his windows closed. Whether by day or night, he needs a liberal supply of fresh air.

Why They Are Bachelors.

It has been computed that our planet is peopled by about 1,700,000,000 living members of the human species and that this very respectable total includes some 5,500,000 more men than women. Supposing all women to be married or assured of marrying, this disproportion signifies 5,500,000 men who are bachelors willy nilly without considering the few who may have had bachelorhood thrust upon them by the unresponsive ladies of their choice.

HOCKEY CANDIDATES TO TRAIN ON THE RINK FLOOR

Rink Management and Hockey Club Have Reached Agreement—Training to Commence Monday

An agreement satisfactory to the rink management and the Hockey Club for the use of the rink, was made last night and all is well.

Training will commence Monday night when the intermediate and junior players will work out on the rink floor. The boys are asked to be on hand at 6.45 on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Players must be equipped with rubber shoes so that the smooth floor will not be damaged.

Mr. Mebarry has given the club permission to use the rink for training purposes and also the dressing rooms. The agreement calls for an even division in the gate receipts and the Hockey Club pays $100 for practice hours throughout the season, on Monday, Wednesday and Friday of each week.

HOW ABOUT SERIES OF GAMES FOR LINDSAY AND THE LOCALS

The Town Hockey League is to be organized in Lindsay next week. How would it do to make some arrangement for a competition between the Lindsay champions and the winners of the local junior league, if the matter was taken up there should be no difficulty in securing a trophy to be presented to the winning team. Of course there would have to be some early understanding regarding eligibility of players, so that the competing teams could not be strengthened after completing their own league series.

Peterboro fans would be glad to see a competition along these lines. Lindsay will not be represented in the O. H. A. so some other scheme must be hatched to bring about a series of battles on the ice.

BUSH KILLS MAN WITH NEW AUTO

Brainerd, Minn., Nov. 27.—While driving an automobile given him by admirers, Leslie Bush, pitcher of the Philadelphia Athletics, last night ran down and killed Louis T. Miller, 75 years old. Miller's skull was fractured and his neck broken. According to witnesses, the man stepped in front of the car as it rounded a corner.

A Sunset in Scotland.

It was a sunset of strange tints that evening, a background of clouds of deep violet tipped with crimson. The sky, of the very palest blue, had been turned by the brightness of the sun into a lake of silver, in which floated small fleecy cloudlets of brilliant rose pink, like islets floating in a crystal sea. The rays of the sun behind the purple clouds threw long shafts of dazzling brightness, which tipped the dark background with silver as the sun kisses the petals of a daisy. Every peak in the long range of mountains on the west was rose tipped, but the highest of them all towered clear and cone shaped in the distance, glistening in a shimmering mantle of silver and pale blue, as if the sky had wrapped it round its own cerulean color.—"A Garden of Spices," by A. Keith Fraser.

SHOOK OFF DEATH.

Ordeal Through Which Archdeacon Stuck Once Passed.

Archdeacon Stuck, who climbed Mount McKinley, the great American peak, once had his life saved in a most extraordinary way.

Late one evening, while exploring in the arctic regions, he was unlucky enough to fall through the ice into the water on his way back to camp. He was accompanied by an Eskimo boy in charge of a sledge and a team of dogs, and the boy soon had him out again, but as the thermometer was then about 70 degrees below zero the possibility of saving his life seemed very remote. He was wet through, of course, and before a fire could have been got well alight the chances were that he would have frozen to death.

The resourceful boy thought of a better plan than that. The explorer was already scarcely able to move, but the boy took one of the dogs out of the traces and forced the archdeacon to take its place. Then he lashed the unfortunate man's legs until he was compelled to run, applying his whip mercilessly every time the archdeacon showed signs of flagging.

In this way the boy kept him moving rapidly toward their camp, and by the time they reached it the terrible languor of death that had threatened to overcome the archdeacon had been shaken off.—Pearson's Weekly.

Conversation.

The reason why so few people are agreeable in conversation is that each is thinking more of what he is intending to say than of what others are saying, and we never listen when we are planning to speak.—Rochefoucauld.

The Wrong Ghost

The Required Sacrifice

By LILLIAN WENTZ

"There it goes! See!" whispered Dick Addison in his companion's ear.

Findlay strained his eyes through the darkness of the upper gallery and saw a grey formless shape drift slowly past and disappear in the shadows at the end.

Dick's hand tightened on Findlay's elbow.

"Now, skeptic, what do you say to that?" he breathed hoarsely.

Findlay shook his head.

"She has me guessing," he admitted ruefully.

Dick laughed. "What did I tell you, old man? You may flatter yourself you are some ghost hunter, but the Addison ghost has walked for 150 years, and the mystery has never been solved."

"Did your father ever see it?" asked Findlay thoughtfully.

"You forget that my father inherited Roseland from a distant cousin, who had quarreled with his few remaining relatives and through some freakish fancy chose my father as his heir. That is why my experience with the ghost dates back to three months ago when I came down to occupy the old place."

"And you have seen it how many times?"

"About once a week. I had quite forgotten the old story of Dorothy Addison, who had told a wicked lie and so won the man she loved from her lovely rival. It is said that Dorothy was very unhappy in her married life and often bewailed her sin. Tradition has it that the curse of unrest will not be lifted from her poor spirit until some Addison rights a wrong or makes some great sacrifice for another."

"So your distant cousin did nothing toward that end," mused Findlay. "Did he leave any direct heirs?"

Dick Addison hesitated. "You know, I was at college when father inherited the place, and I wasn't deeply interested, but I have since learned that Cousin Amos left an adopted son, who had married against my cousin's wishes and was therefore disinherited. But father understood that the son was a rich man, had made a fortune in the west, so that he really was not losing much when the Addison home came to my father. It's a tumbledown old place, as you can see, and, except for some good old furniture and the family portraits, isn't worth repairing."

"Why don't you hunt up this adopted son of Amos Addison and see if he doesn't need the place?"

"Do you mean that, Sam?"

"Yes. If investigation shows that the adopted son and his family are comfortably fixed, why, I suppose, the place could be left to the bats if you wished, but if I"— He stopped and laughed in an embarrassed way.

"Yes?" asked Dick eagerly. "If you owned it what would you do, Sam?"

"I would never close it up. There are too many homeless wretches in the world to justify that. But I am preaching now, Dick. I know it would be a great sacrifice for you to give up the ancient home of your family to a man who was but an adopted son."

"Sacrifice! If I should find him, Sam, perhaps that is the sacrifice that is required to lay the ghost of pretty Mistress Dorothy!"

"Perhaps it is." Findlay was laughing when he stopped short and pointed to a little door. "Where does that lead to, Dick?" he demanded sharply.

Dick stared for an instant. "Oh, the door? Why, to some attic chamber, I believe. I've never found a key to fit it, and I'm not anxious to investigate any more dust holes, thank you."

The two young men returned along the picture gallery and swung around into the corridor from which the bedrooms opened on either side. Findlay's room was the first on the right hand side, and he bade his friend good night and entered.

Sam Findlay went to the window nearest the wall of the picture gallery. On the other side of that wall hung the pictures, and in this corner near his window was the little door that had no key.

He pulled open his closet door and held the candle high over his head. The closet was placed beneath a flight of stairs, for the ceiling slanted sharply.

His closet ran underneath the spiral stairway leading to the attic chambers. It was near the locked door that the apparition had vanished. He smiled as he turned away.

"It is a gentle ghost," he murmured. "Her little feet cannot disturb my slumbers, no matter how many times they run up and down the stairs!"

At that moment there came a sound, so slight that it was hardly more than the rustle of a leaf; then another sound, a little creak.

That was all. Findlay tried to persuade himself that he had mistaken a scampering mouse for a light footfall, but he knew that the sound was nothing else but a footstep on the spiral stair. And the door that led to the spiral stair had no key!

He blew out the candle and went to bed in the great carved four poster that Aunt Chloe had polished and rubbed until the pineapples that surmounted the posts shone as they had not done for many years.

It seemed like five minutes afterward, but it was really half an hour later, when Dick Addison awoke him with a quick shake.

"Sam, there's something queer doing outside," he whispered. "Get on some things and come down into the rose garden with me."

Findlay was out of bed in an instant, and presently the two young men stole softly in slippered feet down the corridor to where a door opened on to the upper balcony that ran across the front of the old house.

"By Jove, this door is unlocked, and I fastened it before I went to bed!" whispered Dick.

Findlay said nothing, for his thoughts were busy with the sounds he had heard on the spiral stair.

Down in the tangled garden Dick led the way through dark paths bordered with tall hedges of box, pungently sweet in the night air. At last they came to the remains of the rose garden. It was inclosed in a circle of boxwood and was entered by a small opening.

As they squeezed through the narrow opening Dick clutched his companion's arm.

"What do you make of that?" he whispered.

Findlay stared over his friend's shoulder, and well might the two stare at what met their astonished gaze.

The faint crescent of a moon threw a feeble glow over the rose garden and disclosed a pale gowned form flitting here and there among the riotous bushes. The form was plucking roses of every color until the slender arms were laden.

They followed her silently and from the shadow of a great oak tree saw her glide up the steps of the veranda and thence up the stair to the upper balcony, where she vanished.

"Mistress Dorothy's ghost," muttered Dick dazedly.

"Not that, my friend, but a ghost just the same," said Findlay gravely. "Come. Let us rouse Aunt Chloe and Uncle Joe and make them tell us who is occupying the attic chambers of your house."

"What do you mean?" demanded Dick. But he went with Findlay, who explained his suspicions as they went toward the cabin at the rear of the old mansion, where the two ancient negro servants slept.

But there was a faint light showing beneath the window curtain here, and in response to Dick's loud summons the door opened and disclosed two fully dressed and much frightened negroes.

"Oh, Marse Dick, what am de mattah?" quavered Chloe, her eyes rolling fearfully.

"Am de house a-fiah?" croaked Uncle Joe craftily.

"The house isn't afire," said Dick dryly, "and the matter is that I want you to explain how it happens that the attic chambers are occupied without my knowledge and consent."

At this the two servants burst into loud lamentations, and finally Aunt Chloe sobbed out a confession.

It appeared that the adopted son of Amos Addison was really his own son by a secret marriage, and the young Amos, who had been disinherited because he had followed his father's example and married against the wishes of his family, had for awhile prospered in the west, where he had made a fortune and lived happily with his young wife and little girl.

About the time of old Amos Addison's death young Mrs. Addison died and left her husband with the little daughter, Rose. Ill fortune now pursued young Amos, and by the time his daughter had been educated he was a poor man, broken in health and ambition. His one desire was to die in the home where he had spent his boyhood.

Rose brought him there, knowing that the house was empty and unused save for the two servants. Aunt Chloe, who had been his nurse, took care of him, and Uncle Joe waited on him as well, for Rose had secured work in Richmond and only came down at weekly intervals.

The arrival of the master of the house, Dick Addison, threw all their plans into great confusion. Amos Addison was still quite helpless, though improved in health under the care of Aunt Chloe, who was famous in the locality for her knowledge of simple medicines. Since Dick's arrival Rose had made but few visits before this one, when she had risked discovery to gather roses from the garden for her father.

It was the next day before Dick Addison and his friend met Rose Addison and her father. Then it was that Chloe produced the key to the little door and admitted them up the spiral stairs to the clean, airy rooms under the roof, where the old servants had removed many things to make their one time master comfortable. They found Amos Addison the wreck of a once ambitious man, but Dick would not hear of apologies for their unconventional occupancy of Roseland.

"I am the intruder," he said generously. "The place would never have been accepted by my father if he had known the truth, and now I shall not lose a moment before transferring the property to its rightful owner."

"And I predict that the ghost of Mistress Dorothy shall walk no more!" cried Sam Findlay, with a glance at Rose Addison's beautiful face.

Rose blushed beautifully as her dark eyes met the blue ones of the northerner.

Dick Addison saw the exchange of glances and chuckled to himself.

"If it wasn't for Sally Markham I'd be jealous of Sam. But for a ghost hunter I must say that old Sam has outdone himself this time, for my cousin is certainly a rose."

THE STRAIGHT CURRENT AT CENTRE SPAN WILL BE EASY TO NAVIGATE

Boat Builder Gives His Opinion as to Location of Swing in the C.P.R. Bridge

"Personally, I don't see why the Council should hesitate in accepting the offer of the Company."

This in part is the opinion expressed by Mr. J. W. Hickey, Engleburne avenue, who is widely known as a boat and barge builder and who has had long experience in his line of business.

Discussing the proposed swing in the C. P. R. bridge, Mr. Hickey felt that the swing in the centre span of the bridge would be found satisfactory.

"But," continued Mr. Hickey with a smile" it will be long after my time before boats will come up the river past the bridge although I have been waiting for such a thing for a long time."

Mr. Hickey believes that 37 feet will be sufficient. He pointed out that the boats get through the swing above the locks, where the current is strong and the space is not what it will be at the new bridge. Another point is that the straight current at the new bridge will be more easy to navigate than is the case at the locks bridge.

Mr. Hickey has been in conversation with other boatmen and they are of the opinion that the swing placed in the centre span will be satisfactory.

Like many other residents of East City Mr. Hickey would have been glad to learn that a foot bridge was also to be provided.

Several owners of launches and canoes with whom a Review reporter conversed claimed that the current is much more stronger at the west side of the river than in the centre where the swing will be located.

The two act drama, "A Limb of the Law," presented last night before a very large audience in the auditorium of St. Alphonsus Lyceum, under the auspices of the Dramatic Section of St. Peter's T.A.S. proved to be a very pleasing entertainment.

The story revealed was that of one Augustus De Benham, a young lawyer, who was striving for a living and found his earnings and the allowance received from his father barely enough to live on, and as soon as he started living high he went into debt. This debt continued to grow, and when he had won his sweetheart he came to the unwelcomed conclusion that he couldn't marry her unless some change came. He confided in his friend, Clem Bancroft, and they agreed that when Mr. De Benham went for a three months' vacation Augustus could easily wipe out his debt and gain a little capital by renting the De Brenham home. The old gentleman leaves for his holidays and the lad advertises the house to let.

The house was soon applied for, and after the agreement was signed the tenant proved to be Mr. Grayham, young De Benham's intended father-in-law. The tangled and much puzzled young lawyer resolves to board with them, and then his only sister Alice appears on the scene and demands under the threat of "telling dad" that she must board there, too. Everything goes along smoothly till Clem Bancroft's client, who was Mr. De Benham's sister, dies, willing a fortune to Augustus and his father. Clem, who sees that all the trouble could be brought to an end, sends for father without acquainting Gus of his act, and when Mr. De Benham appears on the scene everything is again in a mix-up. Mr. and Mrs. Grayham, ignorant of the fact that Mr. De Benham owns the house, insisted on him making himself "at home." The old man is about exasperated when Clem comes through with his explanation. Things take a big change, and with Gus and his sweetheart happy, and Alice and Clem on the verge of a honeymoon all ends well.

Mr. William Collins in the title role was all that could be desired, while Mr. V. McCabe as Mr. De Benham took that eccentric old gentleman's part to a nicety. Mr. Elrick White, who is by no means foreign to the local lovers of amateur productions, handled the role of Clem Bancroft in his usual good style, while "Doc" McFadden, as Kit, a negro servant, was right in his glory. He is an old favorite, and has Niel O'Brien looking like a school boy. Several of his original jokes brought down the house. James, a butler, was represented by Mr. C. Scully, and Mr. Grayham was impersonated by Mr. V. S. Cox.

Miss Geraldine Rudkins, as Julian Grayham, made a pretty little sweetheart for the "worried" Gus, while the part of Alice De Benham, a spoiled rich man's daughter, was cleverly taken by Miss Lillian Simmons. Miss Annie Simmons was excellent as Mrs. Grayham, an elderly lady. Miss O. Tangney represented "The Lady in Black," Augustus' only client.

The small stage, through the untiring efforts of Messrs. Samuel Hoolihan and John Hanrahan, was used to the best possible advantage.

Miss Marion Gorman, the accompanist for the evening, rendered several entrancing overtures. Between the acts the following gave solos: Miss Helen Long, Mr. A. New and Mr. Ed. Hanrahan. Miss Long, who is at present attending Normal School, is a new face among the local vocalists, and she acquitted herself very creditably. She was perhaps a trifle nervous last night, singing as she was before a strange audience, but this will no doubt be overcome in her next appearance.

REBEL FORCES CAPTURE MAZATIAN THE BIGGEST PORT ON THE WEST COAST

It is Believed That all the Foreigners Escaped—General Villa Starts South.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 29. — The town of Mazatlan, the most important port on the west coast, was captured by the rebels Thursday, according to authoritative information received here yesterday. It is believed that the foreigners resident at that port were uninjured, as several attacks recently made there has resulted in a general exodus on the part of foreigners and many Mexicans. Practically every boat leaving carried a full list, including many foreigners. The capture of this port is considered extremely important in view of the fact that this practically isolates the west coast, giving the rebels control of the entire State of Sinaloa.

EL PASO, Texas, Nov. 29. — The movement of Gen. Francisco Villa's troops to the south to attack the Federal stronghold at Chihuahua was begun yesterday, when nearly 1,000 men under Gen. Rosalio Hernandez departed from Juarez. They accompanied a work train used to repair the railroad line, which was destroyed in places below Juarez by the Federals when they retreated southward after the Tierra Blanca battle.

Huerta Needs Money.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 29. — Provisional President Huerta summoned the managers of the Bank of London & Mexico and the National Bank before him yesterday afternoon and explained to them the necessity of their financial assistance to meet the obligation of the National Railways on Dec. 10. Interest payments on the railways, due Dec. 1, aggregate 801,000 pesos gold. It was to raise this amount and the interest payments maturing Jan. 15 that E. N. Brown, president of the National Railways, went to New York recently.

The gross earnings of the railways since December, 1912, show a decrease of practically 15,000,000 pesos gold. Losses on fixed charges and on property, track and equipment aggregate many millions additional.

Failure to meet the payments in December would, it is claimed, give the right of foreclosure, but as such action would have to be brought in a Mexican court, because the company is a Mexican corporation, the difficulties to be encountered are obvious.

Like Gen. Jose Gonzales Sales after the battle of Rellano in March, 1912, Gen. Antonio Rabago, military governor of the State of Tamaulipas, killed himself after losing Victoria, the capital.

The suicide of Gen. Rabago is not admitted by the Government, but the news is contained in a private telegram to his relatives here, who do not question its authenticity. Gen. Rabago as a military governor, was responsible for the garrison when Victoria was attacked by the rebels on Nov. 17.

DIVER QUITS JOB

He Refuses to Examine Steamer Price on Account of Peril.

SARNIA, Nov. 29.—Samuel Hogarth, the diver who has been in Port Huron for several days waiting for favorable weather conditions to examine the Price, made the descent yesterday, but after being down a few minutes he refused to continue the work, saying that his life was in danger. He had made his report to the underwriters, but just what that is nobody is aware.

The services of the diver have been cancelled, as far as the underwriters are concerned, and it is taken from that that they are through with the wreck. The result has been productive of two things. First, all doubt of the boat being the Price has been cleared away, and, second, the boat is in such a position as to preclude saving her. This is indicated by the withdrawal of the underwriters.

HE MAY BE IN CANADA

"Dead" Suffragist Martyr Alive, Says London Daily Mail.

LONDON, Nov. 29.—The London Daily Mail gives prominence to a story entitled "The Suffragette Martyr." The pathetic narrative is told in "Votes for Women" of the sad death of the young suffragist martyr, William Bethell, aged 19, who is alleged to have died of injuries received while being forcibly ejected from a meeting addressed by Dr. MacNamara at Camberwell. Subscriptions were asked to raise a worthy memorial over his grave. Unfortunately, according to The London Daily Mail, and despite the wide publicity given the case, most exhaustive inquires failed to discover whether Bethell died, who saw him die, who certified to his death, and where he was buried.

Bethell's father, moreover, is convinced that his son is alive and well, with his wife and two children in Canada.

"Votes for Women" recorded with deepest regret the death of William Bethell, heading the paragraph, "Death cannot kill what cannot die," and adding in a later issue: "It is of the utmost importance that the facts be sifted to the bottom." The Mail investigated, with the result that it announces there is no evidence of the death of the suffragist martyr, William Bethell, beyond word that an unknown young man who told William's brother that he died under the circumstances related in "Votes for Women." Scotland Yard has communicated with the coroners, and searched the records for his death, but has found no trace of Bethell.

Chained To a Chair.

LONDON, Nov. 29.—Militant suffragettes are returning to their old tactics. One of them fastened herself to a chair in Caxton Hall last night with chain and padlock, from which point of vantage she shrieked "Votes for Women." The Rt. Hon. Joseph Albert Pease, M.P. for the Rotherham division of York, was forced to suspend his speech for several minutes while the stewards endeavored to remove the suffragette. They had to smash the chair before this could be done.

MERGER COMPLETE

Canada Steamship Lines, Limited, is Capitalized at $25,000,000.

MONTREAL, Nov. 29. — James Carruthers, president of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Co., yesterday gave out the following list of steamship companies which will be merged in the Canada Steamship Lines, Limited: The Richelieu Ontario Co., with its subsidiary lines; Inland Lines, Niagara Navigation Co., Thousand Island Steamboat Co., St. Lawrence River Steamboat Co., Lake Ontario and Bay of Quinte Steamboat Co., Northern Navigation Co., Quebec Steamship Co., Canada Inter-Lake Lines, Limited, and the Ontario and Quebec Navigation Co.

In addition, there are some individual steamship companies, such as the one which owned the steamer Haddington. The Canada Steamship Lines have been capitalized at $25,000,000, Mr. Carruthers said, and its formation is now complete, except for the observation of some preliminary legal formalities, which may take a little time.

Fought His Pursuers.

CANTON, Ill., Nov. 29. — After fighting against several hundred men for thirteen hours, Frank McAdam, who murdered his wife at a Thanksgiving dance Thursday night at Cuba, Ill., killed himself yesterday. Hundreds of shots were fired. The jaw of Policeman Hagar, who attempted to make the arrest, was shattered with a bullet. A four-year-old daughter of the McAdams escaped injury, although she was on her mother's lap when Mrs. McAdam was killed. Jealousy was given as the cause of the initial tragedy.

Miss Forbes-Robertson Freed.

BIRMINGHAM, Eng., Nov. 29.—Miss Forbes-Robertson, a sister of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, the actor-manager, has been released from prison. She was sentenced on Nov. 24 to a term of two weeks on a charge of smashing a window on the occasion of Premier Asquith's visit to Birmingham in July, and immediately went on a hunger-strike. Her condition became such that her release was considered advisable.

RAILWAYS ASK TOO MUCH

Hon. Mr. Pelletier Not Willing to Meet Postal Demands.

OTTAWA, Nov. 29.—The conference between the railways and the Postmaster-General broke up again yesterday without a decision having been reached as to the price the Department will pay for the carriage of the mails. The railways want the amount increased to six million dollars, to include parcel post, and to cover the loss which their express business will suffer.

The Postmaster-General is not disposed to make so large a payment, for on the payment depends the rate which the Department will charge the public for the postage of parcels. Another conference will be held shortly.

Each side is compelled, from the very nature of the situation, to fight for the best possible arrangement with the other. The Postoffice Department naturally expects to increase the present payment of $2,000,000 yearly to the railways in view of the enormous increase of mail matter that will follow the inauguration of the parcel post. But it does not want to pay so much, however, that the parcel post rates would be so high as to make it a disappointment to the public.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has a separate status regarding carriage of mails, and the present negotiations are with the Grand Trunk, the Grand Trunk Pacific, the New York Central, the Canadian Northern and the Quebec Central Railways.

Diamonds Are A-Plenty.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29. — Though eggs and meat and such necessities of life are scarce and their prices out of sight, the wearers of diamonds should not worry, for the Department of Commerce yesterday assured such folk that the United States this year will make a high record in diamond importation—$57,000,000, or $7,000,000 more than the previous high record.

Hurled From Butcher's Cart.

TORONTO, Nov. 29.—Hurled from a runaway butcher cart against a telegraph pole on Vaughan road, north of St. Clair, little Johnny Maguire, two and one-half years of age, of 392 Oakwood avenue, was almost instantly killed at 4.30 yesterday afternoon. The little fellow had been taking a ride with Harry Sykes, a driver for Harry Fairthorne, a butcher, of 1,604 Dufferin street. The lad remained on the rig while Sykes made a delivery, and the accident occurred as a result of the horse taking fright at a piece of paper blowing along the street.

ATE CANNED GOODS

Boy's Meal of Salmon and Tomatoes Blamed For His Death.

TORONTO, Nov. 29.—As a result of ptomaine poisoning, thought to have been the results of eating canned salmon or tomatoes, five-year-old Johnnie McGlade, 119 Lisgar street, died in the police ambulance on his way to the Hospital for Sick Children yesterday afternoon.

On Thursday night the lad ate a quantity of canned salmon and tomatoes, and during the night was seized with abdominal pains. A physician was summoned and prescribed for him, but yesterday afternoon the lad was taken worse, and it was deemed advisable to send him to the hospital. He died before he reached the institution.

The body was taken to the morgue and an inquest will be held.

GIRL CHARGED WITH MURDER

PRINCE ALBERT, Nov. 29.—Charged with the murder of her nine-year-old playmate, thirteen-year-old Kathleen Olka of Wakaw, appeared at the fall assizes of the Supreme Court yesterday. The girl is alleged to have murdered Julia Jenning by battering her head in, on a vacant homestead eight miles from Wakaw last June.

Egg Exports Cause Dearth.

OTTAWA, Nov. 29.—Canada imports eggs and eggs are dear. But because Canada imports eggs is not the only reason why they are expensive. During the month of October Canada exported no fewer than 16,852 dozen of eggs to the United States alone. The valuation was $4,745. To the Island of St. Pierre in the St. Lawrence, 3,150 dozen of eggs were exported during October to Newfoundland, 2,000 dozen, and to Bermuda 1,000 dozen.

Contraband Ammunition Seized.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29. — Ten thousand rounds of rifle and revolver ammunition were seized by customs inspectors yesterday afternoon aboard the steamer Seminole, lying at her pier here. The Seminole is to sail to-day for Hayti and San Domingo.

The confiscated ammunition was hidden in many different parts of the vessel. The Seminole's officers said they did not know of its presence.

SOME FACTORS ARE LEFT OUT

Expert Omitted Taxes Operating Fund and Interest Says C.P.R.

OTTAWA, Nov. 29. — For seven hours yesterday J. P. Muller, the Government expert was cross-examined at the western freight rates case now before the Railway Commission by F. H. Chrysler, chief counsel for the C. P. R. Mr. Muller will appear before the commission to-day to answer questions of J. P. Bicknell, K.C., counsel for the Government.

At the opening of the afternoon session F. H. Chrysler examined Mr. Muller in regard to the question of "terminal costs" as referred to in his exhibits.

A discussion then followed in which the witness' counsel and the chairman took part as to whether Mr. Muller's calculations were affected by the number of divisions into which the C.P.R. was divided.

"As the C.P.R. has eight divisions then your figures for four of them are wrong unless we take into account the other four. Your system could be applied only to the whole railway and not fractions of it."

"That seems equitable," admitted Mr. Muller.

In a voluminous brief submitted by the C.P.R., and on which Mr. Chrysler has based his cross-examination of Mr. Muller, it is submitted that the calculations of the expert are not based on cost of services or, in short, any really fundamental basis.

Where the C.P.R. cost of past performance or operation on one or more divisions has been taken into consideration, it cannot be accepted as a basis of tariffs for the whole western system. The Lake Superior division for instance, earned less per ton per mile than any other division of the C.P.R. system.

The chief objection, however, made by Mr. Chrysler, is that Mr. Muller's calculation does not include payment of taxes, does not provide for working fund necessary to carry on the railway; does not provide a fund for the payment of interest.

In the C.P.R. brief it is also set forth that the limits of division are frequently changed and that the operating cost, produced by Mr. Muller, is therefore not indicative of the cost of carriage within provincial boundaries, and therefore cannot be relied on as a basis on which to fix the local rate applying within the boundaries.

In the company brief it is noted that a factor which partially accounts for the lower net revenue upon eastern divisions is the movement of grain to the seaboard and eastern ports for domestic consumption at low rate, both from Fort William and Georgian Bay ports. But this traffic directly benefits the grain producers of the west.

VOTE NOT ENOUGH

Direct Legislation Has a Large Majority in Saskatchewan However.

REGINA, Nov. 29.—The Province of Saskatchewan voted Thursday on direct legislation, but so far as its practical effect is concerned the results are practically nil. A vote of 30 per cent. of the electorate is required to make the polling effective, but less than 10 per cent. of the total vote listed was polled. With but one or two exceptions the small vote polled showed very big majorities in its favor.

Returns from 55 towns show that a six to one ballot was cast in favor of direct legislation, but in all cases only a small percentage of the total vote was polled.

The farmers have taken most interest in the elections and have shown their favor for rule by the people. Not more than 12 per cent., as against a required 30 per cent. of the total registered vote, is claimed by the Direct Legislation League as having been polled.

FORTY PEOPLE LEFT ROOMS JUST BEFORE EXPLOSION

Building Was Wrecked and Spectators and Firemen Were Burned and Otherwise Injured

Canadian Press Despatch.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Nov. 29—More than a score of spectators and a dozen firemen were burned or bruised and cut by flying debris when a quantity of dynamite gunpowder and gasoline exploded in the burning Vanderveen building, in the eastern business section of the city early this morning.

Several women and children were missing after the explosion and whether there was loss of life cannot be learned until the ruins are cleared.

More than forty people who occupied rooms in the second storey of the burned building, which was a hardware store, were routed out by the firemen just a moment before the explosion which tore the structure to bits and scattered it over an area of four city blocks.

The loss is two hundred thousand dollars.

DEATH A MYSTERY

Alfred O'Neil Was Suddenly Taken With Pains in the Stomach.

CLINTON, Nov. 29.—Mystery surrounds the death here Thursday afternoon of Alfred O'Neil, aged 50, who came to Clinton three weeks ago from the Western States. An inquest has been ordered to clear up the case, and the dead man's stomach was sent to Toronto yesterday for the provincial authorities to analyze.

O'Neil was apparently in splendid health until a short time before his death. He was seized suddenly with very violent pains in the abdomen, and although Dr. Thompson was called and did everything possible, O'Neil died soon afterwards.

As soon as possible after his death the authorities were notified, and Coroner Dr. Shaw and a jury under Foreman Major Rance viewed the body and then adjourned until next Wednesday afternoon.

HANISH CONVICTED

Federal Jury Says Mazdaznan Leader's Cook is Immoral.

CHICAGO, Nov. 29.—Otoman Sar Adusht Hanish, high priest of Mazdaznan Cult of Sun Worshippers, said to number about 14,000 in different cities, was found guilty by a Federal jury yesterday of sending objectionable literature by express in violation of the interstate commerce laws. He may be sentenced to five years' imprisonment or $5,000 fine, or both.

The verdict brands as unfit for circulation the text book of the cult. The book was read to the jury, and almost no other evidence was offered by either side. The book prescribed sun baths and herb remedies, but its striking feature, and that objected to by the Government, was a treatise on sex relations.

Hanish is at liberty under his original bond of $10,000. Hearing of motions and sentence will be by Judge Mack on his return from New York next week.

LIBERALS CONVENE

Rally at Toronto Productive of Hopeful Speeches.

TORONTO, Nov. 29.— This association hereby places upon record its hearty appreciation and enthusiastic support of its distinguished leaders, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. N. W. Rowell, and pledges them its unhesitating support of the policies of the Liberal party."

The General Reform Association of Ontario thus summarized its deliberations at the eighth annual meeting of the organization here yesterday. Speeches were delivered by Hon. George P. Graham, who spoke for the Dominion Parliamentarians, and Mr. N. W. Rowell, who dealt with the outstanding problems of social reform which he said gave provincial Liberalism opportunity and responsibility.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, the president, in his annual address, reviewed the political history of the past year.

"Liberalism is fast regaining its own," he declared, "both in Provincial and Federal arenas." While no actual victories had been secured in Ontario extensive inroads had been made upon Government majorities. In Dominion politics even better results had been secured, notably in South Bruce. Mr. King went on to communicate the party platform on defence and removal of the tariff on foodstuffs.

Senator Kerr urged a campaign of smaller meetings throughout the province, such as was waged by the late Sir Richard Cartwright in 1891, and which was then responsible for obtaining a majority for the Liberal cause in Ontario.

Officers were elected for the ensuing year as follows: President, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King; vice-presidents, F. F. Pardee, M.P., C. M. Bowman, M.P.P.; A. J. Young, North Bay; Edmund Proulx, M. P.; treasurer, A. E. Dyment, Toronto; general secretary, F. G. Inwood, Toronto; auditor, J. F. MacKay, Toronto.

Executive committee: Hon. G. P. Graham; Hugh Guthrie, M.P.; W. M. German, M.P.; R. E. Truax, M.P.; Z. Mageau, M.P.P; Dr. McQueen, M.P.P.; D. Racine, M.P.P.; D. K. Erb, South Perth; W. Harland Smith, Toronto; John Lennox, Hamilton; Col. Thompson, Ottawa; Gordon Waldron, Toronto; J. E. Atkinson, Toronto.

PREMIER BORDEN ACCORDED HONOR

Was the Guest of Functions in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2. — Washington had as guest of honor yesterday Premier Borden of Canada and Mrs. Borden, who spent the day and evening in the capital on their way home after a month's stay at Hot Springs, Va. The visitors went directly to the British embassy upon their arrival, and soon afterward Secretary Bryan called to escort the Premier to the White House to meet the President.

Later, Mr. Borden was given a club luncheon by Secretary Lane of the Interior Department, an old personal friend, and, like the Premier, a Maritime Province man. Last night Secretary and Mrs. Bryan gave a dinner at their home, Calumet Place, in honor of the Premier and Mrs. Borden and Sir William Tyrrell, priavte secretary to the British Foreign Minister. The guests included Lady Spring-Rice, wife of the British ambassador and Madame Jusserand, the German ambassador and Countess Bernstorff, the Costa Rican Minister and Madame Calvo, the Norwegian Minister and Mme. Bryn, Chief Justice and Mrs. White, Justice Hughes and Mrs. Hughes, Senator Newlands and Mrs. Newlands, Senator Sutherland and Mrs. Sutherland, and Representative Cooper and Mrs. Cooper.

THE UNEMPLOYED TO DEMONSTRATE

WINNIPEG, Nov. 29. — Another meeting of the unemployed of the city was held last night in Market Square. About 1,500 were in the crowd, and most of the time was taken up in discussing the views of Mayor Deacon on the unemployed question, as given to the delegation which waited upon him yesterday morning. As a result of the meeting it was decided that a demonstration be made in front of the city hall this afternoon at two o'clock.

Mayor Deacon, in his statement, practically told the men there was work for them if they wanted to find it.

Professor Is Inquisitive.

NEWARK, N.J., Nov. 29.—On her one hundredth birthday, yesterday, Mrs. Margaret Kidney received from Irving Fisher, professor of political economy at Yale University, a letter asking her to inform him as to what habits and circumstances she ascribed her longevity.

"How foolish it is," exclaimed Mrs. Kidney. "I'm not responsible for living so long. It is God who has made me live so long."

Mrs. Kidney prepared Thursday, with the aid of her sister, Mrs. Annie Garabrant, 87 years old, a Thanksgiving dinner for relatives and other guests.

Loan Shark Falls Again.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29. — H. Tolman, "king of the loan sharks," must serve six months in the penitentiary for usury. In so deciding yesterday, the appellate division upheld the lower court, which imposed sentence.

Tolman based his appeal on the ground that the act of usuary was committed by a woman employe, without his knowledge or consent. The court held, however, that in charging 200 per cent. interest on a loan she acted in behalf of her employer and to his advantage, and that he was therefore bound by her act.

Tolman formerly operated over 60 money-lending shops throughout the United States and Canada.

Druggist Is Jailed.

SYDNEY, N.S., Nov. 29.—Charles Gaskin was arrested yesterday on a charge of manslaughter and being unable to furnish $1,000 bonds is confined at the police station. It is alleged that some medicine was purchased from Gaskin for the late Mrs. Richard Ayles, which contributed to or caused her death. The remains will be disinterred and an autopsy performed. An inquest will be held as soon as the officials have completed their investigations.

The water rice has been boiled in is very nutricious, and is a well proved remedy for all bowel troubles.

HIGH COST OF LIVING— WHAT IS THE CAUSE?

As Sir Wilfrid Laurier, with that sublime opportunism for which he is famous, has raised the question of the high cost of living and evidently intends to make this the issue of all future elections, it would be well for us to look seriously into the subject with the object of ascertaining the cause of this increase in the cost of foodstuffs. Only by getting at the cause will we be able to get rid of the effect. The quack methods of tampering with the diseases of society and of commerce, by means of violent stimulants or outward applications, are not only useless, they are dangerous. Canada is suffering from the high price of food and other goods but so is England—free food for England— so are the United States and many European countries, and Canada is perhaps better off than any other country, comparitively speaking.

But leaving aside other countries, let us examine Canada separately. What is the cause of the advance in the price of food in the Dominion? There is doubtless more than one cause but we believe that among the many causes, in Ontario at least, the chief one is to be traced to the decline of agriculture in certain parts of the Province. And where there is no decline, the high price is due to the market not being properly organized to give the local buyer the full benefit of the produce of the land. Canada has been a little too attentive to the export trade. There was a time when we had so large a surplus of Farm and Dairy produce that we were forced to send it away to other countries. But that time is passing with the increase of population and the growth of our cities. Much of the food-stuff which at present goes to England and the States could be used at home and would help to reduce the cost of living.

There are already signs of decline in our export trade in agricultural produce. Cheese and butter exports are falling off. Every year cheese factories are closing up in many districts on account of the demand for cream by the large cities for ice-cream and butter making. Farmers are finding this means of disposing of their milk more profitable because they can retain the skimmed milk for calves and pigs. The trouble of carting milk to the factory every morning, manufacturing and disposing of the product, is all done away with by dealing directly with the city.

We have it on good authority from a big cheese-buyer in Peterborough who has handled a quarter of a milion dollars worth of cheese this year, that a decline has set in, in the manufacture and exportation of cheese. This gentleman ventured to prophesy that in five years time there will be no cheese exported from Canada.

Canadians have not yet learned how to cook or what to cook and what to eat. The high cost of living among many Canadians arises from either extravagance in food or ignorance of what food is best for the constitution. Some store-keepers will tell you that it does not pay to keep a whole cheese in stock because the sale is so slow that it goes stale on their hands. In England cheese is almost the staff of life to many people. Many British working men can make a mid-day meal out of a penny worth of cheese and half a loaf. We do not wish to press our readers to adopt a cheese diet, but we use this as an illustration of the waste that goes on in domestic economy among Canadians, as compared with other countries. Canada can supply herself with all the butter she needs if she can but conserve her rural population. This is the source of all the trouble in this matter of the high cost of living and to talk of "free food", which means the letting in of foodstuffs from other countries free— this is not a remedy it is only a palliative which will agravate and extend the disease.

"Mona Lisa," the famous picture which disappeared some time ago, and is now recovered, has been condemned as one of the most actively evil pictures ever painted. Mr. Kane S. Smith, of London, says it is an exquisite piece of work, but "if you look at it long enough you will be glad enough to escape from its influence." This is the best way to tempt people to look at the picture, and to look for something bad in it.

There is an undefinable something about the face of the woman depicted, and doubtless anyone going to it with a preconceived idea as to its evil influence could get bad out of it. But there is as much in the face that is tender and sad and mysterious. The truth is, like most pictures in life as well as in Art, the Mona Lisa can be turned to good or evil according to the state of mind of the gazer. All's pure to the pure. We get out of these things very much of what we bring to them.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Atlantic Ocean is reported to be in an "ugly mood" just now. Boisterous weather in the North Atlantic has badly hampered the traffic, causing anxiety in shipping circles. Four coasting vessels which left St. John's last Saturday have not since been heard from. The sea has its moods like we humans.

Domestic service is despised as an occupation by most Canadian girls. But it proved a very good business for the young Scotch girl emigrant who won the heart of a wealthy American business man who was a guest at her master's house in Montreal. Sensible men these days don't fall madly in love with stenographers—that is with domestic intentions. The lover who means marriage has a home in view and needs the domestic girl.

The Dean of Durham and the Bishop of Kensington are at variance on the Militant Suffragettes. The Bishop of Kensington favors the Pankhurst policy and condemns forcible feeding. The Dean says that the Bishop, in championing militancy as morally entitled to respect, is only travelling back to a long past phase of fanaticism which justified coercion when persuasion failed.

It is said that in the midst of the festivities at the White House over Miss Wilson's wedding and as the band was playing a cheerful air, William Jennings Bryan fell to the floor in a faint. He has been overworking himself of late in his office of Secretary of State, as well as trying to fill outside engagements. Bryan spent his best days seeking for office and, as is the case with many people, it has come rather late.

There is a movement on foot, among the conscriptionists in England, to abolish the Territorials as useless or a "sham army." Mr. Asquith thinks differently, and so does The Times, which says that "the Territorial organization is an admirable skeleton which some day will be clothed with flesh." A skeleton army would scarcely be a match for an invader.

Abolish the bar. Abolish the food taxes. Abolish the Borden Government. Abolish anything to get into power. In history the present Liberal party will be known as the "Abolishers," or "the party with the big fist."

"We have to-day the result of the work of those who said they would do better than we did." Thus spake Sir Wilfrid at Hamilton. When you come to think of it the Liberal leader is rather unfair. He had fifteen years in which to show what he could do, and a Senate that gave its blessing to all his behests. Mr. Borden has only been in office a couple of years, in which time he has been under the despotism of a Laurierized senate. Do be fair, Sir Wilfrid.

A wireless message which was released at New Zealand has been picked up at a wireless station on Lake Huron. This of course was not intended for Canada but for a station close by. It had travelled half way round the world.

TUBERCULOSIS SUNDAY

Those who took exception to the Review's remarks on the subject of Tuberculosis Sunday may be interested in the following letter taken from The Presbyterian:

To the Editor of The Presbyterian.

Press despatches report that the Association for the study of Tuberculosis are approaching the churches the schools, the labor organizations the President and State Governors etc., asking that on Sunday, December 7th, they will devote themselves to a discussion of tuberculosis.

If this Sunday is to be taken up with the consideration of tuberculosis why should we not devote another Sunday to cancer, another to diphtheria, another to typhoid fever, and so on for fifty-one Sundays, and then complete the cycle of the year by consecrating the fifty-second as insanity Sunday?

We understand the Sabbath to have been instituted as a day of devotion to God, as well as a day of release from human toil. Let the anti-tuberculosis association cease to persuade the ministers of the Christian religion to degrade this day in such a manner, but rather let them join in exalting that Word, which, if faithfully followed, will do away with all diseases.

CHRISTOPHER WEST.

THIRD DEGREE BARRED

Montreal Judge Refuses To Convict on An Extorted Confession.

MONTREAL, Nov. 29. — Because the third degree was used by a special constable in getting a confession from William Golde, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Isidore Dzerbonovitch, Judge Lafontaine in the enquiry court threw out the document compelling the police to reduce the indictment to one of common assault.

Dzerbonovitch, who afterwards died, was struck by Golde because he bothered him. Nobody saw the blow struck, but questioned by a detective, Golde admitted hitting the constable. The police had based their case on the confession.

"No detective has a right to question a man after his arrest," said Judge Lafontaine after announcing his decision.

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF
BAYARD VEILLER

"Wait a minute!" Burke remonstrated. "Wait a minute!"

"You wait!" she cried violently. "You just wait, I tell you, until my papa hears of this!"

"Who is your papa?"

"I shan't tell you," came the petulant retort from the girl. "You would probably give my name to the reporters. If it ever got into the newspapers my family would die of shame!"

"Now, the easiest way out for both of us is for you to tell me just who you are. You see, young lady, you were found in the house of a notorious crook."

"How perfectly absurd! I was calling on Miss Mary Turner!"

"How did you come to meet her anyhow?"

"I was introduced to Miss Turner by Mr. Richard Gilder. Perhaps you have heard of his father, the owner of the Emporium."

"Oh, yes, I've heard of his father and of him too.

"Then you must see at once that you are entirely mistaken in this matter."

"You see, young lady, the fact is that even if you were introduced to Miss Turner by young Mr. Gilder this same Mary Turner herself is an ex-convict, and she's just been arrested for murder."

"Murder!" the girl gasped.

"Yes. You see, if there's a mistake about you you don't want it to go any further—not a mite further, that's sure. So, you see, now, that's one of the reasons why I must know just who you are."

"You should have told me all about this horrid thing in the first place." Now the girl's manner was transformed. She smiled wistfully on the inspector and spoke with a simplicity that was peculiarly potent in its effect on the official.

"My name is Helen Travers West," she announced.

"Not the daughter of the railway president?"

"Yes," the girl admitted. "Oh, please don't tell any one," she begged prettily. "Surely, sir, you see now quite plainly why it must never be known by any one in all the wide, wide world that I have ever been brought to this perfectly dreadful place—though you have been quite nice. Please let me go home." She plucked a minute handkerchief from her hand bag, put it to her eyes and began to sob quietly.

The burly inspector of police was moved to quick sympathy.

"That's all right, little lady," he exclaimed cheerfully. "Now, don't you be worried, not a little bit. Take it from me, Miss West. Just go ahead and tell me all you know about this Turner woman. Did you see her yesterday?"

The girl's sobs ceased. After a final dab with the minute handkerchief she leaned forward a little toward the inspector and proceeded to put a question to him with great earnestness.

"Will you let me go home as soon as I've told you the teenty little I know?"

"Yes," Burke agreed promptly, with an encouraging smile. He added as one might to an alarmed child, "No one is going to hurt you, young lady."

"Well, then, you see, it was this way," began the brisk explanation. "Mr. Gilder was calling on me one afternoon, and he said to me then that he knew a very charming young woman who"—

Here the speech ended abruptly, and once again the handkerchief was brought into play as the sobbing broke forth with increased violence. Presently the girl's voice rose in a wail.

"Oh, this is dreadful—dreadful!" In the final word the wail broke to a moan.

Burke felt himself vaguely guilty as the cause of such suffering on the part of one so young, so fair, so innocent. But his well meant attempt to assuage the stricken creature's woe was futile. The sobbing continued.

"I'm afraid!" the girl asserted dismally. "I'm afraid you will—put me—in a cell!"

"Pooh!" Burke returned gallantly. "Why, my dear young lady, nobody in the world could think of you and a cell at the same time—no, indeed!"

"Oh, thank you!"

"Are you sure you've told me all you know about this woman?"

"Oh, yes! I've only seen her two or three times," came the ready response. "Oh, please, commissioner! Won't you let me go home?"

The use of a title higher than his own flattered the inspector, and he was moved to graciousness.

"Now, you see," he said in his heavy voice, yet very kindly, "no one has hurt you—not even a little bit, after all. Now, you run right home to your mother."

The girl sprang up joyously and started toward the door, with a final ravishing smile for the pleased official at the desk.

It was at this moment that Cassidy entered from the opposite side of the office. As his eyes fell on the girl at the door across from him his stolid face lighted in a grin. And, in that same instant of recognition between the two the color went out of the girl's face. The little red lips snapped together in a line of supreme disgust against this vicissitude of fate after all her manœuverings in the face of the enemy.

"Hello, Aggie," the detective remarked, with a smirk, while the inspector stared from one to the other and his jaw dropped from the stark surprise.

The girl returned deliberately to the chair she had occupied through the interview with the inspector and dropped into it weakly. It was after a minute of silence, in which the two men sat staring, that at last she spoke with a savage wrath against the pit into which she had fallen after her arduous efforts.

"Ain't that the —est luck!"

"Cassidy, do you know this woman?" asked Burke.

"Sure I do!" came the placid answer "She's little Aggie Lynch—con woman, from Buffalo—two years for blackmail—did her time at Burnsing."

For a little time there was silence, the while Burke sat staring at the averted face of the girl. Then he set his features grimly, rose from his chair and walked to position directly in the front of the girl, who still refused to look in his direction.

"On the level, now," the inspector demanded, "when did you see Mary Turner last?"

"Early this morning. We slept together last night because I had the willies. She blew the joint about half past 10."

"What's the use of your lying to me?"

"So help me," Aggie continued with the utmost solemnity, "Mary never left the house all night. I'd swear that's the truth on a pile of Bibles a mile high!"

"Have to be higher than that. Mary Turner was arrested just after midnight. Young woman, you'd better tell all you know."

"On the level, when did you see Mary Turner last?"

"I don't know a thing!" Aggie retorted.

Burke drew the pistol from his pocket and extended it toward the girl.

"How long has she owned this gun?" he said threateningly.

"She didn't own it."

"Oh, then it's Garson's!"

"I don't know whose it is," Aggie replied. "I never laid eyes on it till now."

"English Eddie was killed with this gun last night. Now, who did it? Come on, now! Who did it?"

"How should I know? What do you think I am—a fortune teller?"

"Now, Aggie Lynch, you listen to me. Tell me what you know, and I'll see you make a clean getaway, and I'll slip you a nice little piece of money too. Now, what do you say?"

"I say you're a great big stiff! What do you think I am?" Aggie wheeled on the detective. "Say, take me out of here. I'd rather be in the cooler than here with him!"

CHAPTER XVII.

The Trap That Failed.

As the scornful maiden went out of the door under the escort of Cassidy, Burke bowed gallantly to her lithe back and blew a kiss from his thick finger tips in mocking reverence for her as an artist in her way. Then when he learned that Edward Gilder had arrived he ordered that the magnate and the district attorney be admitted and that the son also be sent up from his cell.

"It's a bad business, sir," Burke said with hearty sympathy to the shaken father after the formal greetings that followed the entrance of the two men "It's a very bad business."

"What does he say?" Gilder questioned.

"Nothing!" Burke answered. "That is why I sent for you. I suppose Mr Demarest has made the situation plain to you."

"Yes, he has explained it to me. It's a terrible position for my boy. But you'll release him at once, won't you?"

"I can't," Burke replied reluctantly but bluntly. "You ought not to expect it, Mr. Gilder."

"Inspector," the magnate cried brokenly, "you—don't mean"—

"I mean, Mr. Gilder, that you've got to make him talk. That's what I want you to do for all our sakes. Will you?"

AGREED WITH BABY

This Mother Found The Right Food For Her Baby Girl.

Mrs. Arthur Prince of Meaford, Ont., writes, on Sept. 12th, 1911: "Some time ago, you were good enough to send me a sample of Neave's Food. Baby liked it so well and it agreed with her, so I am using it right along and think it is excellent.

"I have a friend with a very delicate baby. She cannot nurse it and has tried six different foods, but it does not thrive at all—is always sick and troubled with indigestion. I strongly recommended your food. Will you please send her a sample?"

Mrs. Prince wrote again on Sept. 27th, 1911: My friend's baby has grown wonderfully. I can scarcely credit it. Her next baby, which she expects in five months, will be fed on Neave's Food right from the start—she thinks it is so good."

Mothers and prospective mothers may obtain a free tin of Neave's Food and a valuable book "Hints About Baby" by writing Edwin Utley, 14 Front Street East, Toronto, who is the Agent for Canada. (Mention this paper.)

GIRL SUFFERED TERRIBLY

At Regular Intervals—Says Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured her.

Adrian, Texas.—"I take pleasure in adding my testimonial to the great list and hope that it will be of interest to suffering women. For four years I suffered untold agonies at regular intervals. Such pains and cramps, severe chills and sickness at stomach, then finally hemorrhages until I would be nearly blind. I had five doctors and none of them could do more than relieve me for a time.

"I saw your advertisement in a paper and decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took seven boxes of it and used two bottles of the Sanative Wash, and I am completely cured of my trouble. When I began taking the Compound I only weighed ninety-six pounds and now I weigh one hundred and twenty-six pounds. If anyone wishes to address me in person I will cheerfully answer all letters, as I cannot speak too highly of the Pinkham remedies."—Miss Jessie Marsh, Adrian, Texas.

Hundreds of such letters expressing gratitude for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished are constantly being received, proving the reliability of this grand old remedy.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

SONG.

The night-long shadows faded into grey,
Then silvered into glad and gold sunlight,
Because you came to me, like a new day
Born of the beauty of an autumn night.

The silence that enfolded me so long
Stirred to the sweetest music life has known,
Because you came, and coming woke the song
That slumbered through the years I was alone.

So have you brought the silver from the shade,
The music and the laughter and the day,
So have you come to me, and coming made
This life of mine a blossom-bordered way.

—E. Pauline Johnson, in The Canadian Magazine.

WHEN BABY CRIES

Do not get out of patience or scold or shake your baby for crying. He does not do that to be ugly—that is not a baby's nature—He wants to laugh and be happy but when he cries that is the way he takes of telling you he is in pain; that his little stomach is out of order or that his new teeth hurt him. Instead of being cross give him a dose of Baby's Own Tablets and you will soon see him laughing and happy again The Tablets sweeten the stomach; make teething painless; breaks up colds; cure constipation and expel worms. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont.

AN UNPAID DEBT

By MANTON HENDERSON

The outing season was over, and the outers were returning to town. Expecting an aunt whom I was to meet and see through the city to her house, I went to the station to meet her. I didn't meet my aunt. She had delayed her coming, but I met with an adventure.

Those waiting for the train were roped off to inspect those who left it and to pounce on those we expected when they came along. Among the last was a young lady whose face the moment she saw me broke into a smile, and, advancing to the rope, she dropped a suit case she was carrying and, clasping my hand, put up her lips to be kissed. She was a stranger to me.

I defy any man, be his intentions the most scrupulous, to have a pretty girl put up her mouth to be kissed to draw back. Why, it would be an insult to the girl. At any rate, I kissed the young lady, fervently since I was about it, and awaited developments. I confess I wondered should my aunt come along what she would think of the proceeding. Then I was afraid she would come along and bring about an explanation before an explanation was called for.

"I'm so glad you've come," said the girl. "Did you get the telegram? I'm tired out carrying this suit case." And, taking it up, she handed it to me. "Have you got a carriage? You have changed ever so much."

Now, if she had stopped for an answer to the first of these questions I would have been in honor bound to explain. But she didn't, and, taking the suit case from her, letting her do all the talking, upon which she seemed bent, I escorted her to the street, called a carriage and, my conscience prompting me to go no further, stood still. She looked at me with wonder in her big brown eyes and said:

"Why, what are you waiting for?"

This rattled me, and I got into the carriage and shut the door.

"Where to, sir?" called the driver.

I hesitated a moment, got out the word "Number," hesitated again, and the girl supplied the information. Then we rattled away, I feeling as though I had been committing a forgery and expecting an arrest at any moment. Unfortunately the girl subsided from her loquacity, and I felt bound to say something. I thought it a good time to confess—that is, if I could pump up the courage to do so.

"I feel it my duty to tell you"— I began.

"Oh, heavens! What is it? Any one dead?"

This rattled me again. I hadn't the sand to go on in the vein I had started. I switched off.

"Oh, no," I said, "not that at all. What I was going to say is that for a few days I shall be loaded down to the guards with work and shall not be able to show you the same attention as if"—

"Dear me, how you frightened me! I know Uncle Ben is quite ill, and I feared you were going to tell me that the poor old man had gone."

"Not at all, not at all. I assure you I had no such intention." I mopped my face with my handkerchief.

All the while the carriage was bowling toward the address given the cabman, and I was thinking of that "day of wrath" when I should meet those who would uncover my unintended deception and make me an object of contempt.

"Do you know," said my companion, turning to look at me with her face, her lips dangerously near mine, "that had I not been looking for you I wouldn't have known you."

"You, too, are changed," I replied, and a method of saving myself flashed into my brain. Why shouldn't I pretend to have made a mistake as well as she? Splendid idea! Now was the time. So I continued, this time with perfect confidence: "But, Lou, the change is for the better. You were pretty when I saw you last. Now you are beautiful."

"I'm glad you continue to call me by my first name," she replied. "I was afraid you would 'Miss' me."

Great heavens, rattled again! I had accidentally struck her name. Instead of wondering that I didn't call her Alice or Evelyn or some name other than her own, thus bringing out the double blunder, she was glad I did it.

The carriage swerved to the curb. I was lost. In a moment persons would be running out to meet the girl and give me away. Miserable me, what should I do? Oh, for a little more time!

"Before we alight," she said, "I wish to say something. You won't feel hurt, will you?"

"Certainly not! Go on."

"Please don't see me to the door. They don't know anything about this meeting, and I don't care at present to have them know."

I gave mute thanks to heaven. "I think you are quite right," I said. "I will remain in the carriage."

The devil had been sick and would be a saint. He had suddenly recovered, and devil a saint was he. Conscience with safety vanished.

"Mayn't I have a parting kiss?" she whispered.

We drew back away from the window, and—it was very sweet it it was a rascally proceeding on my part.

I have often wondered who she was and who was the fellow I owe reparation to for two kisses that belonged to him.

Rotundity of Earth.

We are assured by competent authority that Thales of Miletus taught that the earth was of globular form so early as 640 B. C. Pythagoras demonstrated from the varying altitudes of the stars that the earth must be round. Aristarchus of Samos maintained that the earth turned on its own axis and revolved about the sun, which doctrine was held by his contemporaries as so absurd and revolting that the philosopher nearly lost his life B. C. 280. The wisdom of the ancients was, of course, lost sight of in the darkness of the "middle ages," and it took Galilei and Copernicus to restore the old knowledge to the world.

STATEMENTS THAT LIQUOR WAS SOLD MADE SOLELY BY THE TWO DETECTIVES

Defence Witnesses Swore the Men Were Intoxicated and That Liquor Was not Sold at King's Hotel—Judgment Was Reserved

Magistrate Edmison reserved judgment in the liquor case heard by him yesterday afternoon, when D. N. King, of Norwood, was charged with selling liquor at his hotel on fair day.

Part of the evidence of Harry Soloman, one of the detectives of the License Department was given in yesterday's issue.

To Mr. Gordon who was conducting the cross examination, witness admitted getting a bottle of liquor from Joseph Levasseur, at the fair grounds and also getting two drinks of whiskey. He denied having been put out of the bar at King's hotel on that day. Greene, his companion, was not put out of the hotel but witness said he might have been drunk.

Arthur Green, the detective who was with Soloman, said he and Soloman arrived in Peterborough on the 14th of October. He had a couple of drinks and also a racket with a Chinaman. After reaching Norwood a stranger asked him to have a drink and noticing Soloman at the door he asked him to have a drink also. They all had a drink of whiskey.

"Were you drunk in the parlor car," asked Mr. Gordon in cross examination.

"No sir," replied witness.

"Were you in company with a woman?"

"No sir."

He had two drinks with Soloman, he said. The whiskey sold by Lavasseur was "doctored."

The whiskey sold by King was of very poor quality. The three drinks cost fifty cents. He had been out on similar occasions with Soloman on the same business.

J. D. MacGregor, superintendent at the incinerator, and a witness for defence, stated that he saw Greene in the Chinese cafe and he was intoxicated. He insisted and occupied the same booth as witness. After leaving the cafe, witness and a friend went over to the Oriental. Shortly afterward they saw Greene rush out of market arcade followed by a Chinaman. Afterwards the Chinaman conversed with a policeman. The witness then followed the man to the White House where he saw the man and Chinaman coming out. The next place they saw the man was at the station. He saw Soloman at the station in company with a lady.

POLICE OFFICER'S EVIDENCE.

Constable Patterson gave evidence to the effect that he saw the men here about the 14th of October and on the morning of the 15th, at the C. P. R. station. He identified both men as the men whom he saw intoxicated at the station. Both men were under the influence of liquor.

P. C. Sills and witness were instructed to investigate into the racket at the Chinese cafe. At the station the man Greene paid for the meal. The other man had to assist Greene into the car.

P.C. Sills corroborated the evidence of the former witness.

J. W. Huffman, Queen street, said that he was in the Chinese Cafe on the night in question with Mr. MacGregor, and saw Greene come into the cafe. He did not pay for the meals.

Jas. Rumney, conductor on the C. P.R., said that he saw Greene, who tried to get into the parlor car. He was refused admittance owing to intoxication. Greene left the train at Peterborough.

The Chinaman, Thos. Jacks, identified Greene as the man who did him out of the meal on the night of the 14th. He was drunk that night. He wouldn't pay his bill and went out.

THE VILLAGE CONSTABLE.

Isaac Puffer, constable at Norwood, said he saw Soloman in a drug store and heard him ask for a dose of medicine for a big drunk. King's reputation, he said, was of the best.

Mr Moore—"You can't give character evidence at this period."

Mr. Gordon—"Quote your authorities, then.

Mr. Moore sat down and the character evidence was taken.

"ON A BIG DRUNK."

Mr. Percy English, the drug clerk at Norwood, gave evidence to the effect that Soloman came into the store after fair day and asked for medicine to fix him up after being on a big drunk.

William Beckett, of Norwood, said he saw Green at Norwood on the early morning of October 15th, and was strongly of the opinion that he was drunk.

A young boy named Cross, of Norwood, said he saw the two men sitting in King's Hotel about five o'clock on the morning of the 15th with a bottle between them.

Ward Edwards, step-son of defendant, said he saw the men at the Fair grounds. He denied having served them with liquor. The bar was closed at 9 o'clock. There was no whiskey in the bar. He saw Soloman in the bar so drunk he could hardly walk. There was absolutely no liquor sold. He saw Green with a big bottle, which he said he got at the Fair grounds.

F. E. Hawkins, of Toronto, who assisted Mr. King the day in question, corroborated this evidence. Soloman was taken sick and was led from the room. There was no whiskey sold at the bar.

THE DEFENDANT.

Mr. D. N. King, defendant, stated he had never supplied any one with liquor. Soloman and Green were both drunk. The former was taken sick. Green had a bottle and he was told by the witness to put the bottle in his pocket and get out. He closed about nine o'clock. Green never got any liquor at any time.

"Did you sell any liquor on Fair Day?" asked Mr. Moore.

"No."

"Will you swear to that?"

"Yes."

NURSING SIDE OF MEDICAL INSPECTION OF THE SCHOOLS

You can readily understand what would become of the children if they were excluded by the Medical Inspector and no further attention was given them. Visions of truants appear before you. It is for this reason that nurses are employed as a part of the great scheme of education. The nurse is the bond that brings the home and the school into close contact. She finds out why the seemingly backward child is so. There are often reasons to account for the backwardness, and the teacher learning this, takes a special interest in the child. The follow-up work is the most important work of the whole system. It is the nurse's duty to see that results are obtained and it is left to her to find out how this can best be done.

After the Medical Inspector's routine inspection at mid-summer, Christmas and Easter, the nurse makes all the subsequent inspections at intervals of every two weeks and takes this opportunity to give instruction on general cleanliness.

If, on visiting a home to instruct the parent about having a child's eyes tested the nurse finds a case of tuberculosis she immediately reports it to the Health Department and aids in getting sanitarium treatment or to have a district nurse visit regularly.

Unsanitary conditions found in the homes by the nurse are reported at once to the Health Department. Concealed cases of Scarlet Fever, Measles and other diseases found are reported in the same way. Some physicians have learned that discretion is not the better part of valor in this instance. Cases where children were playing on the street when they were supposedly under quarantine have been brought to the notice of the Health Officer. The law is enforced and the other children protected.

SIR WILLIAM CANNOT COME

Mr. Price said to-day that the receipts up to last night totalled $1000 and that the debt of $400 on the church would be wiped out.

The expenses incurred in holding the bazaar will be between $400 and $500.

A PRE-NUPTIAL PRESENTATION

"A bright and happy future" was the wish expressed on a card accompanying the gift of an eight-day quarter chime mahogany clock, which was received this afternoon by Miss Edna Armstrong, elder daughter of our esteemed City Clerk.

The gift was from the men in the municipal buildings, the Chief of Police, the Chief of the Fire Dept. and the Superintendents of the Hydro-Electric and Water Works departments.

The handsome clock was purchased at the Alex. Gibson store. Miss Armstrong is being married on Wednesday, the 3rd of December.

SPARKLING EYES AND RUBY LIPS

The Birthright of Every Girl With Rich, Red Blood

The sad eye that goes with bloodlessness is a sure sign of misery and weakness. Anaemic—that is bloodless—girls and women have dull heavy eyes with dark lines underneath. The eyelid is pulled down looks pale and bloodshot inside. This is not all. Anaemia works havoc all through the system; girls grow painfully weak and irritable, they are breathless and incapable of much exertion, while older women who are anaemic complain of being "never really well."

There is only one way to brighter, better health for pale, pining girls and women. That was is to invigorate the body with new blood—the rich, healthy blood that imparts strength, cleanses the system of all impurities, and restores the bright eyes and red lips of perfect health. Thousands of girls and women know that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People make this new, rich, red blood, and so restore health and strength more surely than any other medicine known. There would not be an anaemic woman or girl in the land if those suffering from this condition would give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial. That is why so many recommend these pills to their suffering sisters. Mrs. R.B. Keith, Steeves Settlement, N.B. says:—"At the age of 13 my daughter, Sadie, began to complain of constant headaches, and did not have her usual good appetite. I went to a doctor and got some medicine but it did not help her, and finally she had to discontinue going to school. She seemed to be growing weaker every day an wanted to lie down all the time, and would continually complain of being tired. The doctor gave her another bottle of medicine, but with no better results. There was not a bit of color in her face or lips, and I was afraid she was going into a decline. A friend who was in to see her, said "If she was my child I would try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills," and I decided I would take the advice. In a couple of weeks we could see a difference, as her eyes looked brighter, and she would try to eat a little. When she began the pills she could not dress herself alone, but little by little her strength came back until she could go for a walk. She continued the use of the Pills several months with the result that she was again strong and active. This was over two years ago, and she has been a strong, healthy girl ever since. We have since used the pills for other purposes and find them a good family medicine."

Dr. Williams' Pinkk Pills are sold by all medicine dealers, or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont.

LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION IMPRESSIONS OF MR. ROWELL

Review Representative Reminds Him of East Middlesex But Liberal Champion is Reticent

Mr. Rowell, the Leader of the Opposition, who opened St. George's Bazaar last evening, is known chiefly from the cartoons which appear in Conservative newspapers. In appearance he is not quite so massive as his photographs represent him. He has a slight resemblance to the cartoons. But he is not quite the rampant abolitionist in appearance which the Toronto News' cartoonist dreams about. The first glance is somewhat disappointing. He has no flowing locks to frame his face and give him the distinguished appearance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He is a plain, businesslike lawyer, and gives one the impression that he is a little nervous of bazaars.

It is not until the Liberal Leader speaks that one realizes the energy that lies behind his quiet exterior. he is then fluent, forceful and to the point. Coming in close contact with the man personally you find an unassuming, reticent and polite gentleman. But behind it all is the shrewd lawyer and politician. He has the shrewdest eye in Ontario, which seems to take all in at a glance without any turning of the head.

But there is a touch of sadness about this shrewd champion. Possibly he had not yet forgotten East Middlesex last night. In case that sad event had slipped his memory, the Review representative cruelly jogged his memory on the point, after the ceremonies were over. But nothing transpired during conversation amid the coffee and cigars of the Rest Room which was of political importance. It ought to be added that Mr. Rowell did not join in the cigars. These he would doubtless abolish along with the bar, and possibly after last evening his next slogan will be "abolish the cigar."

Mr. Rowell seemed to enjoy his visit. He had many pleasant chats with some of the leading men of the city, of whom there were a good number present at the Bazaar last evening.

MAGNIFICENT GIFT IS MADE TO LINDSAY CHURCH

$7000 Pipe Organ Presented as Memorial to the Late Mrs. Flavelle

Cambridge street church at Lindsay, the most important of the Protestant churches of the town, is the recipient of a magnificent pipe organ, the gift, as a memorial of their late mother, from her sons and daughter. These are Messrs. J. D. Flavelle, W. Flavelle, J. W. Flavelle and Mrs. M. T. Milner. The costly and handsome gift expresses the filial love and respect of her sons and daughter for the mother, who was ever the wise councillor and guide in early life.

The formal dedication and presentation took place on Thursday evening, and after the ceremony a concert was given, during which the capacity and power of the instrument were displayed by Mr. W. H. Hewlett, organist of the Methodist Centenary church, Hamilton, who played a varied program. Several vocal numbers were also contributed to the program.

The organ was built by Casavant Freres, of St. Hyacinthe, Que., who have built organs for many of the largest churches in Canada and the United States.

In making the presentation, Mr. J. D. Flavelle spoke feelingly of his late mother, her love for the church and deep interest in its temporal and spiritual progress, and he said that her sons were only carrying out her wishes in doing as they were.

The organ fills the large recess provided for the purpose, is a three-manual, with the very latest action in every respect. The design of the front is rich but chaste and the whole a gift that any church in the Dominion might be proud to receive. The cost was over $7,000.

The funeral of the late James Galvin took place this morning from his late residence at 187 Stewart Street at nine o'clock to St. Peter's Cathedral and Cemetery. Many friends of the deceased took this last opportunity of paying their respects and the Cathedral was filled to its utmost capacity. Requiem high mass was sung by Rev. P. J. Galvin, a cousin of the deceased. The pall bearers were:—Messrs. J. E. Wincnett, John Deannard, Roy Galvin, Hubert Galvin, Keher Galvin and Elmer Galvin.

Many beautiful floral tributes were sent, among them being a gates ajar from the C.G.E. machine shop, and a wreath from the C.G.E. tool room.

I OWE MY LIFE TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

They Did Me More Good Than All Other Treatments Combined

MRS. H. S. WILLIAMS

PALMERSTON, ONT., June 20th. 1913

"I really believe that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives". Ever since childhood, I have been under the care of physicians and have been paying doctors' bills. I was so sick and worn out that people on the street often asked me if I thought I could get along without help. The same old stomach trouble and distressing headaches nearly drove me wild. Some time ago I got a box of "Fruit-a-tives" and the first box did me good. My husband was delighted and advised a continuation of their use. "Fruit-a-tives" completely cured me.

Today, I am feeling fine, and a physician meeting me on the street, noticed my improved appearance and asked me the reason. I replied, "I am taking Fruit-a-tives". He said, "Well, if "Fruit-a-tives" are making you look so well, go ahead and take them. They are doing more for you than I can".

Mrs. H. S. WILLIAMS.

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

CAMPBELLFORD MAKES COMPLAINTS

The Minister of Militia Meets Civic Deputation and Hears of Grievances

Colonel Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, paid a visit to Campbellford yesterday. A public meeting was held in the Public Library. Colonel Hughes was given a flattering reception.

Mayor Irwin occupied the chair, and after welcoming the Minister, presented the facts in connection with the Government work along the canal. He pointed out that our citizens had been deprived of a water system for domestic use for a long period of time because of the main being destroyed by the work of the canal. He also referred to the fact that the Government had taken certain streets for which all efforts for compensation had been unavailing. He also reminded the Colonel of the proposed armory and of the promised post office.

Colonel Hughes said questions were brought up of which he had before heard nothing. He assured those present that he would take the matter of the post office up with the Department and do his best to push it forward. He said he thought that the whole delay is being caused by understrappers and it would be better for the country if they were removed from office. He had noticed this in connection with his own department that work ordered by the Department of Militia was delayed, but when this came to his attention, the delay came to an end and the work was speedily proceeded with. This was also no doubt the reason that no settlement had been made for the roads and for expense incurred incident to the destruction of the water main. There were reasonable claims and would receive the attention of the government. He advised a more adhesive method of attack. The Minister's attention should be brought to these matters, and the underfiddlers ignored. The trouble is these matters never reach the proper authorities.

Referring to the armory, the Minister stated that it would be built. He described it as a rendezvous for young people and citizens generally. He said that it would be a common meeting place for all classes, something that every town needs. It should contain a shooting gallery for the young men, and older boys, and would have a hall for ladies' social gatherings.

He asked the town to put their requirements in writing and give them to Mr. Walker, when he would be pleased to take up with the government.

THE COST FOR MAKING SEWER CONNECTIONS

Water Street Resident Writes to Board of Works

"Permit me to draw your attention to a matter relative to the cost of making sewer connections," writes R. W. Reid, 560 Water street in a letter to the Board of Works.

"In the summer of 1911 I had a connection made with house, No, 560 Water street, where I reside.

This summer I had the same thing done for the next house, No 558. After the former connection was made I received a rebate of $7.40 In the latter case instead of a rebate I am billed for $3.33 extra. The street in front of these houses is as near as can be perfectly level; then why should there be such a difference of more than 60 per cent in the cost. I think the cause is not hard to distinguish.

But when the city reserves to itself (and rightly so) the management of these jobs surely it is incumbent upon the overseer to engage only such men as are thoroughly competent and who will return a fair amount of labor for the wages they receive. I believe a little investigation here would not be amiss.

Yours respectfully,

R. W. REID,

560 Water st.

THEY ARE SAYING

When I am Mayor,
The great White Way will be ablaze,
And paving streets will be my craze;
There's be no mud,

When I am Mayor,
The cops must hustle 'long their beats,
I'll also cut the price of meats,
And other things.

When I am Mayor,
I'll build a bridge across the stream
And street cars then will be no dream,
For Brooklynites.

When I am Mayor,
The taxes will be cut in two
And this old burg will grow a few
Because I'm Mayor.

The SWING in the C.P.R. bridge will tend to make that locality more popular. Look out for a movement against the No Trespass sign.

Anyway Mayor Bradburn gets a kat out of it, which is a reminder for Ald. George Newton that it is but 25 days to Christmas.

The Mayoralty candidates might make a wager that he who loses must officiate at the formal opening of the Garbage Incinerator.

FALLING HAIR

Dandruff and Itching Scalp Are Caused by Microbes.

There is no doubt about it. Doctor Sangerbond proved it when he infected a guinea pig with dandruff germs and all its hair disappeared in a short time. The entire medical world has accepted Dr. Sangerbond's discovery as final. Ask any worthy physician.

Paris leads the world in knowledge of diseases of the hair and remedies for the same.

Parisian Sage which can now be obtained at leading druggists all over Canada is the one great remedy that kills the dandruff germs.

That is why the Warne Drug Co. says to every reader of The Review if Parisian Sage does not banish dandruff, stop falling hair or itching scalp in two weeks, they will refund the purchase price.

Dandruff is the forerunner of baldness. Take care of your hair while you have hair to take care of. Kill the dandruff germs now before the dandruff germs kill your hair.

Use Parisian Sage, the guaranteed danruff cure and delightful hair dressing.

It is used extensively by ladies of refinement because it keeps the scalp absolutely clean and gives a bewitching lustre to the hair. AN OBJECTION TO MEDICAL INSPECTION

Correspondent Turns to the Scriptures and Also Quotes Shakespeare

To the Editor of the Review.

Regarding the effort which is being made to influence our Board of Education and public opinion to adopt medical school inspection, I would like to call the attention of the Board of Education to the following:

At the annual meeting of the taxpayers of School District No. 1, State of Oregon, comprising the city of Portland, a resolution was adopted, which in effect means elimination from the budget recommended by the Board of $25,000 for physical education, most of which was to be used for an elaborate system of medical school inspection in connection with organized play activity.

It must be clear that this opposition is not directed against play activity, but, that the tax payers of Portland are opposed to medical inspection. They, no doubt, are familiar with the effects of medical school inspection and well aware that the only benefits derived therefrom are by a few high salaried officials.

The Scriptures says: "As a man thinketh so is he; Shakespeare says: "There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so; Job said: "The thing I greatly feared is come upon me." This having been the case with Job, is it wisdom for us to teach children, as has been done in some of our churches within the past week, that because they have a pain in the locality of a joint they may be afflicted with the loathesome disease, tuberculosis!

This letter is offered as a mere hint for our worthy Board to weigh the matter well before putting unnecessary burden upon the people.

People cry out against the high cost of living, and yet go right on creating new offices to be filled by high salaried officials, who add further expense to carry out some of their orders which people can do without as they have in the past.

Thanking you for space,

RATEPAYER.

STREET CAR STOPS ON GEORGE STREET

Since the removal of the half-way crossings between Brock, Hunter, Simcoe and Charlotte streets, the points at which street cars make intermediate stops have not been quite clear. To define these points trolley poles adjacent to the stops have been painted white, and hereafter cars will stop at white poles on the RIGHT HAND side when facing in the direction the car is travelling.

In other words white poles on the east side fo George street are stops for north bound cars, and poles on the west side are stops for south bound cars.

Cars will stop with front end opposite pole.

N. B.—Owing to the above intermediate stops being close to regular cross street stops it very frequently occurs that passengers inadvertently give a stop signal for one of the former when they really want the next street crossing. This has caused considerable unnecessary delay in the past, and for that reason hereafter cars will stop at the above intermediate points only to take up passengers. Stop signals given from inside the car will apply to the next cross street stop.

Vesper Service

At the Y.W.C.A. Vesper service on Sunday at five o'clock Mrs. (Rev.) Cragg will speak and Mrs. J. H. Renwick will be the soloist.

WHAT ABOUT CITY SLUMS AND THE WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC?

Why Don't the Churches Grapple With These Home Problems?

The Social Evil in our Cities

EVERY YEAR THE LIVES OF THOUSANDS OF YOUNG GIRLS IN CANADA—INCLUDING TOO MANY IN PETERBORO'—ARE RUINED THROUGH THE SOCIAL EVIL. SOME OF THESE GIRLS ARE ENSLAVED PERMANENTLY BY THE WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC. These cases, when we hear of them, shock us. If about the same time we learn that a Laymen's Missionary Campaign is being conducted to raise funds for home and foreign missions we are apt to grow impatient. Naturally we ask, "why don't the churches raise money to fight these evils" instead of sending it abroad to the heathen.

BUT, MY FRIEND, THE CHURCHES ARE FIGHTING THESE EVILS. They are probably doing far more than you suppose. They would like YOU to give your aid.

ALL THE LEADING CHURCHES IN CANADA ARE GIVING GENEROUSLY OF THEIR FUNDS TO FIGHT THE WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC AND THE SOCIAL EVIL. They, as well as the Trades and Labor Congress, of Canada, and other representative bodies, are represented on the board of the National Committee for the suppression of the White Slave Traffic.

Many notable reforms have been accomplished. The following are a few of them.

LAST YEAR OFFICIALLY TOLERATED VICE WAS DRIVEN OUT OF CALGARY, LETHBRIDGE, WINNIPEG, QUEBEC AND HALIFAX. This pernicious policy—almost entirely through the efforts of the Christian Churches—is non-existent now throughout Canada, east of the Rocky Mountains.

LEGISLATION HAS RECENTLY BEEN SECURED COVERING THE FOLLOWING POINTS:

1. Adding the penalty of whipping for men who procure girls for immoral purposes or engage in the White Slave Traffic, and giving constables power to arrest without warrant those suspected of engaging in the traffic.
2. Making more effective and easy the enforcement of the law against bawdy houses and landlords who allow houses to be used as such.
3. Making solicitation by males or females and living in whole or in part on the avails of prostitution punishable more easily and more severely.

LEGISLATION IS BEING PRESSED FOR, BUT HAS NOT BEEN SECURED AS YET:

1. Raising the age of consent in seduction from 16 to 18, and in carnal knowledge from 14 to 16.
2. Making all employers who seduce female employees under 21 punishable—not simply those in shops, stores, mills, factories and workshops, as now.
3. Making living in adultery or fornication a crime.

MANY OTHER LINES OF WORK ARE BEING CONDUCTED, TOO MANY FOR IT TO BE POSSIBLE TO MENTION THEM IN DETAIL.

The Churches Are Watching Conditions At Home To The Best Of Their Ability. Are You Doing Your Part By Supporting The Church?

Our City Slums—What Are the Churches Doing?

"POVERTY IS SO PREVALENT IN CANADA THAT SLUMS ARE ALREADY SPRINGING UP IN NOT ONLY OUR LARGER CITIES BUT IN SMALLER ONES AS WELL. WHY SHOULD OUR CHURCHES SPEND MONEY ON MISSIONS WHEN WE HAVE SO MANY POOR AT HOME"? This question is a natural one, but it grows out of a misconception. That is that the churches are not grappling with these problems. The fact is they are. The people who contribute most liberally for missionary purposes are invariably the people who are the first to contribute to relieve distress at home.

LET US, HOWEVER, BE QUITE FRANK. THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES HAVE NOT DONE AS MUCH TO GRAPPLE WITH THE INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS WHICH CAUSE POVERTY AS MANY FEEL THAT THEY MIGHT OR AS SOME OF THEIR OWN MEMBERS BELIEVE THAT THEY SHOULD. This, however, is not through lack of sympathy. It is due to lack of knowledge.

The Labor Unions are advocating certain reforms. Socialists are urging other remedies. The I.W.W. believe in still more heroic measures. No one seems to know which are the best remedies. The Church stands ready to promote every true reform. It may be slow to move at first but once let it see its duty clearly and it will throw its weight on the side of reform, let the cost be what it may. Its history for hundreds of years proves this.

Audited Statements--Who Knows How the Money is Spent?

"Hundreds of thousands of dollars are raised every year by the churches for missions. Who knows how it is spent? Did anyone ever see an audited statement giving this information?"

Every year all our leading Protestant Churches publish exhaustive reports explaining to the last cent every dollar was received and how each dollar was expended, both for home and foreign purposes. These reports are thoroughly discussed each year at the annual church conferences, general assemblies, synod meetings and other similar gatherings. If you would like to know how all church money is expended just ask the the nearest minister or clergyman for one of these reports. He will take pleasure in furnishing it to you. You will find much in it that will interest you.

THE CHURCHES ARE PROMOTING INDUSTRIAL REFORMS. More and more they are pronouncing in favor of taxation reform which by taxing vacant land more heavily and exempting improvements will force land into use, provide work for the unemployed and reduce rents. They are fiercely fighting against the open bar which helps to cause poverty. Through these great central committees and councils they are promoting legislation to prevent the employment of child labor, to close sweat shops, to establish industrial schools.

Foreign Settlements in Canada Are We Christianizing Them?

"LAST YEAR 395.807 IMMIGRANTS ENTERED CANADA. OF THEIR NUMBER 109.802 WERE FROM COUNTRIES OTHER THAN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES. This great stream of foreigners is creating large foreign settlements in our leading cities as well as in the West where we have the Galicians, the Roumanians and the Douhobors. Why don't our Church christianize them first instead of the heathen in foreign lands?"

PEOPLE WHO HAVE NOT STUDIED WHAT THE LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT IS STRIVING TO ACCOMPLISH MAY WELL ASK THAT QUESTION. It is an important one. It is so important that a very large proportion of the money which it is expected will be raised next week in Peterboro by the every member canvass will be devoted to this very purpose. It forms part of the great Home Mission Problem. We must lift these people up or they will drag us down.

DURING THE PAST TWELVE YEARS, 543.404 IMMIGRANTS WHO ENTERED CANADA WERE FROM THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE. OF THIS NUMBER ALMOST ONE HALF WERE SLAVS. We have in Canada 30,000 Chinese, 50,000 Italians, 105,000 Indians, 10,000 Japanese, 100,000 Jews, 35,000 Poles, 45,000 Russians, 110,000 Roumanians and Bulgarians, 129,000 Austria-Hungarians, 4,000 Greeks and large numbers of peoples of other nationalities.

DO YOU KNOW THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF CANADA ARE PRACTICALLY THE ONLY AGENCIES THAT ARE LABORING TO UPLIFT THESE FELLOW CANADIANS OF OURS? Such is the case. A great work is being done among them. Still more might be accomplished were the funds and workers available.

Here are a few things the Protestant Churches are doing.

ONE DENOMINATION ALONE, THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY, HAS ESTABLISHED NINE HOSPITALS IN THE WEST among these people. In every place where a hospital is located the Christian influence is evident in the lives of the people. One Christian women in Peterboro has established a large hospital at her own expense.

MEMBERS OF THE WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF ONE DENOMINATION LAST YEAR SUPPORTED ELEVEN MISSION FIELDS. Men, largely foreigners, were visited in 33 logging camps where meetings were held and educational work carried on.

ONE DENOMINATION ADDED TO ITS LIST LAST YEAR 137 NEW HOME MISSION FIELDS. You only need to visit some of these mission stations in the West to see what a great work is being accomplished.

MISSION STATIONS HAVE BEEN OPENED IN THE HEART OF THE JEWISH SECTIONS OF TORONTO AND WINNIPEG. These are in charge of 10 home missionaries. They are reaching and helping thousands of Jews many of whom are illiterate and very poor.

MISSION SCHOOLS ARE BEING MAINTAINED IN ALL THE CHIEF INDIAN SETTLEMENTS OF CANADA AND EVEN IN THE NORTH AMONG THE ESKIMOES. The lives of the missionaries are hard and lonely. They are poorly paid. But their hearts are in the work. They look to us for support and financial assistance. Shall we not help them?

Protestant Churches are accomplishing a great work on the home mission fields of Canada. They ask for and expect to receive the sympathetic support of all true Canadians.

BIBLE STUDY ON

HOW ISRAEL CROSSED JORDAN.

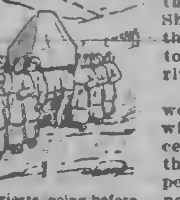
—Nov. 30.—Joshua 3:7-17.—

"Fear thou not; for I am with thee."
—Isaiah 41:10.

UNDER Divine direction, the hosts of Israel removed down to the Jordan three days before the time appointed for crossing. The Jordan, as usual at this season, was overflowing its banks. Ordinarily about ninety feet wide, it is supposed to have been about five hundred feet wide at this time. Although looking for an invasion, the Canaanites would not expect it at a time when the river was impassable and when bridges were little known.

The crossing day came. Joshua, by Divine instruction, directed the priests to bear the Ark of the Covenant and to go before the people to the river brink. As their feet touched the water, it began to recede and they to advance. Finally they stood in the middle of the bed of the Jordan, still bearing the Ark, representing the Divine promise under which they had left Egypt and were hoping for grand results.

The hosts of Israel, lining the banks of the Jordan for miles, crossed over from Moab to Canaan. Twelve large stones, representing the twelve tribes, were taken from the bed of the Jordan and piled on the shore for a monument of God's aid, while twelve stones from the shore were placed in the river for a similar memorial. Finally the priests followed the people to the Canaan shore. Shortly thereafter the waters began to return to the river bed.



Priests going before the people.

The fact that we may now know with considerable certainty just how this miracle was performed should not in the least detract from its value. With God nothing is a miracle, since He of His own Power is able to accomplish His will in every respect. Many things are miracles simply because we do not understand the Divine processes. We are miracles ourselves, fearfully and wonderfully made.

The account tells plainly that the heaping up of the waters was at Adam. This place has now been located with considerable certainty by Prof. Wright as situated seventeen miles above Jericho, on the Jordan. The waters there became in a heap, a lake, the Professor assures us, by reason of a landslide which choked the narrow passage in the river, where there were steep banks. History tells of a similar slide which took place in the same vicinity in A. D. 1267, damming up the Jordan for several hours and leaving the riven bed below quite dry, the waters draining off to the Dead Sea.

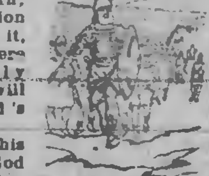
Prof. Wright says, "So striking is this conformity of the facts to the conditions indicated by the Biblical account, that geologists can find but little difficulty in believing the written record. At the same time the written record is so precise itself, and free from fantastic elements, that the literary critic cannot well consider it as anything but the original, unvarnished tale of an eye-witness."

The marvel of the story is that the Divine marching orders were so timed as to suit the conditions exactly.

St. Paul, in Hebrews 4.5-8, suggests that Israel's entrance into Canaan under Joshua's leadership typified the Church's entrance into the rest of faith and special privilege under the leadership of the antitypical Joshua, Jesus.

"We who believe do enter into rest"—in proportion to our exercise of faith. He who exercises much faith may have much rest, and may conquer and posses quietude. He who has less faith will have less rest and will only partially enter upon his privileges. The storming of the Canaanite cities typified the warfare of the New Creature against the weaknesses and depravities of the flesh, the desires of the flesh.

Those lacking faith entered not into Canaan, but died in the wilderness. So we read, "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh; but the Election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Only the faithful will constitute God's elect people.



The hosts of Israel passed over.

Throughout this Gospel Age, God has been making up Israel's defect by calling a similar class from all nations. Each one is called upon to exercise faith and to cross over Jordan, in the sense of beginning a new life of devotion to God, of warfare against sin and the entrenched weaknesses of his own flesh.

"There Remaineth a Rest."

All of God's consecrated people can testify that they have a rest, a peace, a joy, a blessing, which the world can neither give nor take away—and this in proportion to their loyalty and faithfulness. Yet God has in reserve something far better.

That Heavenly rest will be entered by the perfecting of the New Creature in the First Resurrecion. Their loyalty and faithfulness having been demonstratel in their fighting the good fight against the world, the flesh and the Adversary, the Lord promises them a glorious change, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye"—a share in His own resurrection to the perfection of the Divine nature and in association with Himself in the glorious Messianic Kingdom, which will bless mankind.

Castle For Shop Girls.

For many years the Count Greban de Pontourny, owner of a stately castle and large grounds in beautiful Touraine, had been charmed each day in Paris by the sight of thousands of pretty little midinettes, dressmakers' assistants, and shop girls whom the hour of noon liberates for their daily walk along the boulevards. Noticing how some of them, rosy and fresh at first, grew paler from their work in the crowded sewing rooms, he left when he died recently the castle and its park to the midinettes of Paris. He also provided sufficient money to maintain the castle with a perpetual house party of young girls resting and recruiting there. In future any midinette needing a holiday has only to apply and to show that she is free from infectious complaint to be received theer as a guest free of cost.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1912, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1912, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 8,367 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 427 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto.

When making mint sauce, use hot vinegar instead of cold.

Medium-sized vegetables are better than the large sizes, as they can be cooked and served without so much waste.

IN THE R. I. C.

Experiences In Erin's Isle as Told By an Irish Policeman.

"I never yet met an Irishman who had a good word to say for us," a stalwart member of the Royal Irish Constabulary stated recently. "Of course, as the guardians of law and order, we are respected by the public, but it's the respect of a bold urchin for the parish schoolmaster.

"Seventy years ago the great Thackeray noted our fine physique and military bearing. And I'm glad to say we still consider ourselves a soldierly lot of fellows. As a matter of fact, we are a military police force. We are armed with rifles and sword-bayonets, and we have regular ball-firing practices and competition for marksmanship. In war we'd make a fine army, for we're over ten thousand strong. A good proportion of our fellows were in South Africa.

"We have a fine life. We are not overworked like the Egnlish and Scotch police, because in the first place our numbers are so great.

"Rarely, if ever, are our barracks more than five miles apart, and the minimum number of constables in a station is four. I'm told that a big English village with a population of 3,000 boasts of a single policeman. Here in Ireland such a village would be called a town, and its chief public building a police barrack, capable of accommodating at least fifteen constables. Peelers and poverty are Ireland's two chief characteristics. Both abound everywhere. I believe our upkeeps costs about $7,500,000. Well, the lower ranks don't see much of it; $375 per annum is the utmost a constable dare hope for, and it's hard to bring up a family respectable on such a miserable salary. We begin at $4 per week.

"The officers have all the large salaries. Just fancy giving a young cadet, fresh from school, $625 to begin with! Lodging and horse allowances bring this youth's salary to well over $1,000 a year. Our officers are our one outstanding grievance.

"In most barracks the sergeant and his family 'live in,' so to speak. Rooms must be tidied before 8 a.m. every morning. If the officer inspects a sergeant's private bedroom after that hour and finds it upset, he makes a special report. I have known officers to inspect a bedroom when the sergeant's wife was ill. One officer went so far as to report a sergeant because a woman's garments were hung on a peg on the bedroom door."

Very Handy.

Closefist—It cost me over $5,000 to give Harry that course in industrial arts. Henlso—But he must be quite handy with his tools now? Closefist—Yes, and the first job he did was to put up awnings on the shady side of the house.

THE SPORTING WORLD

TWO CHAMPIONSHIPS WILL BE DECIDED TO-DAY

Tigers Are Favorites For Senior Title — Intermediate Final at Ottawa

Two Canadian football championships will be decided to-day, Hamilton Tigers, winners of the Big Four, will meet Parkdale, the O.R.F.U. champions, for the senior title at Hamilton, while Hamilton Y.M.C.A. plays Ottawa II.'s, champions of the Quebec Union, at Lansdowne Park, for the intermediate crown.

The first senior Canadian champions were Osgoode Hall, the O.R.F.U. winners, who defeated Montreal, the Quebec champions, by 45 to 5 in the final. The Legalites were noted for their running and passing plays, and were the pioneers of that style of play in Canada. Queen's won the following year only to lose by a single point (8 to 7) in 1894, to Ottawa College. University of Toronto's first win was in 1895 but they lost the following year to Ottawa College by 12 to 8. In 1897 Hamilton Tigers made their first appearance on the football horizon only to be defeated in the final by Ottawa College by 14 to 10. The following year Ottawa College beat University of Toronto at Rosedale by 7 to 3, and were themselves beaten by the Ottawa city team by 11 to 1. In 1899 no game was played. Ottawa City won in 1900 and 1902 and Ottawa College in 1901, or 1904, but in 1905 Casey Baldwin's Varsity team beat Ottawa at Rosedale by 11 to 9, after Hamilton had declined to play the Rough Riders in Ottawa.

Hamilton's first championship was won in 1906 when McGill went down before the Tigers by 29 to 6. In 1907 Montreal captured the honors, and in 1908 Hamilton beat Varsity in the final by 21 to 17.

University of Toronto won the honors in 1909, '10 and '11 and last year Alerts, of Hamilton, trimmed the Argonauts by 11 to 4 in the deciding game.

Forty-Fives League

There is some talk about organizing an Inter-Catholic Society Forty-Fives League. During the past few months several games have been played between teams representing societies and if a league was formed and a schedule arranged to begin shortly after the New Year many pleasant and sociable evenings could be spent. St. Peter's T.A.S., Sacred Heart T.A.S., Knights of Columbus, A. O. H., Catholic Order of Foresters, St. Peter's and Sacred Heart C. M. B. A. could be represented.

Out For a Ride.

There has been a good deal of quiet laughter in military circles in Ottawa over an episode affecting two prominent colonels of the capital. A non-commissioned officer of the P.L.D.G. was accidentally killed at the Rockliffe Ranges two or three weeks ago. It was decided to give him a military funeral, and there was a splendid turnout of the Ottawa units, the 43rd Regiment band heading the cortege. On the same day a prominent fraternalist was being buried. The two colonels, driving to attend the funeral of the military man, met the funeral of the Oddfellow, and without noting particularly that there were no military men in the procession, the driver was ordered to fall into line. They formed part of the cortege as far as the Protestant Hospital, and then drove to their respective offices. Great was their surprise to learn that the military funeral had followed along half an hour later. This impelled another officer of poetic tendencies to send to them the following limerick:

There was a young man named Clyde,
Who was once at a funeral espied,
When asked "Who was dead," he
smilingly said,
"I don't know; I just came for the ride." —Saturday Night.

TRICKS OF THE MOVIES

HOW FILM PRODUCERS GET STRANGE EFFECTS.

Trick Moving Pictures Are Mostly Made With a Stop Camera Which Allows Dummies To Be Substituted For Live Actors at the Critical Moment — Method of Making Furniture Move.

The stop camera is the medium by which a great many clever trick films are taken. First of all, a film consists of a series of still photographs called frames, each about half an inch in depth, which are both photographed and thrown upon the screen at a normal speed of sixteen per second. The stop camera, however, is so arranged that one single frame of the film may be exposed, the camera stopped, and alterations made, only the effects of which are filmed.

A man is knocked down and apparently run over by a steam roller, but as soon as it is off him he rises and walks away, full of life. This is how such a picture is taken. The stop camera films the man being knocked down by the steam roller, the knocking down part being an acrobatic feat, and then the camera is stopped, the real man slips out of "the lines," a dummy is substituted, the camera gets going again, but the film shows no break. When the steam roller has passed over the dummy the camera is stopped, the dummy removed, and the real man lies down in its place, afterwards to jump up in a very lifelike manner.

Another variety of trick film that has long mystified picture-goers is that of the bricklayer who falls from the top of a sky-scraper into the street below, apparently without being any worse for it. His legs, arms, and head scattered on the pavement mysteriously reassemble, allowing the bricklayer to get up and walk away. Exactly the same procedure is used; the top of the sky-scraper usually being erected in the studio and backed up by cleverly-painted scenery. The camera records the man's fall up to a certain point, and then stops, whilst the man is safely caught in a net hidden below. The next scene is in the street and shows the dummy crashing to the ground, the parts detaching themselves on concussion. The reassembling is done by means of invisible wires; then the camera is stopped, and the real man substituted—and one leans back and says, "Marvellous! How on earth is it done?"

The dummy is used in numerous tricks. The villain who perishes in the flames possesses only a straw heart beneath his waistcoat; the Christian martyr, being composed of highly indigestible material, affords little satisfaction to the wild beast devouring him.

We have all seen the furniture behave as if influenced by hidden machinery and waltz round the room. This kind of film takes many days to prepare, the objects having to be moved ever so slightly between each photograph, so that a film which takes but five or ten minutes to show may have been weeks in the making. The flowers which mysteriously arrange themselves are also controlled by threads.

Many producers are fond of showing a man jumping from a river to a bridge several hundred feet above. To obtain this effect the actor is filmed dropping from the bridge in the ordinary way, but that portion of the film depicting his falling is reversed, thus giving the bizarre effect described.

"Speedomania" is put to shame by some of the folk on the film, who simply fly through space. The chase picture, where a dozen promiscuous persons, intent upon revenge, chase the culprit at ever-increasing speed round a tree, is the most commonly known of these. Everything is filmed in the ordinary way, but when the film is being joined up every other photograph is cut out, so that the action becomes twice as quick. The operator adds to the fun by projecting at considerably above the sixteen per second.

Such extraordinary phenomena as naval battles, in which men-o'-war are blown up, bridges collapse, trains are driven over into the river, etc., are generally done in miniature in the studio, the camera being brought right close up to give things life-size appearance, the "sea" being a specially prepared tank placed upon the studio table.

Occasionally one sees motor cars climb up bare walls — a seemingly impossible feat. The wall is a piece of painted scenery laid upon the studio floor. The car drives over it, whilst the camera is placed up above. When the film is in its natural position it appears as if the car were running up a perfectly perpendicular wall. The vision effect requires very careful handling, and is done by means of a double exposure. The primary scene is filmed first. Then, with the exception of one corner of the scene, where those appearing in "vision" have to play their part, everything is draped in black. The same film is put through again, thus giving it a double exposure. Special preparations in development is responsible for the transparency of the "vision."

Better Quality Wanted.

Little Elsie, given her first glass of mineral water, made a very wry face over it.

"It tastes that way, dear, because it's charged," said her mother.

"I guess, mamma," said Elsie, pushing it aside, "I'll just have some of the kind you've paid for."

The Doctor at Sea.

A veteran naval surgeon, speaking of the odd things that crop out in the service, said that one of the younger medical cranks in the navy discovered much virtue in sea water, and, no matter what disease came on, his first action was to throw down the patient's throat a large dose of the nauseating liquid. The crew soon learned to hate him thoroughly. In process of time he fell overboard in a choppy sea, and a great bustle ensued. In the midst of it the captain came up and anxiously inquired the cause. "Oh, nothing, sir," replied a tar, "only the doctor has fell into his medicine chest."—London Telegraph

Earliest Hunger Strike.

What was the date of the earliest hunger strike? In the second or third century of this era a Greek student wrote: "Theon to his father Theon, greeting. It was a fine thing of you not to take me with you to Alexandria. * * * Send me a lyre, I implore you. If you don't I won't eat; I won't drink. There, now!"

NAMED BY MISTAKE.

That Is What Happened to Three of Vermont's Towns.

It is not often that a town is named by mistake, but about 150 years ago this thing happened—not to one town, but to three towns in Vermont. At that time a grant of land was made by New Hampshire to some Connecticut settlers. This tract then, as now, was divided into three townships—Burlington, on the hillside of Lake Champlain; Colchester, just north, and Williston, east. The three towns were chartered on the same day, and it was at this time that the names were mixed.

The Burling family took up their land in the north section (Colchester), and it seems to be true that their name was to have been given the town, so that it should have been called Burlington. Other settlers took up the eastern portion (Williston), and the rest remained in the part by the lake (Burlington). Among these last was the Willis family, and there is evidence that they expected to call the city Williston. However, there was so much confusion in the entering of the records that the town where the Burlings settled was called Colchester, the town of the Willis family was named Burlington, while the town to the east was called Williston. And so they have remained to this day.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Kiev Cannot Borrow Money.

ODESSA, Nov. 29.—The Mayor of Kiev, with two members of the Kiev municipality, has returned from England and announces the failure of his attempt to float a municipal loan of £575,000 in London. The mayor informed the representatives of the "Kievskoe Mysel" that his mission failed owing to the evil repute into which Kiev has fallen on account of the trial of the Beiliss "ritual murder" charge.

PURIFIED HIS BLOOD

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Healed Mr. Wilson's Sores

When the sewers of the body—bowels, kidneys and skin ducts—get clogged up, the blood quickly becomes impure and frequently sores break out over the body. The way to heal them, as Mr. Richard Wilson, who lives near London, Ont., found, is to purify the blood. He writes:

"For some time I had been in a low, depressed condition. My appetite left me and I soon began to suffer from indigestion. Quite a number of small sores and blotches formed all over my skin. I tried medicine for the blood and used many kinds of ointments, but without satisfactory results. What was wanted was a thorough cleansing of the blood, and I looked about in vain for some medicine that would accomplish this.

At last Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills were brought to my notice, and they are one of the most wonderful medicines I have ever known. My blood was purified in a very short time, sores healed up, my indigestion vanished. They always have a place in my home and are looked upon as the family remedy."

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cleanse the system thoroughly. Sold by all dealers at 25c a box. 6

Every ship arriving from Britain is booked with British immigrants up to the end of the year and all through the winter a steady inpouring of British-born is to take place.

Figures up to the end of October show that 59,744 Britishers have arrived in Ontario since the beginning of the year, as compared with about 40,000 for the same period last year.

Most of those now arriving are the wives and children coming to join those who have made homes for them here.

Beaver Colony Found.

A colony of about twenty beavers has been found near the new Connaught rifle ranges, about 12 miles from Ottawa. The animals are building a dam in Constant Creek. Game Warden Loveday has taken steps to ensure that they will not be molested.

MRS. JEAN BLEWETT'S LECTURE POETESS AT NORMAL SCHOOL

Lecturer Speaks on the Women Writers of Canada and Gives Readings From Her Own Prose and Poetry

Mrs Jean Blewett, the well-known Canadian poetess, gave a lecture last evening at the Normal School on the women writers of Canada. She discussed their various characteristics and quoted from their works. She referred specially to Mrs. Elizabeth Valancey Crawford, a Peterborough poetess, who lived on Water street and for some years in Lakefield.

Mrs Blewett also gave readings from her own poetry and prose. "Dicks Wife," "The Workman and the Angel," and "Come out West." Mrs Blewett has a very musical voice and a very natural and pleasing manner. She kept the audience interested the whole evening.

In the interval Miss Lacy contributed a pianoforte solo.

Mrs Blewett is a typical Canadian lady who combines culture and grace with homely and even domestic virtues She is not a poet who lives aloof from the "daily round and the common task." being a wife and a mother she manages to merge the literary and the domestic life very happily and successfully.

Her writings are chiefly concerned with every day practical things, but she tries to lift these to a loftier atmosphere and put a halo about the head of even the workman. Peterborough does not always have the privilege of hearing a real live poetess which the Normal School enjoyed last evening.

THE ROOSTERS' SERENADE THE GUEST OF THE BAZAAR

A Laughable Incident Occurs When Mr. Rowell Begins His Address

The St. George's Church Bazaar entered upon its second day yesterday at the Armories. It was arranged that Mr. Rowell, the leader of the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature, should perform the opening ceremonies.

Mr. Rowell arrived from Toronto at eight o'clock last evening and was met at the station by E. A. Peck Esq, M.P.P., Ald. Gordon and other gentlemen. The party immediately proceeded to the Armories, where Mr. Rowell was received with a "fanfare" by the 57th Regiment Band, and then with "O' Canada" A good number of people had gathered when Mr. Rowell arrived. He had no sooner entered the building than he was besieged by a bunch of flower girls who succeeded in decorating the Liberal champion with a crimson button-hole.

Proceeding to the balcony, Mr. Rowell was introduced by the chairman, Mr. A. E. Peck, M.P.P, who said he felt honored at being asked to preside at this the second day of the bazaar and congratulated Rev. James Price, the incumbent of St. St. George's, upon securing such distinguished men to open his bazaar. Mr. Peck then committed a pun on that Reverend gentleman by saying that "you can get anything if you only have the Price." In introducing Mr. Rowell, the chairman said that though they were both members of the House, Mr. Rowell was a far more conspicuous member than himself.

Upon rising to open the Bazaar Mr. Rowell said that he occupied a seat on the left of the speaker while Mr. Peck was on the right and that the reason for his own conspicuousness was in the fact that he was one in twenty-four, whereas Mr. Peck was one in eighty-two, and that if he was to move over to the other side of the house he too would be more conspicuous. He said he was glad to come to Peterborough to open this Bazaar because it was in aid of a mission church among the people. Those who come over from the Motherland come to improve their material condition, but this was not the only thing in life. He was glad to assist in this work because it was part of our privilege to welcome the newcomers and make them feel that though they are in a strange land that they are not coming among strangers. The church was the one institution in the state that appeals to the highest in the people and we should be glad to share in the work of such a character. He wished the Bazaar every success and hoped the church would increase to the blessing of the whole community and to the city of Peterboro. During the leader of the Opposition's speech, the poultry stall cock crowed thrice, to the amusement of the speakers and the audience. Mr. Rowell said he was used to such irrelevant interruptions from the Government benches.

"THE GLAD EYE" COMPANY COMING

The company presenting "The Glad Eye" at the Princess, Montreal, which house is packed to suffocation at every performance, has come in for unqualified praise. It is described as the best all-round company that has ever been sent to this side. One of the principals, Douglas Greet, is especially mentioned. He is the typical English comedian ,refined, cool, and brightly spontaneous. He played the part of Gaston in England for two years, and was considered by many to be even better than the original Grossmith. He is certainly younger, a great benefit, and he has the greatest of futures before him. Others in the cast who need mention are Fred Meads, who was leading man with Fred Terry over here, Miss Mary Marlowe, and Miss Katie Yates, who, as the frothy "Ki-Ki" won all hearts by her bright rendering. "The Glad Eye" will twinkle with us shortly. 55

FRIEDHIEM CONCERT AT KINGSTON

From the British Whig, Kingston, Tuesday, Nov. 25th.

Many pianists have visited Kingston who have laid more or less claim to great distinction by reason of their fame yet it could certainly be questioned whether any artist who has performed in this city has ever more completely merited the eulogies that preceded his appearance than Arthur Friedheim, who, with Signor Agostino Caruso, charmed a very large audience in Grant Hall last night. It is little to be wondered at that the large audience insisted on more, and were rewarded repeatedly with delightfully played encores. Assuredly Freidheim is a pianist who will count in the annals of the generation. Signor Caruso has an admirable tenor voice, and it pleases chiefly on account of its wonderful expressive quality. He was recalled again and again. Peterborough will have the opportunity of hearing these great artists Tuesday evening, at the Conservatory Hall. Seats are now on sale at the J. M. Greene Music Co. 55

BIG PUBLIC RECEPTION FOR FORMAL OPENING

Cressman Co., Ltd., Have Completed the Remodelling of Their Store and Will Invite the Citizens to Examine the Many Changes

WILL FEATURE FURNITURE

On Thursday evening, December 4, the firm of Cressman Co., Ltd., will tender a public reception to the citizens of Peterborough to mark the formal opening of several new and extensive departments which have been made possible by the large addition built at the rear of the store during the past three or four months. All four floors will wear a festive appearance, and to the beauty of flowers, light and other decorations will be added the charm of a musical program by an orchestra specially engaged for the occasion.

The doors will be wide open, but business will be forgotten for the evening. Under the most pleasant surroundings, the citizens will be enabled to appreciate the vast strides the Cressman Company have made in establishing the largest departmental store in the district, and those who examine closely the various sections will surely be impressed with details that have been developed to assist the purchaser and to facilitate sales.

AN EXTENSIVE ADDITION.

The additions to the store are most noticeable on the two upper floors, which have been made the same depth as the ground floor. The whole building from top to bottom extends one hundred feet from the front entrance to the rear wall, in contrast to the old building which in the third and fourth stories was at least forty feet shorter. The end wall of the ground floor was substantially rebuilt and then carried up to the roof, affording an equal amount of space on each floor. In short the store has been increased by twenty-five per cent.

HOME FURNISHINGS DEPARTMENT.

This large addition has provided the necessary space for the Home Furnishings and Furniture Department, which will undoubtedly become one of the principal features of the Cressman store. Evidently this is the expectation of the company, for practically all of the third and a large section of the fourth floors have been devoted to this new business departure. A wide staircase extends from the third to the fourth story. O the latter there is the Bargain Annex and a store room. Then comes a wide expanse which has been given over to furniture of all kinds, from a kitchen cabinet to a chiffonier and similar pieces. They are arranged according to their utility. Dining room furniture, for instance, is at one side, and parlor goods are in another section.

Coming down to the third floor one finds a beautiful display of furniture of all kinds, not excluding Chippendale effects. Mahogany, and finely polished quartered oak please the eye, and the designs of chiffoniers, tables, parlor suites, dining room tables and chairs and all the regular lines that make up a well furnished home are particularly attractive.

One room has been allotted for the display of bedroom appointments and has been completely equipped with a wide range of goods.

OTHER GOODS SHOWN.

On this floor we have new departments and extensions; there is a big showing of rugs which have always received the careful attention of the firm. The linoleum and wall paper sections have prominent positions and considerable floor space has been provided for window hangings and goods of that nature.

The Cressman Company have opened up the Furniture Department with the intention of making it a success. Their stock has been carefully and widely selected. There is a splendid display of goods that will look well in the average home, and those who can afford it will find a wide range of furniture, rich in material and design. The slogan of this big, new department will be "Furnishings at Departmental Store Prices." Not only is the quality of the goods assured, but the price will be a particular feature.

Judging from the success already achieved by the Cressman Company, another evidence of which is found in their latest development, the new department will soon cut a wide swath in the growing business of the Cressman store.

READY-TO-WEAR SECTION.

The second floor is devoted to ready-to-wear goods. It is hardly necessary to mention the ladies' shoe section, the millinery and dressmaking department and for the big display of ready-to-wear goods. This is complete even to details and that is saying sufficient.

Along the west wall are the general offices and on the south side is a row of comfortable, well appointed fitting rooms wherein ladies may try on the articles which they intend to purchase.

An entirely new department is found on the main floor. That is Miss Wesley's section devoted to art needle work, fancy goods, fashions designs and similar lines in the trim show cases and neat arrangement of this department there is an atmosphere of the big stores of the city. The originality displayed in laying out and furnishing this section is much superior to many of the attempts found in the so-called big city stores.

Behind this department is another attractive section devoted to Christmas articles, and which will afterwards be given over to stationery. The information bureau and cash desk combined into a double-deck office makes it compact and economical of space on the main floor where it is most required.

MODERN BUSINESS IDEAS.

A striking feature of the Cressman store in its newest form is manner in which the various departments have been grouped. Patrons find everything practically at their elbow as the saying goes. This has probably been noticed in the above references to the store. The average purchaser may not appreciate the forethought and ingenuity which have evolved these modern methods, all of which are sales' assets, but the leisurely examination that will be made by the citizens on Thursday night next should emphasize to them that the Cressman Company have provided the city with a department store that is not only doing an immense business, but is also doing it according to the advanced ideas of modern business.

PREMIER BORDEN IS BACK TO HIS OFFICE TO-DAY

No Political Significance in His Visit to Washington

OTTAWA, Dec. 1.—The Premier and Mrs. Borden returned yesterday from the south. They were met by Col. Hughes and Hon. W. T. White. Mr. Borden was looking in the best of health, although he felt tired after spending three nights on the train.

He stated that his visit to Washington had no political significance whatever, but was simply social. He had been invited by Secretary Lane, who is a Nova Scotian, and he met Mr. Bryan and President Wilson. The Premier will be back at his office to-day.

Shot Friend and Self.

LEWISTON, Maine, Dec. 1.—Joseph Sanchons of Bangor, last night shot at his friend, John Roy, from an alley, then turned the revolver upon himself, dying almost instantly. Roy probably will die. Miss Marion Boisvert, niece of Roy, said last night that Sanchons told her yesterday he had a revolver with which he was going to kill someone. No reason for his act is known.

Sink-Hole Delays Traffic.

BROCKVILLE, Dec. 1.—Another sink-hole, presumably caused by quicksand, has been discovered on the new line of the Canadian Northern Railway near Chaffey's Locks. The hole is about twelve feet deep and will delay the running of trains which it was proposed to start this week between Toronto and Ottawa.

Murdered With Hatchet.

MUSKOGEE, Okla., Dec. 1.—A mysterious murderer, who chops victims to death with a hatchet, has made his appearance in this city and already has slain two aged business men, leaving no clue leading to the establishment of his identity.

B. F. Richardson, an elderly furniture dealer, was murdered in his place of business about dusk Thursday, and early Friday night C. S. Everett, a grocery man, was killed in his store, about five blocks from scene of the former crime.

WILL NOT SEE FATHER

Revivalist Evan Roberts Maintains the Most Absolute Seclusion.

LONDON, Dec. 1.—Evan Roberts he young Welshman, who sever years ago led one of the greatest religious revivals known in the principality, and who mysteriously disappeared from public view at the height of his fame and has since lived in absolute seclusion with Mr. and Mrs. Penlewis at Leicester, has at last broken silence about himself. Writing in a religious paper, he says that, like Paul, he is a bond servant of God, and can do nothing except as the spirit moves him. Throughout his seclusion Mr. Roberts has refused to see his aged father, his brothers or his nephew, or to hold any intercourse with them. On Saturday all of them traveled from Wales to Leicester to seek an interview with the recluse, but their pleadings were in vain.

For weeks past public interest in the revivalist's strange conduct has been keen, and in view of the possibility of trouble on the occasion of his relatives' visit on Saturday Mr Penlewis' house was guarded by half a dozen police. A crowd watched the arrival of the visitors, and sympathized with the old father as he was led away in tears after his son's refusal to see him, but there was no disturbance. Evan spends his life as a mystic. He writes a good deal in collaboration with Mrs. Penlewis, who is a well-known religious worker, and in the article in which he describes himself as a bond servant of God he deprecates the attacks made upon her, declaring that she is a veteran in heavenly things.

STEAMER LOST

The Freighter I. W. Nichols Goes Ashore in Lake Huron—Crew Safe.

ALPENA, Mich., Dec. 1.—The steamer I. W. Nicholls, of Cleveland, which grounded off North Point in Lake Huron last Wednesday night, broke in two during the fierce storm which swept that section of the lake Saturday night. She will probably be a total loss. The crew remained aboard until hope of saving the steamer was abandoned and life-savers rescued them shortly before midnight.

The boat was bound from Port Arthur to Buffalo with 175,000 bushels of flax.

An attempt probably will be made to save part of the cargo.

The steamer Gogebic, coal laden, which grounded here Saturday, was released yesterday. She was not damaged.

The storm on Lake Huron moderated considerably yesterday.

Free After Seven Years.

KINGSTON, Dec. 1.—Deportation Officer Peter Devlin took from Portsmouth Penitentiary the Mitchell brothers, who served seven years of a 12-year sentence for robbery and attempted murder on the high seas. The men were escorted to Brockville and then across the river to Morristown, where they took the train for Chicago.

The Mitchells, who are colored, were on an excursion steamer running out of Windsor, Ont., when they robbed a passenger and then tried to throw the victim overboard. Because of good conduct the prisoners were liberated after serving little more than half of their time.

Despatch Boat Wrecked.

OTTAWA, Dec. 1.—The Mary Sachs, the ship of the Stefansson expedition which despatches say has been wrecked in an ice jam, was a supply boat accompanying the Alaska, upon which the southern section of the scientific party traveled. While the loss of scientific instruments doubtless will interfere with their work, no apprehension is felt here for the safety of the men, either on the Sachs or the Alaska. The latter, it is believed, is better equipped for ice conditions and much less likely to be damaged.

Stefansson himself is on the Karluk in another direction altogether. The naval service department has received no advice of the mishap to the Sachs.

RADIUM FOR NATION

Public Should Control Precious Metal Says Soddy.

LONDON, Dec. 1.—Prof. Frederick Soddy, whose researches in radium specially qualify him to speak on the subject, voices the opinion of a large number of scientists in an article in the current issue of Nature, in which he recommends the British Government to lift the question of a national supply of radium out of the domain of private speculative enterprise and make it a matter of public concern.

Sir Alfred Pearce Gould, the famous specialist on cancer, sounded a similar note at the hospital board meeting. In urging the purchase of radium as a gilt-edged investment for hospital funds, he remarked that there was no more permanent way of investing money than in radium, as radium purchased now would be valuable to the end of time as far as they could now foretell.

QUEEN VICTORIA OF SPAIN, WHO IS SERIOUSLY ILL IN PARIS

KING AND QUEEN OF SPAIN

The plans of King Alfonso and Queen Victoria of Spain have been upset owing to the illness of the Queen, who is suffering from a severe attack of influenza. The King and Queen were to leave Paris for Vienna, but the doctors in attendance forbade the Queen to travel for a week. King Alfonso is considering whether to leave for Austria alone or to await the Queen's recovery.

CAPTURE OF TAMPICO IS MOMENTARILY EXPECTED

Constitutionalists Have All the Important Ports in the Republic, Except Vera Cruz, on the East and Salina Cruz on the West Coast—Huerta Still Has Private Funds, Say Friends.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 1.—The military situation throughout the country has shown no improvement in the past week, so far as the Government is concerned, and there are slight indications that much progress will be made the coming week. Steps have been taken to strengthen the garrison at Tampico, but there is known to be a greater force of rebels to the north and west. Whether this force will move finally toward the coast or advance toward Monterey is problematical. It is in a position to do either.

The fall of Tampico is momentarily expected. Not only have the rebels captured Mazatlan, on the Pacific, but it is believed that the Government has had official news of the fall of Guaymas, the other important Pacific port.

This would leave Vera Cruz on the Gulf side and Salina Cruz on the Pacific as the only important ports in the hands of the Government.

There is no definite news of Gen. Rubio Navarrete, the Federal commander, who failed to prevent the capture of Victoria, capital of the State of Tamaulipas, except a report that he ran into the centre of the converging rebel forces. It is believed that he and his entire command were captured.

The movement of rebels south of Saltillo toward San Luis Potosi continued yesterday, the rebels entering Cedral, on the branch railway leading to Matehuala, occupied and sacked by the rebels earlier in the year. Federal troops have been sent north from San Luis Potosi in an effort to check the movement, and brisk fighting has occurred many times in the last few days, but without holding back the rebels.

In the State of Zacatecas, to the west of San Luis Potosi, according to Government reports, some advantage has been gained by Huerta's troops, but the mobility of the rebels has gone far toward neutralizing the advances made by the Government.

Operations in Michoacan and other regions farther south have been about equalized as between the constitutionalists and the federals. The situation in the north, it is conceded, is practically dominated by the rebels, although the Government still expresses the hope of being able to recapture Juarez.

Huerta Not Yet Bankrupt.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 1.—The possible treatment of the Mexican question by President Wilson's coming message has aroused considerable interest among the Mexican Government officials, but there is a notable absence of alarm because of the deep-rooted conviction that neither intervention nor the supplying of arms and ammunition to the rebels will be recommended.

The continuation of the financial blockade, President Huerta will not regard as a vital blow to his administration, however enfeebling it may be. Anything short of these measures will be regarded with comparative complacency by Gen. Huerta, who is prepared to pursue a dogged course of resistance against his enemies, although he realizes it means indefinite warfare.

But his friends point out that although the Government may be bankrupt, the Provisional President is far from being without funds, and is not likely to be entirely without money so long as private institutions and corporations possess funds. They are of the opinion that the President will not fall, for the sake of what he considers right, to resort to forced loans. Indeed, persuasive methods have already been used, and in several cases have borne marked similarity to the forced loan system.

In the Mexican Republic there are many men rated as millionaires, and several large corporations whose properties might be available for prospective taxation. There are millions to be had for the taking, and Gen Huerta's admirers declare that he would be acting in accordance with justice and his duty to his country if he utilized this money for defence.

Tuberculosis Day Observed.

TORONTO, Dec. 1.—Yesterday was the date selected by the National Sanitarium Association for the appeal in the churches of Ontario for cooperation in the battle with the white plague. In Toronto the date was not favorable, as a number of special events had been arranged for celebration in leading churches; the most notable was that of the dedication of St. Paul's Anglican Church.

The statistics of the registrar-general's office, announced from the pulpits yesterday show that steady headway is being made against the tuberculosis scourge. The death rate has fallen over a third in twelve years despite the increase in population.

DR. FERNOW AGAIN

He Advocates a Fuller Survey of the Ontario Clay Belt.

COBALT, Dec. 1.—Speaking at the Canadian Club of Timiskaming at its dinner at New Liskeard Saturday night, Dr. B. E. Fernow, dean of the Faculty of Forestry of the University of Toronto, put forth a strong plea for better classification of soils before settlers were allowed to go on them. Speaking of the clay belt and his own report on it, he said: "I do not believe that any country, or any part of any country, can be permanently benefited by having it misrepresented for good or bad. There is so much favorable truth that can be told about the clay belt that it is not necessary to invite the pessimism which comes from disappointed settlers. Surely it is difficult to judge aright new conditions and presage the future of a newly-developed country. A certain optimism is always in place when opeing up such a country, but there are some adverse truths in any proposition that can be safely ascertained and must not be hid.

Dr. Fernow's conclusion was: "It is desirable to furnish the settler a land classification which will allow him to select the more easily manageable land, or, at least, to know what he may expect when he undertakes to farm the more difficult soils. With this variety of conditions is it wise to let a poor, somewhat ignorant farmer try his luck in locating? Could not disappointment and failure be reduced, and success, happiness and desirable development be increased by giving him at least pointers as to what is involved in his location?"

Dr. Fernow contended that it could easily be done by an expert instructing students who would be attached to survey parties going out to lay out townships.

NEW MANITOBA MINISTER HAS SWEEPING MAJORITY

Bye-Election In Kildonan and St. Andrew's For Provincial Legislature Results In a Plurality of 370 With Three Polls to Hear From—The Liberals Complain of Having Too Short Notice.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 1.—With three polls to hear from Hon. Mr. Montague, the new Provincial Minister of Public Works, has a lead of 370 in Kildonan and St. Andrew's bye-election, held Saturday. The figures: Montague 1,123; Bredin 753; majority, 370.

At the 1910 general elections the figures were as follows: Grain (Conservative), 1,131; Bredin (Liberal) 1,043; majority, 88.

At the last election the three missing polls of Fort Alexander, Bad Throat and Rabbit Point, cast a total vote of 64, and gave a Conservative majority of 18. This indicates that final figures, possible not available for several days, will add slightly to the Government majority.

The size of the majority is probably a surprise to both parties. Four polls — East Kildonan, Seven Oaks, Garson and Poplar Park—gave a Liberal majorities, and twelve gave Conservative majorities, there being nineteen altogether. Liberal headquarters attribute their showing to short notice and consequent difficulty in getting out the vote.

A statistical feature was the vote in St. Andrews, which in 1910 gave Grain 130, Bredin 81, and yesterday gave Montague 133 and Bredin 81.

RATES ENQUIRY GOES ON.

Sittings at Ottawa Expected To Last Until Thursday at Least.

OTTAWA, Dec. 1.—It has practically been decided that the western freight rates enquiry will end probably about next Thursday after being before the Railway Commission at irregular periods since February, 1912.

J. P. Muller, of Washington, D.C., the rate expert engaged by the Dominion Government in the case, may not be called again. He was cross-examined Saturday by F. H. Phippen, K.C., chief counsel for the C.N.R.

To-day, M. K. Cowan, K.C., counsel for the Province of Saskatchewan, will put Alex. Macdonald, of Winnipeg, on the stand to give evidence as to how a schedule of rates he (Macdonald) had compiled were drafted. Mr. Macdonald was a railroad man for several years, and his schedule is awaited with interest by both sides.

When the enquiry is concluded it will likely be a few months before judgment on the case is handed down, as there is a pile of documentary evidence to be gone through.

'TWAS STAGE MONEY.

Dutchman Smashed Window and Stole Bills But All For Nothing.

TORONTO, Dec. 1.—In the belief that about fifty "stage money" 100 dollar bills hanging in the window of Liggett's drug store, on Yonge street, were the real thing, Mike Stamaske, Hollander, just in from Amsterdam, and of no address, smashed the window with a huge wrench, seized as many as he could reach, and sped down Yonge street at four o'clock Saturday morning with his pockets crammed full of what he thought were real hundred dollar bills. He was later arrested at the corner of King and Bay.

The prisoner is nearly six feet in height, and weighs in the neighborhood of 200 pounds. William Foster, an hotel proprietor, whose weight is estimated at 90 pounds, saw the theft and started out in pursuit of the flying Dutchman. Down Yonge to King, street, along King to Church and south on Church to Colborne, along Colborne and Melinda and up Bay to the corner of King street, the chase continued.

According to a police officer, the little fellow outran the Hollander, and at every hundred yards or so sprang to the shoulders of the fleeing man, only to be shaken off. Undaunted he would pick himself up, catch him again and the same performance took place. Foster must have been thrown a dozen times before at the corner of King and Bay he took an exra big leap at the panting man, lighted on his shoulders, and the two went to the pavement together. Foster wound his legs round Stamaske, pinned his arms behind his back and commenced to yell.

Constable Perry, away over at the corner of York and King, heard the rumpus and came over on the run to find ninety-pound William Foster of London, England, seated on the broad back of Michael Stamaske of Amsterdam, Holland. The constable arrested Stemaske on a charge of shopbreaking.

No Hope For Leafield.

OTTAWA, Dec. 1.—All hope of the Leafield and her crew of twenty men is gone. It is certain that she foundered in the recent terrible storm, which swept the Great Lakes. A telegram received Saturday by the Marine Department from Captain O. Larin of the Government tug Arbitus, which was ordered out from Port Arthur to look for the missing vessel, reports that the Arbitus was out ten days. During four of those days the weather was so bad that the tug had to seek shelter at Eagle Harbor. All that was discovered was a black topmast nine feet long belonging probably to the Leafield.

CHIEF JUSTICE SAYS THE SIKHS CAN'T BE EXCLUDED

He Finds That East Indians Are British Citizens and Can Only be Debarred for Idocy Crime etc.

VANCOUVER, Dec. 1.—Chief Justice Hunter has given a sweeping decision condemning as illegal all the Federal orders-in-council which have hitherto kept Hindus out of British Columbia. The only ground on which a Hindu may now be excluded are those of idocy, disease, crime or mendicancy, merely grounds which apply against British-born citizens entering Canadian eastern ports. For instance, there is now nothing to prevent entire shiploads of Hindus entering British Columbia, and judging from the persistence with which they have for three years been pressing the question of their entry, these shiploads may not be slow in taking advantage of the chance to come.

The decision specifically is in favor of a Sikh priest named Bhagwan Singh. Three days ago the chief justice gave an oral judgment giving Bhagwan Singh his freedom on habeas corpus proceedings. On Saturday, Chief Justice Hunter added a written judgment which went further than his brief court pronouncement. If Saturday's decision is good in law, it is difficult at this distance to see how the new regulations can be made effective by the Government to keep the Hindus out without distinctly mentioning them in a manner that might give serious offence to their British citizenship.

As to the other order-in-council referring to natives or citizens coming by a continuous journey from India, and which had been previously declared ultra vires by Justice Morrison in the case of re Rahim, the learned chief justice concurs as the order-in-council refers to "natives or citizens," whereas the statute merely says "a native or naturalized citizen."

His lordship says he assumes the Legislature had some manifest intention when it amended the act in 1908 to insert the word "naturalized" to give it large classification. He holds the word "native" is to be used as an adjective qualifying the word "citizen."

NATURAL GAS

The Globe quotes from the Review and adds a little comment thus:

The Peterborough Review says: "Mr. Arthur Hawkes, in his his journal, The Canadian, draws attention to the fact that a Mr. John Hawkes (presumably a relative) of Saskatchewan has discovered an 'ocean of natural gas' under the south of that Province. The Hawkes family seems to be especially fortunate in this gas business. Arthur must have tapped an exclusive ocean of natural gas somewhere near Toronto, judging from this week's issue of his paper." The Hawkes brand of natural gas helped materially to elect the Review's candidate in Peterborough in 1911. Why so ungrateful?

It is well known that Mr. Hawkes labors under the delusion that he has a heavy mortgage on the present Government and that the interest is long over-due. Mr. Hawkes in 1911 was a free-lance politician as he is to-day. No one engaged him to come to Peterborough, at least the Conservative candidate did not, nor did the candidate attend Mr. Hawkes' meetings. He came on his own as he is to-day.

Mr. Hawkes claimed to have influenced the "British-born" against Reciprocity, as if any British-born Canadian needed any urging in that direction.

LIFE ON THE STARS

The late Dr. Russel Wallace was one of those who maintained that all the probabilities are against life in any such form as we know it here existing on any other planet: "Regarding from a purely naturalistic point of view (he once said) it is only by the merest chance that man ever came into existence at all on the globe, and the probability of the particular combination of circumstances necessary to produce and sustain the miracle of life obtaining on another planet is so remote as to be practically non-existent. Indeed, we know for a fact that such conditions do not prevail in the bodies, other than the earth, which constitute our solar system, and analogy suggests that they do not exist in any other star or planet."

Sir Oliver Lodge appears to share Dr. Wallace's view as to the uninhabitability of any other planet of the Solar System, but he has said it is "absurd" to suppose intelligent beings are not to be found on any other lump of matter in space.

On another occasion Dr. Wallace was asked if we are "likely to get from 'spiritualism' proof of the existence of the soul and the persistence of consciousness beyond the grave?" Mr. Wallace made answer:

"I hold that those two points are already established. It is only because the scientific investigations of spiritualists are confounded in the popular mind with the chicanery and impostures of a few charlatans that the undiscriminating world has not studied the literature of spiritualism. A study of that literature an honest and unbiased examination of spiritual investigations, would prove to the world that the soul of man is a reality, and that death is not the abrupt unreasoning end of consciousness."

To the further question, "Why was science, speaking generally, antagonistic to the spiritual theory?" Dr. Wallace said: "Science has not always proved itself a discerner of truth. Science has had its bulls of excommunication for the righteous, as well as Mother Church."—Westminster Gazette.

EDITORIAL NOTES

"The most conspicuous feature of the well-attended annual meeting of the Reform Association," says the Globe, "was the optimism everywhere apparent." This somehow reminds us of a story we heard somewhere about a "cheerful idiot."

If East Middlesex was a "moral" victory, what is an immoral victory?

A moral victory is Conservative victory with a moral in it.

Every day should be Tuberculosis Day, says the Mail and Empire—Ugh! What, always in pursuit of microbes?

Thirty-three local preachers have got licenses—more work for Mr. Rowell.

At the instalation of the new President of the Chinese Republic the deputies were ordered to wear top-hats and frock coats. Many of them kept their native costumes underneath or appeared in a shirt without a collar or with a collar tacked on to their Oriental vests. These Celestials are only innocent children after all, playing at western politics.

The Dominion Government, through the Postmaster-General, have now completed arrangements regarding the winter mail steamship sailings for Canadian ports. There will be a sailing from Liverpool every Saturday afternoon direct for Halifax, which will be operated by the Allan Line and the C.P.R. on alternate Saturdays. On Wednesdays there will be a weekly sailing for St. John direct, operated by the Allan Line in conjunction the C.N.R. steamships from Liverpool and Bristol respectively. The first departure by this service was the R.M.S. "Royal Edward" from Bristol on November 19, followed by our R.M.S. "Tunisian" from Liverpool on the following Wednesday, November 26." It is believed that the two Royal steamers would make Halifax and not St. John their terminal ports.

United States Capital In Canada.

An estimate of the amount of United States capital invested in Canada is being prepared. Preliminary information and statistics show that the amount is now at least $599,000,000, as compared with $279,000,000 in 1909 and $417,000,000 in 1911.

Over $150,000,00 is in the shape of branch factories and warehouses of United States manufacturers, while nearly $124,00,000 have been invested by the United States in Canadian Government, municipal and industrial bonds since 1905. United States life and fire insurance companies have $67,000,000 invested in the Dominion, while over $130,000,000 is invested in British Columbia mills, timber and mines. Investments in the prairie provinces are in lands, mines, packing plants, factories and warehouses.

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF
BAYARD VEILLER

"I'll do my best," the unhappy man replied.

A minute later Dick, in charge of an officer, was brought into the room. He was pale, a little disheveled from his hours in a cell.

The father went forward quickly and caught Dick's hands in a mighty grip.

"My boy!" he murmured huskily. Then he made a great effort and controlled his emotion to some extent. "The inspector tells me," he went on, "that you've refused to talk—to answer his questions.

"That wasn't wise under the circumstances," the father remonstrated hurriedly. "However, now, Demarest and I are here to protect your interests, so that you can talk freely. Now, Dick, tell us! Who killed that man? We must know. Tell me."

Demarest went a step toward the young man. "Dick, I don't want to frighten you, but your position is really dangerous. Your only chance is to speak with perfect frankness. I pledge you my word I'm telling the truth. Dick, my boy, I want you to forget that I'm the district attorney and remember only that I'm an old friend of yours and of your father's who is trying very hard to help you. Surely you can trust me. Now, Dick, tell me: Who shot Griggs?"

"I shot Griggs," said the young man.

Demarest realized that his plea had failed, but he made an effort to take the admission at its face value.

"Why?" he demanded.

"Because I thought he was a burglar."

"Oh, I see!" he said, in a tone of conviction. "Now, let's go back a little. Burke says you told him last night that you had persuaded your wife to come over to the house and join you there. Is that right?"

"Yes."

"Now, tell me, Dick, just what did happen, won't you?"

There was no reply, and, after a little interval, the lawyer resumed his questioning.

"Did this burglar come into the room?"

Dick nodded an assent.

"And he attacked you?"

There came another nod of affirmation.

"And there was a struggle?"

"Yes."

"And you shot him?"

"Yes."

"Then, where did you get the revolver?"

Dick started to answer without thought:

"Why, I grabbed it"— Then the significance of this crashed on his consciousness, and he checked the words trembling on his lips. "So," he said with swift hostility in his voice, "so, you're trying to trap me, too! You! And you talk of friendship. I want none of such friendship."

But Burke would be no longer restrained.

"You don't want to take us for fools, young man," he said, and his big tones rumbled harshly through the room. "If you shot Griggs in mistake for a burglar why did you try to hide the fact? Why did you pretend to me that you and your wife were alone in the room when you had that there with you, eh? Why didn't you call for help? Why didn't you call for the police as any honest man would naturally under such circumstances?"

"We're trying to save you," the father pleaded tremulously.

Burke persisted in his vehement system of attack. Now, he again brought out the weapon that had done Eddie Griggs to death.

"Where'd you get this gun?" he shouted.

"I won't talk any more," Dick answered simply. "I must see my wife first." His voice became more aggressive. "I want to know what you've done to her."

"Where'd you get this gun?"

"Did she kill Griggs?" Burke questioned roughly.

Dick was startled out of his calm.

"No, no!" he cried, desperately.

"Then, who did?" Burke demanded sharply. "Who did?"

"I won't say any more until I've talked with a lawyer whom I can trust." He shot a vindictive glance toward Demarest.

The father intervened with a piteous eagerness.

"Dick, if you know who killed this man you must speak to protect yourself."

The face of the young man softened as he met his father's beseeching eyes.

"I'm sorry, dad," he said, very gently. "But I—well, I can't!"

Again, Burke interposed.

"I'm going to give him a little more time to think things over. Perhaps he'll get to understand the importance of what we've been saying pretty soon."

He pressed the button on his desk, and, as the doorman appeared, addressed that functionary.

"Dan, have one of the men take him back. You wait outside."

Dick, however, did not move. His voice came with a note of determination.

"I want to know about my wife. Where is she?"

Burke disregarded the question as completely as if it had not been uttered and went on speaking to the doorman, with a suggestion in his words that was effective.

"He's not to speak to any one, you understand." Then he condescended to give his attention to the prisoner. "You'll know all about your wife, young man, when you make up your mind to tell me the truth."

Dick turned and followed his custodian out of the office in silence.

As the doorman reappeared Burke gave his order, "Dan, have the Turner woman brought up."

The inspector next called his stenographer and gave explicit directions. At the back of the room, behind the desk, were three large windows, which opened on a corridor, and across this was a tier of cells. The stenographer was to take his seat in this corridor, just outside one of the windows. Over the windows the shades were drawn, so that he would remain invisible to any one within the office while yet easily able to overhear every word spoken in the room.

When he had completed his instructions to the stenographer Burke turned to Gilder and Demarest.

"Now, this time," he said energetically, "I'll be the one to do the talking. And get this: Whatever you hear me say don't you be surprised. Remember, we're dealing with crooks, and when you're dealing with crooks you have to use crooked ways."

Then the door opened, and Mary Turner entered. She paid absolutely no attention to the other two in the room, but went straight to the desk and there halted, gazing with her softly penetrant eyes of deepest violet into the face of the inspector.

Under that intent scrutiny Burke felt a challenge and set himself to match craft with craft. His large voice was modulated to kindliness as he spoke in a casual manner.

"You ought to know, since you have arrested him."

"I just sent for you to tell you that you're free."

"Then, I can go?"

"Sure, you can go."

Without any delay, yet without any haste, Mary glanced toward Gilder and Demarest, who were watching the scene closely. Then, she went toward the outer door of the office.

Burke waited until she had nearly reached the door before he shot his bolt.

HEALEY FALLS IS NO MORE

Passes With Construction Work on Trent Canal

20000 HORSE POWER

Warkworth, Dec. 1.—Healey Falls, a picturesque fall of water in the northern part of Northumberland county, has been much changed. All summer this point on the Trent Canal system has been a hive of industry. A few days ago all the stop logs were put in and the holes in the dam at the fall closed and filled with concrete, changing the course of the river towards the new locks and power house. The basin between the old bridge and the new dam is filling up and the old rapids are gone, as is also the falls. Government work in connection with the Trent canal has made it possible it is stated, to generate 20,000 horse-power of electrical energy at this point. The Seymour Power Co. has built a large power house and installed two units. About 10,000 horse-power. It is said, can at present be transmitted, which is already contracted for, and more is needed to supply the demand.

F. Campbell, District Representative McRae of Norwood, and A. T. Brown of Peterboro. The president, W. B. Anderson presided.

It was also decided to hold a spring meeting some time in April.

Mr. Edward Langley the veteran chorister, gave a fine rendering of the tenor solo "Comfort Ye My People" from Handel's Messiah, at the morning service.

Gospel Hall

Evangelists Benner and Irving conducted services in Gospel Hall yesterday and it is safe to say that never before have there been such meetings there. Both speakers were much enjoyed and spoke with power much blessing resulting. They will continue every night this week.

Wireless telegraph outfits will be carried by the sledge parties of the Amundsen expedition, soon to start on an Arctic exploration trip.

THE MAYORALTY

The retirement of Mayor Bradburn from the civic chair at the end of the year is assured by his statement to the newspapers. It was hoped that he would consent to a nomination for a third term, and that his familiarity with the several enterprises coming forward would be at the services of the city.

On whom will the mantle of office fall? So far two candidates are in the field. Both are old campaigners, so to speak. Both have had civic experience.

Alderman W. Buller has been a member of the City Council for many years. He has filled the position of chairman of important committees, and done well. He is thoroughly familiar with every detail of civic routine, with the needs of the city, with what is required, and a capable grasp of what is in the future.

When a citizen enters the Council with a view of serving his fellow-citizens he offers a service to the public that is worthy of recognition. If he do well that recognition is forthcoming in re-election for so many terms as he be a candidate. Should he desire to rise to the position of Mayor, that is a laudable ambition that any man may have and strive to gratify. In the case of a citizen who has served as alderman (won his spurs, so to speak) there is every reason that that wish should be approved. It is the only tangible recognition the citizens at large can put forward. It is plainly due Alderman Buller that he be supported in his candidature, for if public service is not to be recognized, then public service, faithfully performed, will lack its reward. Alderman Buller should be returned.

Alderman Gillespie, while not having the years of service as the other candidate, comes forward as a good nominee. He has done good work. He has qualities that make for a good civic ruler, so good that little may be urged against his candidature. If Alderman Buller were not in the field, then Alderman Gillespie would be fine. He is safe and sane and largely respected. But if the public is to proffer its reward to a most deserving member of the Council and elect Alderman Buller Mayor, then Alderman Gillespie will take it that he is not turned down for himself, but because the ratepayers "love not Rome the less, but Caesar more."

BRASS TABLET WAS UNVEILED

At St. John's Church in Memory of Late Dr. Boucher

At the conclusion of yesterday morning's service at St. John's Church, a handsome brass tablet, erected to the memory of the late Dr. R. P. Boucher, was unveiled by the Rev. Canon Davidson, in the presence of the immediate friends of the deceased. Among those present were Mrs. Boucher, of Montreal; R. B. Boucher, of Vancouver, B.C., J. H. Burnham, M.P., and John Bell, Esq.

The following text is beautifully inscolled on the tablet: "Surely, I know it be well with them that fear God."

All the male guests at a wedding at Rollesby, near Great Yarmoth, wore white flannels as a tribute to the sporting proclivities of the bride's family.

TRIUMPHS OF THE SOIL IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Demonstration Car is at the G.T.R Station Till Nine O'clock To-night --- A Visit is Worth While

The demonstration car commonly known as the "agricultural exhibition on wheels," now touring Ontario, has arrived in the city from Unionville, and during its stay, which will last till nine o'clock to-night, it will be situated in front of the Grand Trunk station. This car started from Englehart on October 1st, under the direction of the Colonization Department of the Ontario Government. It carries products from five districts, namely: Algoma, Rainy River, Sudbury, Timiskaming and Kenora, and its main object is to give publicity to the great clay belt.

A representative of the Review visited the car this morning. It was a visit worth while, and one that should be taken by any one who feels sceptical concerning the possibilities of New Ontario as an agricultural country. The car is in the charge of Mr. George Palmer of the Colonization Department of the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway. He is ably assisted by Mr. C. A. Young, of St. Joseph Island, Algoma.

The great clay belt includes some 24,000,000 acres of rich fertile soil, free from stone and perfectly level. It is the object of the Ontario Government to get settlers into this great section of the province.

50 CENTS AN ACRE.

The rules for settling this land are as follows: A settler pays 50 cents an acre for 160 acres, $20 of which is paid down, and the rest is in annual payments. The settler has to live on the land six months for three years, build a habitable house and clear and cultivate 16 acres.

SOME OF THE YIELDS.

Timiskaming district is in the heart of this clay belt, and perhaps it would be well to quote some of the grains and their yields. Fall wheat averages 64 lbs. to the bushel and 40 to 60 bushels to the acre. One farmer sold $3,000 worth of timothy seed off 50 acres. Barley goes 52 lbs. to the bushel, and 40 to 45 bushels to the acre.

Oats average 40 lbs. to the bushel, and 75 to 80 bushels to the acre.

The exhibit of vegetables includes turnips, mangels, onions, potatoes and pumpkins, and all bear testimony of the fertility of New Ontario soil.

The car will visit Tweed to-morrow.

PETERBORO HEALTH ASSOCIATION

WHAT TUBERCULOSIS DOES

Killed 2250 persons last year in Ontario alone, one every 4 hours.

Kills one-tenth to one-seventh of all our people.

Kills one-third of all who die between the ages of 18 and 45.

HOW PREVENTED

By teaching the patient to destroy his sputum.

By teaching people not to sleep live or work in dark or badly ventilated rooms.

By teaching the consumptive how not to infect his family or neighbors.

By discovering the disease in its early stages and curing the patient. This removes a source of infection to others.

By educating the community to keep their bodies in such a physical condition as to enable them to resist the germs.

By advocating fresh air, outdoor life, sunshine, no over work, wholesome food and temperate habits.

HOW YOU CAN HELP

Churches— By informing themselves on the actual tuberculosis situation in their respective districts by making adequate provisions for literature and educating the people indigent members; by distributing about tuberculosis and by co-operating definitely with all existing agencies working for the prevention of tuberculosis.

Teachers— By instructing pupils as to the nature, prevention and cure of the disease, teaching children simple rules of health, how to breathe deeply and keeping the class rooms ventilated.

Parents— By keeping the home clean and well aired, teaching the children to sleep with their windows open eat good nourishing food.

WHERE TO OBSERVE THE LAWS OF HEALTH

Children— By keeping clean, by not putting anything in your mouths except food, by staying as much as possible in fresh air and sunshine.

WORKERS— By insisting on the working places being thoroughly ventilated by avoiding dust, dampness and darkness, by avoiding overwork and by demanding spittoons.

Everyone— By taking care of your own health, by stopping indiscriminate spitting, by joining in the movement to stamp out tuberculosis in your community.

MADE NEARLY $100

Fish Pond, Rest Room and Gypsy Booth Were Money Makers

One of the divisions of the St. George's Bazaar that was a marked success was the booth in charge of Mrs. Dunsford and Mrs. R. Turner. It included the fish pond, rest room and gipsy booth. The three netted $90.00, and the fish pond alone, which was in the capable hands of Mrs. Turner, netted $29.

The ladies and their assistants wish to thank all those who generously and kindly contributed to their booth, especially J. J. Turner and Sons, Grant and Thorpe, A. Comstock and Sons, Richard Hall and Son, Mr. Birmingham, of the Peterborough Hardware Co.; Mr. Higgins, Mr. R. O. Kingan, Mr. C. E. McClelland, Mr. D. Mulholland, and Jordan Bros and F Mason, florists; Mr. C. G. Graham, Mr. A. Murty and Warne Bros., jewellers.

A FINE OF $5 IN CASE OF ASSAULT

Two Women Had Argument With Disastrous Result

"There certainly was undue violence used," remarked Magistrate Dumble this morning, in imposing a fine of $5 on Mrs. Denis Sullivan, Dublin street, charged with assaulting her neighbor, Mrs. Mahaffey.

The evidence showed that there was certainly bad feeling between the parties concerned. During the row kicking, hair pulling, stone throwing, etc., took place. The defendant admitted losing her temper, but denied kicking or throwing stones at the complainant, who also claimed that the defendant had threatened to burn her out. From marks on the complainant's face it was evident that a few knocks had been received.

REV. R. G. PEEVER ON STEWARDSHIP

He Deprecates Bazaars as Means of Making Money

George street church was crowded last evening to hear Rev. R. G. Peever preach on "Stewardship." Many strangers being present, he said he was glad to see the gallery so full and hoped that those present who did not attend any place of worship would make their home at George street.

Mr. Peever in his sermon spoke of giving to church funds, and especially referred to the Laymen's Missionary Movement, which would canvas the members this week. He advocated the system of tithing as not only scriptural, but as a duty to oneself as well as to God and the Church.

He deprecated bazaars as a means of getting money for church purposes. He said the churches ought to put more confidence in God who said: "try Me and see if I will not open the windows of Heaven and pour out upon you a blessing that ye shall not be able to contain." The preacher quoted the words of Paul to the Church at Corinth, where he exhorted his followers to put away so much every week that "there be no gatherings, (bazaars) when I come."

SUNDAY CALL FOR THE FIREMEN

At 5.45 last evening the Fire Brigade was summoned to the residence of Mr. Hawley, 580 Downie street. An extension on an electric light had been wound around a water pipe. In some manner the wire came in contact with the pipe, and a short circuit was the result. The insulation was burned off the wires, causing considerable smoke, but there was no damage.

POLICE COURT

The case of a local butcher charged with a violation of the health regulations was enlarged at police court this morning till Thursday morning.

A young man charged with stealing goods from a store was sent to jail for thirty days. He said he was drunk at the time. He looked it.

Wm. Hampden was suffering from a weak spell, but he was fined $5 for drunkenness just the same.

Wm. Wright supposed he was drunk, and Magistrate Dumble made it certain by imposing a $5 fine.

Medium-sized vegetables are better than the large sizes, as they can be cooked and served without so much waste.

GILLESPIE
FOR MAYOR

To the Electors of the City of Peterboro

Ladies and Gentlemen— At the urgent solicitation of many of my business and personal friends, I have consented to become a candidate for the position of Mayor of your City, and respectfully solicit your votes and influence.

As in the past, I shall not make any rash promises to gain the vote of any elector, but, if elected, my attitude on every question will be to stand firm for the best interests of our Progressive City.

Having been interested in Peterborough all my life, and one of your aldermen for five years, I may fairly claim to be in close touch with every section and every interest of the municipality, and familiar with its needs and ambitions.

I believe that in all respects the will of the people should prevail; that a vigorous but economical administration is the best administration, and that if your Chief Magistrate is able to devote a fair proportion of his time to his civic duties, it will not be to your disadvantage. If he brings with him the experience and energy he displays in the conduct of a large and successful business of his own.

If my success in the Council during the past five years has in the main met with your approval, I shall esteem it an honour to have your further approval and support in the coming contest.

Yours respectfully,

G. A. GILLESPIE

ROARS OF LAUGHTER

Sir—Sir Wilfrid Laurier has abandoned the Farmer. He is now preaching the new gospel of Free Food or Cheap Food. This of course means

1. That food is cheaper in the United States than in Canada and that food-shipments to the United States are a mistake.
2. It means that the Home market is to be taken away from the Canadian farmer.
3. It means that he will take measures to prevent the West from shipping food away from our markets.

Is it any wonder that there are rumors of Liberal disintegration?

ORIGIN OF BLACKMAIL

The Term Was Born of Outlawry on the Scottish Border.

The etymology of the expression "blackmail" is historically interesting. It appears to have its origin on the Scottish border and dating from times when frequent political feuds between the then two kingdoms of the British islands tacitly justified a sort of perennial terrestrial buccaneering as between borderers of each realm.

Many of these were outlaws on both sides of the border. Their neighboring victims to save their cattle from being lifted sometimes compounded for safety by an annual payment as insurance to the bandits. This fee not only gave them immunity, but entailed them to protect them from rival freebooters. It was their "mail," or "protection." The "mail" coach was so named because it had its armed guard with loaded blunderbuss on the dickey

But the mail paid by border farmers was not for honest royal protection but for guardianship by thieves, and hence was "black" mail, the color of black being typical of what was nefarious, whether in art or in guardianship, while the guardian of this stamp was known as the "blackguard" of the district. The last named latter day term of reproach seems to have obtained its expression originally as here described.—London Field.

Marry and Part For a Year.

Among the many peculiar customs prevalent among the people of Central America is that of parting for one year after the marriage ceremony has been solemnized. This custom has prevailed among the Jarnos from time immemorial. There is no courtship allowed to be carried on between the parties prior to the wedding. When a man selects a woman he obtains the consent of the parents on both sides, and if this is given they are at once married. The reason, however, for their not living together as man and wife for one year after marriage is in order to permit of the parties visiting and staying with their respective friends in different parts of the country, which is a customary thing and occupies the time specified. Ninety-nine out of a hundred of these marriages turn out well

Ways of Burmese Beauties.

Instead of a coming out party as we know it, the Burmese girl's entrance into society begins when she has her ears pierced. As soon after this as she feels inclined she selects a husband and goes to live in a home of her own. The home is provided by the man, but it becomes his wife's as soon as they are married. All women, young and old, are addicted to the use of tobacco. The women seem to prefer the very large size black cigar. Often one meets a woman on the streets of a village with one of these huge cigars in her mouth and two or three more stuck in the holes of each ear.

The Cosmic Law.

There is neither waste nor economy in nature. Energy is as indestructible as matter—no trace of waste anywhere, no economy. Nature does not use a fraction more than necessary nor less. The two words "waste" and "economy" cannot apply to the stupendous cosmic law, the conservation of energy.—Edgar Lucien Larkin in New York American.

Thanksgiving.

Canada's first annual Thanksgiving was that proclaimed by the people of Halifax in 1763 for the conclusion of the peace that gave Canada to Great Britain. Throughout the colonies of British North America days of Thanksgiving were frequently proclaimed but these were on special occasions and not as an annual observance. The first Thanksgiving Day in Lower Canada was proclaimed on the 22nd of December, 1798, and observed on the 10th of January, 1799, "In signal victory over our enemy and for the manifold and inestimable blessings which our Kingdoms and Provinces have received and daily continue to receive." The first proclamation of a day of Thanksgiving in Upper Canada appears to be dated the 17th of M[illegible], 1816, and was observed on the 18th of June, 1816, for the end of the war between Great Britain and France. After Confederation the first proclamation was issued on the 1st of March, 1872, for the restoration of the health of the Prince of Wales. The first of the annual Thanksgiving Days, which are now observed, was proclaimed on the 9th of October, 1879, and observed on the 6th of November, 1879. Since that time proclamations have been issued every year.

DR. MARSH'S VALEDICTION AT SPRINGVILLE CHURCH

Large Congregation Exhorted to Press Forward — Pastor Thanks His People for Kindness of Loyalty

The Rev. Dr. Marsh, pastor of Springville Presbyterian Church, preached his farewell sermon yesterday morning. Dr. Marsh, who has ministered at Springville for the last seven years, recently received and accepted a call from Holstein, Ont.

That the people of Springville were loth to part with their pastor was evident from the extra large attendance at the farewell service. Dr. Marsh took for his text the words of St. Paul in Phillipian; "Forgetting those things which are behind, I press toward the mark."

He exhorted his congregation to stand together as a united people and to look forward. The sentiment of his address was the strong sentiment of "Onward Christian Soldiers, marching as to war." One leader dropped out, but the work was the Lord's and must go forward.

He complimented the congregation upon their Christian character, stability and liberality at home and abroad. For the kindly way in which they had always treated his wife and family and for their loyalty to himself. The thought of his congregation was ever turned toward him in sympathy and co-operation. He said no congregation could have done more then they have done for him during the seven years of his sojourn amongst them. The Young People's Societies had increased and all the branches of the work had advanced.

Dr. Marsh thanked one and all, young and old for their generous and Christian loyalty, and while he was sorry to depart he called upon them to obey the injunction of St. Paul and looking forward press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus. Many were the expressions of regret at the close of the service and many were moved to tears at the preacher's final message.

A farewell concert under the auspices of the Springville Presbyterian church choir will be held this evening (Monday) at 7 o'clock, given in honor of John Marsh as retiring organist, and to bid adieu to Rev. Dr. Marsh and family. A specially selected program of music will be rendered, the following artists taking part; Professor and Mrs. Renwick, Mr. and Mrs. F. Miles; Instrumental selections will be given by Miss Jessie Logan, violinist. An orchestra will add to the pleasure of the occasion. Addresses by local ministers and others

ST. GEORGE'S ANGLICAN CHURCH FREE OF DEBT

"We shall have enough to clear the debt on our church. How much over I cannot say."

This statement Rev. Jas. Price made to-day, when asked by the Review, as to the finances of the bazaar held for three days of last week in the armories.

His Honor Judge Huycke made the opening address at the bazaar on Saturday evening.

The ladies at the booths report very satisfactory returns and they join with the various committees in thanking the public for the patronage given.

DO NOT PLACE CHRISTMAS STAMPS ON FACE OF LETTERS

Post Office Regulations Will not Allow the Practice This Season

Do not place Christmas stamps on the face of envelopes nor on other mail matter on the side the address is written and also used for the official stamp.

The Post Office Department has sent out circulars to the local postmasters and it is explicitly stated that the practice in past Christmas seasons will not be permitted this season.

It is permissable to use the stamps on the back of letters and other mail matter.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS ORGANIZED

W. J. Hopwood is President and Frank Whitehouse is Secretary

Nearly forty commercial men met on Saturday evening for the purpose of organizing a Commercial Travellers' Association for the district of Peterborough. There are at present over 250 men residing in this city who are commercial travellers. For sometime Mr. Frank Whitehouse has had the matter under consideration and after consultation with several other men he called the meeting.

Mr. W. J. Hopwood opened the meeting with a short address, while Mr. Adam Hall was appointed chairman and Mr. Frank Whitehouse, secretary pro-tem.

Mr. Hopwood expressed himself as greatly in favor of the formation of a local association. He referred to the better hotel accommodation, reduction in freight, and a few other matters which was derived from the association being organized. The association also brings about friendship among the commercial men. Mr. O'Brien mentioned the influence the association would probably have on the freight charges.

The association would also have an influence on the Board of Trade, was the opinion of Mr. B. F. Ackerman. Mr. Ackerman also pointed out that there was a possibility of the C.N.R. coming to Peterborough. Mr. J. O. Cameron voiced the same opinion as the former. Mr. Firth also advocated the movement on foot. Ald. Duffus expressed his opinion of the Board of Trade as being practically a dead issue as it was not as flourishing an institution as it might be, and that the new association would be of great assistance to the Board of Trade.

It was decided to make the fee at the nominal rate of $1 for the present.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

Hon. President—Mr. Adam Hall.
President—Mr. W. J. Hopwood.
1st Vice-Pres.—Mr. W. J. O'Brien.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mr. J. W. Firth.
Sec.-Treas.—Mr. Frank Whitehouse
Ass't. Sec.-Treas.—Mr. M. Rosenburg.

The Advisory Board is composed of the following:

Messrs. Ackerman, Cameron, Cooper, Stapleton, Shields and McClennan.

ANOTHER HYDRO RADIAL.

Scheme For Road From Stratford to London Through St. Mary's.

ST. MARY'S, Dec. 1.—A scheme for a Hydro radial line from London to Stratford through St. Mary's is being formulated, and committees are now at work along the proposed routes. In St. Mary's several prominent citizens are taking the matter up with the Town Council, and it is expected that a vote of the people will be asked for on the question.

Eight-Year-Old by Mail.

NEW LEXINGTON, Ohio, Dec. 1. —When the mail arrived here yesterday morning postoffice employes were surprised to find in it an eight-year-old girl bearing a tag which had been placed on her by New York immigration officials, reading as follows: "This child, Julia Kohan, is going to her father, John Kohan, box 117, R.F.D., No. 4, New Lexington, Ohio."

After a breakfast supplied by the postmaster, the child was taken in care of a rural delivery carrier to the home of her father, who lives six miles south of here. The trip of 7,000 miles from Bavaria was made by her alone.

LAST BOATS SAIL.

In Rush of Grain Freighters Leaving Fort William, 25 Leave.

FORT WILLIAM, Ont., Dec. 1.—In the final rush to get on their way down the lakes before midnight and thus avoid the necessity of having their insurance extended, twenty-five freighters, carrying about eight million bushels of grain, cleared for the east Saturday. All week ships have been lying two, three and even four abreast at the docks awaiting their turn to slip under the spouts at the elevators, and the elevator men have been working anywhere from 14 to 20 hours a day to keep the streams of grain running into the holds of the vessels.

November had been a record month for grain shipment and more than 250 vessels have cleared from this harbor during the last week. More than 80 vessels with something like sixty million bushels of grain have gone east. It is estimated that about half of these vessels were bound for American ports.

Duke Lost Jewels.

LONDON, Dec. 1.—It has just become known that the Duke of Connaught lost a quantity of valuable jewelry, including the Garter jewels. Scotland Yard is conducting a search of great secrecy into the mystery. It is not stated whether the property is supposed to have been lost or stolen or when it was first missed. The duke sailed for Canada on Oct. 17. The jewelry includes five cravat pins, three pairs of sleeve links, a gold wrist watch, an enamel garter and crown. Some articles bear the duke's initials "A. W." (Arthur William).

Last Unknown Buried.

SARNIA, Dec. 1.—The last unidentified body recovered from Lake Huron, near Thedford, was buried in the local cemetery on Saturday afternoon, having been at the morgue here for the past two weeks. The body is that of a French-Canadian, aged 40 or 45 years, who shipped on the steamer Regina at Montreal. Every means was exhausted to locate the relatives of the man, but all to no avail.

FORESTALLED COLUMBUS.

Norwegian Boy Who Discovered Newfoundland.

Almost 450 years before Christopher Columbus was born America was discovered by a Norwegian boy named Biorn, son of Hergolf. He was known by no other title, for in those days sons did not share the father's name.

In the year 1002, Hergolf, an Iceland colonist, fitted out two small vessels for a trading voyage to the Greenland settlement and placed one of these under the command of his son Biorn, a youth of 16 years, who, having been bred to the sea almost since infancy, had mastered the details of his profession by the time that he arrived at an age when other boys usually commence their apprenticeship.

When near the southern coast of Greenland, Biorn's ship was driven far to the south and west. One morning he discovered a strange land close aboard. Sailing along the coast for some distance he found a large bay, into which he steered and dropped anchor. Upon landing the country was seen to be clothed with vegetation and the streams swarming with fine salmon. Trees of large growth grew in great numbers just back from the shore, and the climate was balmy and delightful. Of natives they saw nothing, and believed the land uninhabited.

Rejoiced over his important discovery, Biorn returned to Iceland and communicated the news to his friend Lief, son of Eric the Red, who had founded the colony on the coast of that island. The two ambitious young men immediately entered into an agreement to share the expense of equipping a suitable vessel, sailing to this newly discovered land and bringing back whatever cargo promised to reimburse them for fitting out the ship.

Their first sight of the new land was not calculated to impress Lief with a promise of its fruitfulness, for it was rocky, barren, and gloomy. This gave rise to openly expressed dissatisfaction on his part, but Biorn assured him that further south they would meet with green fields and woodlands. After the fashion of the early navigators in naming geographical discoveries according to the features first presented, this place they called Helleland, and to the low, sandy shore which they observed beyond it and which was covered in spots with clumps of small trees, they gave the name of Markland. Two days later they fell in with a new line of coast, and sailing along this for several hours Biorn made out the bay in which he had anchored on his previous voyage. Into this harbor they brought the ship and moored her.

The explorers soon succeeded in catching a number of fine salmon from the river that emptied into the bay, and collected quantities of fruit of different varieties and of most agreeable flavor. The temperature of the air, as on the former voyage, was found to be delightfully mild to the Icelanders, and the soil proved to be rich and productive. One of the members of the crew, a German met with enormous quantities of grapes growing wild, and from this circumstance the two navigators decided to name the country Vinland, meaning the land of grapes. This Vinland of the early voyagers is known at the present day as Newfoundland. After making several short cruises to the southward and westward, and sailing through the Gulf of St. Lawrence until the river of that name was reached the ship returned to her first anchorage, where the explorers passed the winter.

During the months that the vessel lay at anchor many valuable furs and skins were obtained by the hunters, and in the spring the ship was freighted with valuable lumber hewn in the forests that grew close to the shore. With the proceeds of this venture the two boy discoverers fitted out their vessel a second time, but an unfortunate quarrel breaking out between them, Lief sailed alone to establish a colony after the example of his father. For this purpose he embarked some 70 men and women, glad to exchange the bleak shores of Iceland for the rich meadows and purling streams of this promised land.

The Iron Chink.

Greatest of all labor-saving devices in the canneries is the "iron chink," which cuts off the heads, tails and fins, and cleans as many fish in one minute as could 51 workers in the old way. It is a comparatively small affair, drum-shaped and of simple mechanism. After leaving the "iron chink" the fish are cut, mostly by machinery, into sizes for the different shaped tins, and then packed by hand into these. The tops of the tins are then soldered on, the tins boiled, pierced, sealed again, and thoroughly cooked, and after being allowed to cool and again being tested for leaks, are lacquered and ready for shipment, most buyers labelling the salmon with their own brand.

Analyzing the Soil.

The Agricultural Department of the University of Saskatchewan is undertaking a comprehensive analysis of the soil from different parts of the province. The province is divided into twenty districts and soil samples are to be analyzed from each. These districts are to be subdivided and further analysis made until a reliable report is available for all parts of Saskatchewan.

Co-operation in Getting Statistics.

Co-operation between the Dominion and provincial governments in regard to the collection and tabulation of statistics to prevent overlapping, was recommended by a commission of inquiry last summer, and Hon. Geo. E. Foster is at present working on a plan to give effect to it.

The average man needs all the patience he has and then some.

Roses will revive very quickly if their stems are slipped and they are placed in hot water for a minute or two.

Consider the coal question when you buy a furnace. The coal required to heat a home soon costs much more than the original cost of the furnace, and a little thought will show how to reduce this item fully one-seventh.

The Hecla Furnace saves coal by preventing waste. The heat cannot escape up the chimney. The fire-pot has steel flanges (our patent) which radiate the heat very rapidly—so rapidly that the fire-pot never gets red hot. The heat goes to the living rooms and the smoke flue is always cool. By actual test this steel-flanged fire-pot saves one ton of coal in seven—and it is guaranteed not to burn out.

By all means see this furnace. Get our book on healthful heating. We can prove this saving, and we can show you also how the Hecla is proof against leaking gas or dust. Write to-day.

The Idols Hundreds of Millions of Heathens Still Worship

Heathen Millions are Awakening To a New Era!

Shall We Meet Them With Dreadnoughts or With Bibles?

Chinese Waiting for the Doctor in a Medical Mission School

The Uprising of Heathen Nations

Last night we told you of the great work Protestant Churches are doing on the Home Mission Fields. To-night we want you to take a view, with us, of the Foreign situation.

THE JAPAN-RUSSIAN WAR

The Japan-Russian War has stirred the heathen nations of the world, with their 1,000,000,000 people to their depths. Through the whole of Asia a ferment is in progress which affects over three-fourths of the human race. Japan's successes and ambitions have kindled like aspirations in other lands. The whole East is seething with new impulses and desires.

GOVERNMENTS OVERTHROWN

We lack space to tell you of the recent revolution in Turkey and the aims of its new Government; Of the new Goverment which directs affairs in Egypt; Of the changes in Central and East Africa; Of the social, political, industrial and religious evolution in India or of the new national outlook of the people of Japan.

We will, however, give you a brief outline of the transformation in progress in China.

THE CHINESE PEOPLE

The Chinese are the greatest nation the world has ever known. For 4000 years they have existed scarcely touched by world events. The Egyptians, Jews, Greeks, Romans, Spaniards and French have risen to world eminence and declined in power. Some of these nations have passed out of existence. China remains. Nay more! In spite of floods, famines and pestilences her population has increased. To-day there are 423,000,000 Chinese. This is one third of the world's population.

The great wall and the grand canal of China are the greatest national undertakings ever accomplished by any people.

THE CHINESE AWAKENING

For 3000 years the Chinese have looked with contempt on all other nations. In their ignorance they thought that they nominated the world.

Their awakening has come.

During the comparatively recent past, foreign nations have seized many of her sea ports and large slices of her domains. She has been forced to pay huge indemnities. Her merchants have been insulted. Great Britain forced the Opium trade on her. Her people are being taught the white man's vice—the liquor habit. Nations are refusing to allow her citizens free entrance to their ports. The control of her great natural resources have been acquired by the hated foreigners.

> "If the West does not influence the East by her spiritual life, the East may demoralize the West."—Dr. F. L. Hawks Pott.

JAPAN'S EXAMPLE

Fifteen years ago the Japanese were a despised heathen nation. To-day they are a world power. Japan has only 60,000,000 people.

The Chinese have studied Japan's example. Their leaders are on fire with the desire to out-do Japan and make China's world influence felt.

During the past 5 years the Chinese have made greater reforms than the Japanese accomplished in any 10 year period.

INDUSTRIAL CHANGES

Thirty-five years ago there was not a mile of railway in China. To-day there are 6000 miles of modern railways. Thousands of miles of additional trackage is projected.

In 1880 there was not a telegraph line in China. In 1910 there were 28,124 miles of aerial lines, 50,000 miles of aerial wires, 1001 miles of submarine cables and 102 miles of underground cables. The most distant confines of the country are now in touch with one another.

China has possibly the worlds greatest iron and coal mines. She can construct cannons and navies for the world, as well as equip her own armies.

Civilized nations for centuries have shown their inability to grapple successfully with the liquor traffic. Large numbers of their peoples have been debauched in consequence.

Within the past 10 years China has almost completely exterminated an even greater curse—the opium traffic. Within another decade she will have effected her freedom. This is a marvellous accomplishment.

GREAT FORCES ARE FIGHTING!

Great forces are fighting to gain control of the nation.

One element is striving to turn the Chinese people against the white races. This element points to the past. It tells the people about the unjust wars that have been conducted against them, about their lands that have been taken away from them, about the insults their merchants have received, about how Britain forced the opium trade on them. It shows what Japan has accomplished. It is raising funds to drill and equip an immense standing army.

This element is translating and circulating great quantities of literature that is likely to inflame the minds of the Chinese against foreigners. Every riot against the Chinese on our Pacific Coast is announced from the roof tops in China.

GREAT SOLDIERS

General Gordon once said "Given proper leadership, there are no better soldiers in the world than the Chinese." Well he might. They can live on next to nothing for days and weeks at a time. They can endure incredable hardships. They can march enormous distances.

> "After eight years at the Colonial Office and Admiralty I have a profound contempt, for those who sneer at Missions."—The Earl of Selborne, First Lord of the Admiralty, England.

In time China will be able to place a modernly equipped army of 75,000,000 men in the field. This is greater than the combined armies of North and South America and all European nations combined. Well may we pay heed to the warning, uttered over 100 years ago by Napoleon, not to stir the sleeping giant.

China's one motive is that she may acquire the secret of the industrial, commercial, financial, military and naval power of the West. If we teach this heathen nation nothing but this and do not tell them of our God of Love, we will sow the wind and reap the whirlwind.

Other Forces at Work

Christian forces are also active. Many of China's leaders realize that China's awakening is due largely to the efforts and teachings of the Christian Missionaries. Christian Hospitals, Schools and Mission Stations have done a great work. Dr. Sun Yat Sen., the first president of the Chinese Republic, and many of her foremost statesmen, are Christians. Many of her Schools and Colleges are under Christian teaching.

Chinese by thousands are flocking to the Missionaries to learn Christian methods, and to hear about the Christians' God. They are deserting their idols and seeking for something that will better meet the new demands of their hearts.

A Great Enterprise

To meet these new demands Chinese Christians 12 years ago, established "The Cammercial Press Limited," of Shanghai. This press is now the largest in Asia. It employs over 1000 hands, practically all are Chinese, It has a capital of $1,000,000. It has opened 20 branch presses in various cities of China.

This press is distributing millions of copies of the Bible and of Christian literature among the Chinese. It is endeavoring to teach the Chinese to love God and their fellow men.

The few hundred Protestant Missionaries, the 502 Ordained Native Chinese Ministers, and the 2955 Native Christian Congregations, as well as the many Christian Mission Schools and Hospitals are striving to teach the Chinese the arts of peace and friendship. They are doing a wonderful work. But they are fearfully outnumbered. In North Honan there are 300,000 Chinese to every Missionary.

What Shall Be The Outcome?

The awakening that is taking place in China will be a curse unless the religion of Christ goes with it. It will be a menace to the world.

The Laymens Missionary Movement aims to Evangelize China, and the rest of the heathen world, in this generation. It is an immense undertaking. It must be done. It calls for the best that is within us. Let us respond to the call.

To meet China with dreadnaughts and standing armies is to court the greatest war the world has ever seen. To send her Missionaries and help her to meet and overcome her problems is to win her gratitude and esteem. This is a critical hour in Foreign Missions. The Christian people of Peterboro', as elsewere, are being asked to give liberally of their means to aid this great world movement. Nothing less than the adequacy of Christianity as a world religion is on trial.

> "The good that missionaries have conferred upon China cannot be estimated. The Chinese have their most steadfast and self-abnegating friends among the missionaries."—Ho Yo, Chinese Consular General.

POLICE OF SPAIN

In Andalusia They Are Seen In All Their Shabby Glory.

ARSENALS ON MOVING LEGS.

They Will Put a Pistol to Your Head With the Greatest Politeness and Lock You In a Cell With Infinite Courtesy—Mines of Misinformation.

He is polite, is the Spanish policeman. There is a live and let live air about him. He possesses neither the easy and kindly dignity of the policeman of London nor the truculence of the policeman of New York, but he is very, very human. And he has the blessed gift that no other brand of policeman seems to possess of appearing to be more than an ordinary person. True, he is armed. He is an arsenal moving on legs. But something tells you that he wouldn't really hurt a fly. I like him.

And here I must say that he is not to be confounded with the guardia civil. The guardia civil is quite another person altogether. He is stern and austere, and he patrols country districts and lonesome mountainous places. He was used to put down the bandeleros, those adepts in the art of swift, forceful borrowing, whose presence did so much to heighten the romance of old sunny Spain. The guardia civil killed off these gay financial artists, but now, even after his job has been finished, he still wears a cold, austere air. He is indeed not to be confounded with my friend the policeman.

The first time I met the Spanish policeman was one night in a certain town in Andalusia. Truth compels me to state that I met him in a professional way. I was indulging with others in a row when he appeared—in force. I was gathered in by five of him. But how polite he was! He put his pistol to my head, or, rather, the five of them put their pistols to my head, and made me feel that I would be doing him the greatest of favors by coming with him to the police station.

The whole affair was courtliness itself. To be arrested in such a manner was to have a privilege conferred upon one. At the police station I was again treated with politeness and in the end—with a locked door.

The Spanish policeman is not too well paid. He sports not an ambassadorial salary. All he gets is 2 pesetas a day. He is therefore amenable to the friendly and considerate tip. This, I must hasten to say, however, makes him none the less a worthy and effective guardian of law and order.

He is shabby of uniform. But that is not his fault. It is the fault of a frugal government. In appearance he looks something like an English postman and an impoverished Spanish officer. But there is artistry about his shabbiness. He fits into the picture.

Very often, especially in Andalusia, he is old and rather infirm. One is often sorry for him as he humps along with his sword trundling behind him. But he has the wisdom that goes with age. If he sees a row he looks at it with his blind eye and allows it to simmer down—a very good thing with rows.

If you ask a Spanish policeman a question he is politeness itself. But his answer will be wrong. He is a mine of misleading information. He doesn't know. Indeed, what he doesn't know about the names of streets and the way to get to them and things generally would fill an encyclopedia. If you want to know anything you must not ask a Spanish policeman. Respect him, for he is of the best, but don't ask him questions.

In the nighttime he sometimes carries a lance. He is then called a sereno, presumably because he brings serenity upon troubled waters. He looks very picturesque on a clear, star lit night and makes one think of the times of old—the times one reads about in historical romances. But he is always harmless, always peaceful and ready for a friendly gossip. He is really a sereno—a serene person. His lance is merely there to round off his artistic and romantic appearance. And it is not a sharp lance. I know, for I have often felt the edge of it—when the sereno courteously handed it to me for inspection. But it looks artistic when seen in the distance on a star lit night.

The policeman of Catalonia is somewhat different from the policeman of Andalusia. He is alert, pushful and interfering. He is apt to want to know who you are and what you are and what your business may be. But Catalonia is not Spain. It is a place where the people rush about doing all manner of things. They like work, and, what is worse, they like other people to work. And their policemen take after them.

No, the Catalonian policeman cannot truly be called a Spanish policeman. If you want to see the true Spanish policeman you must go down to Andalusia.

And you will like him. You will feel for him the friendliest regard. You will see him ambling casually along with stooped shoulders and trundling sword. And should you have to make his acquaintance in a professional way you will find that he will deal with you as an easy and kindly father would deal with you. If he arrests you he will arrest you in a way that won't injure your feelings. I can recommend him.—Bart Kennedy in London Star.

He conquers twice who restrains himself in victory.—Syrus.

Emigrants Get Good Advice.

Amongst a number of useful hints to emigrants contained in a circular issued by the Emigrants' Information Office, the official department for emigration in London, there occurs the following:

"Remember, that Canada is a great Dominion, with long settled laws, habits and customs, which are not to be changed at the bidding of every new arrival. When you have been a little while in Canada you will value them also.

"Every country has its own methods of work, and in Canada you will often find the arrangements of the work-shop or the farm and the tools you will use different from those at home. You will soon accustom yourself to the change if you try.

"Do not above all things try to impress on your Canadian employer how much better we do things in England, for it will only make him dislike you and perhaps not care to ~~keep you in his employ. Canadians,~~ too, often resent criticism of their country or its methods, but you should remember that they have been working in Canada long before you were born, and that they are more likely than a stranger like yourself to know what suits the country best."

Andy Broder's Latest.

The genial Andy Broder, of Dundas, was in Ottawa a few days ago. He was telling Commissioner Denis Murphy, and two or three other friends, about the successful celebration of the Anniversary of Chrysler's Farm. "How is the bank doing?" enquired Mr. Murphy. This was a reference to the Morrisburg branch of the Bank of Ottawa; Mr. Murphy being one of the directors of the Ottawa institution. Andy's eyes twinkled as he replied, "First rate, but the management is rather fishy." Denis looked startled and asked, "How's so?" The M.P. replied, "Well your manager's name is Herring, and they have just appointed a new accountant named Finnie."

THEY STEAL CHURCH WINDOWS

Thieves Specialize Nowadays; Some Prefer Mantelpieces.

The science of crime is becoming as highly specialized as that of medicine. The clever criminal of to-day believes in getting off the beaten track. He invents his own "line."

The latest specialist in England is the mantelpiece thief, who removes valuable eighteenth-century mantelpieces from old houses, and sells them to a receiver who has on his books curio collectors who are willing to pay high prices for good antiques without asking questions.

He began his work in London only a few weeks ago, but already three West-end mansions have been robbed of mantelpieces worth several hundreds apiece, while three Georgian mantelpieces have disappeared in one day from an old house in Lincoln's Inn Fields that is being converted into offices.

The motive that moves the theft specialist is often very obscure. Six years ago, for instance, most of the big London hotels were on the watch for the door-mat thief. In the space of two months there was hardly a famous hotel in London, but suffered.

The thief was evidently no ordinary doormat thief, for he confined his attention strictly to hotels (which, of course, put their names on their mats, thus making them unsalable), and only to those whose names are known all over the world. The specialist ended his operations as suddenly as he began — without being caught. The mats stolen, by the way, were the huge mats at the entrance halls.

The thief's doings puzzled all London, and the only likely suggestion made was that he was acting on a commission from some wealthy American souvenir hunter.

The valuable stained-glass of England's old churches is finding its way bit by bit out of the country. There are known to be at least two small gangs who devote their talents solely to this profitable branch of crime. Lost pieces have been identified in America, and none is ever offered for sale to English dealers.

Several rewards are on offer for the capture of the thieves who have during the past five years despoiled English churches of what are in many cases their most valuable treasures. Really old stained glass fetches very high prices owing to its rarity, as in the seventeenth century, Cromwell's soldiers smashed thousands of church windows all over the kingdom.

Burglary and housebreaking have several branches. Some burglars are "porch-climbers," and never tackle a house unless it has a porch from which access can be got to the first floor windows.

Some burglars specialize in flats, and their latest dodge is to ring up the flat by telephone in order to see whether the tenant and his family are out. If the ringer-up gets an answer, he merely asks if that is Mr. So-and-So, inventing some name, and when told it is not, rings off.

The water rice has been boiled in is very nutritious, and is a well proved remedy for all bowel troubles.

Scales can be removed from palms by washing them in water to which has been added a few drops of cedar oil.

SEVERE COLD ON LUNGS AND CHEST QUICKLY RELIEVED

by Na-Dru-Co Syrup of Linseed, Licorice and Chlorodyne

Mr. J. Seward, Bromptonville, Que., writes:

"Two weeks ago I took a severe cold which settled on my lungs and my chest was very sore, breathing tight and severe hacking cough. I was feeling miserable. I bought a bottle of Na-Dru-Co Syrup of Linseed, Licorice and Chlorodyne and after a few doses I felt great relief and I went into a sound sleep, a thing I was not able to do for some nights. Next day I was able to be around again, and before completing the bottle, felt as well as ever. It is a fine cough and cold cure."

Na-Dru-Co Syrup of Linseed, Licorice and Chlorodyne relieves the irritation and "stuffed-up" feeling in the air passages, soothes the tickling which makes you cough, loosens the phlegm and drives out the cold before it gets troublesome.

DOMINION TITLE RESTS IN JUNGLE LAND
TIGERS PILED UP SCORE AGAINST PARKDALE

Ross Craig & Co. Lead at Half-time by 21-2 and Finished 44-2

HAMILTON, Dec. 1.—Hamilton Tigers landed their third Canadian Senior Rugby title on Saturday, when they not only defeated Parkdale, but routed them in the most one-sided game since Montreal beat Peterborough in 1907 by the score of 77 to 6. It was no contest from a spectator's point of view, as the Tigers outclassed their opponents at every angle, and when they scored a try in the first three minutes of play, after taking the ball on bucks from midfield over the Parkdale line, all interest ceased, and the only question was how far would the Tigers win by. At quarter time the score was 7 to C, and at half time 21 to 2, and the only consolation Parkdale can take out of the game is that they held the Tigers scoreless in the third period, when the latter were playing against the wind. In the closing period, especially near the finish, the Tigers wound up by scoring 23 points, thus making the score 44 to 2 at the finish.

The showing of the Parkdale team was a big disappointment to their supporters, who fully expected that Tigers would be held to a small score. The Paddlers have played better Rugby than they exhibited Saturday, but it was before a home crowd. Two or three bucks from Ross Craig and the Parkdale wings were turning their backs on him. This was enough to convince one that several members of the Parkdale team were at their best when playing at home.

The crowd was the smallest that has attended a final in recent years, only about 4,000 being on hand. Many freak bets were registered on the game, the majority being on a 20-point margin.

Tigers—Flying wing, Isbister; halves, Mallet, Manson, McKelvey; quarter, Chagnon; scrimmage, Meyers, Young, Woodley; inside wings, Craig, Wilson; middle wings, Shuart, Clark; outside wings, Gatenby, Glassford.

Parkdale—Flying wing, Boddy; halves, Bickle, Gali, Zimmerman; quarter, Birnie; scrimmage, Dudley, Davidson, Leyfield; inside wings, Miller, Potticary; middle wings, Hughes, Robinson; outside wings, Simpson, Gardner.

SUBSCRIPTION LISTS OPENED FOR PETERBORO HOCKEY CLUB

To-morrow the officers of the Peterborough Hockey Club will call upon the friends of the Club asking for a subscription towards clearing off the debt and giving the Club some funds with which to start the season.

Last season, with three teams in the O.H.A. the receipts were not what the would have been had playing conditions in the early part of the season been more favorable.

There was some criticism at the time, but it is very easy to recall that the cream of senior O.H.A. players performed at Brock St., and local fans witnessed a number of well-played contests.

The Club finished the season with a deficit and the Benefit Concert did not help matters. Now it is proposed to call upon the friends of amateur hockey and ask for their aid.

THE PARSON'S REMEDY

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.

It was love that brought about the marriage of Abraham Scott, a young farmer, with Tilda Hastings, and for the first year they were very happy. Then it happened that Tilda's mother passed a week with them, and when ready to go home she said:

"Tilda, I've been watching things since I've been here."

"Why, what is there to watch?" she asked.

"Henry's tyranny over you."

"Why, mother!"

"It's a fact. If your father treated me that way one of us would leave the house in short order!"

"But I can't understand you at all. Just what has Henry done?"

"He's treated you like a child or a slave. I saw it the first day I was here, and it amazed me that you didn't show your spunk."

"Why, mother, how strange you talk!" said the wife. "Tell me one thing Henry has done that wasn't right."

"I'm going to tell you of more than one, Tilda. I've been setting them down on paper so as to be sure, and here they are:

"The first day I was here he walks in and orders you to melt some mutton taller for a sore back cow."

"Why, he didn't order. He asked me to."

"Don't try to excuse him. There was a commanding tone in his voice. The second day he comes stomping in like a duke and calls out:

"'Hey, Tilda, I'm going to town, and don't you forget to feed the hogs at noon.'"

"But I don't see anything wrong about that," was protested. "He was going after nails."

"Well, I'd just like your father to roar out at me like that just once! I'd tell him to go to Texas quicker'n wink. On the third day your Henry hollered at you from the barnyard and wanted to know if the sheep shears were in the kitchen."

"But he wanted them, mother."

"I s'pose he did, but he spoke like old Nero. If your father had called to me like that I'd have gone down there with a club. On the fourth day, as we was eating supper at 6 o'clock, the clock stopped. You must remember what Henry said?"

"He said it had stopped."

"Yes, but how did he say it? He looked right across the table at you and there was pounded glass in his tones as he said:

"'Tilda, you forgot to wind up the clock last night.'"

"But I did forget, mother."

"And what if you did?"

"What do you want me to do, mother?"

"Assert yourself. Be the boss of the house. Have things go as you want them to, the same as I do. Your father wouldn't dare to pull a cabbage head in the garden without asking my leave."

The wife hadn't looked upon her husband as a tyrant. On the contrary, she regarded him as one of the kindest men she had ever heard of. She had no wish to meddle or boss, and she had felt that she was getting all the rights she could well take care of. But the mother had sowed the seeds of discontent, and they soon sprouted. Tilda began to find fault and tender advice and to even threaten suicide if her opinions were not deferred to. Henry figured out that the mother-in-law had been talking and using her influence against him, but he went ahead patiently and avoided anything like a rupture.

It was when the boy baby was born that Tilda's mother said to her:

"Now, you want to put your foot right down about a name for baby. I am sure Henry will want to call him James, after an uncle."

"But that's a good name, isn't it?"

"Tilda Scott, have you lost your senses?"

"I hope not, mother."

"Then perhaps you can tell me who the ravens fed."

"Moses, wasn't it?"

"Not by a jugful! It was Elisha, and that's the name you want to give baby."

"But I'm sure Henry won't like it."

It so happened that Henry overheard most of the conversation as he was training a vine by an open window. He didn't walk in and order the mother-in-law out of the house, but he sauntered off to the home of the parson whose church he and his wife attended and stated his case down to the baby, then added:

"My wife is to threaten to jump into the horse pond if I object to the name."

"You have a horse pond?"

"I have, sir."

"How deep is the water?"

"About four feet."

"The mother-in-law is about five feet, I believe."

"Thanks," said Henry. "I have the idea."

Henry got home just as the mother-in-law was leaving the house. He picked her up and carried her to the pond and heaved her in. When she waded ashore he heaved her back. When this performance had been repeated for the fifth time he asked:

"Have you anything to say to me?"

"Y-yes!" was gasped in reply. "Baby can be named James, and I'll never darken your door again."

And peace came back and never left the household again. What should we do without the parsons to advise us?

THE TRAPPISTS.

History of Silent Community Which Flourishes Near Ottawa.

There is nothing in this country that takes one back eight centuries, into the mountains of Italy and Spain and Switzerland as does this monastery up in the hills of the Otta in old Quebec, at the "Lac des Deux Montagnes."

There are many interesting facts in the long history of this ancient order that make a glance at them now more than simply apropos.

The order itself dates from the twelfth century, and originated in La Trappe, a narrow valley in Normandy, in the Department of Orne, closely shut in by woods and rocks, and very difficult of access, and was founded by La Trappe, an abbe of the Cistercian order. It has been known as the most extraordinarily austere of any of the religious orders of the Roman Catholic Church.

The discipline of this monastery, in comparison with many other of the wealthier monastic bodies, especially of those which, by one of the conceptions of the period were held in commendam, had become very much relaxed; and in the seventeenth century but little trace of the ancient religious observance remained. In the first half of that century the abbey of La Trappe fell, with other ecclesiastical preferments, to the noted Armand Jean le Bouthellier de Rance.

The circumstances which led this remarkable man to undertake to reform this monastery, which was equivalent to making a new religious order, need not be related here, and are not vital to our story, except to add that in the year 1662 he entered in earnest upon his duties and commenced his reforms.

At the beginning he had powerful opposition from the brethren, but his firmness and vigor and consistency overcame these obstacles, and as an evidence of a complete change of life entered upon a fresh novitiate in the year 1663, and in the following year made anew the solemn profession and was reinstalled as abbot.

From this time may be dated the new austerities which have characterized the order. By the discipline then inaugurated the monks were forbidden the use of meat, fish, wine and eggs. All intercourse with externs was cut off, and the old monastic habit of manual labor was revived. The reform of De Rance was founded on the principle of perpetual prayer and entire self-abnegation.

By the Trappist rule which prevails at Two Mountains the monks are obliged to rise at two o'clock a.m. for matins in the church, which lasts till half-past three, and after an interval devoted to private devotion they go at half-past five to the office of the prime, which is followed by a lecture.

At seven they engaged in their several daily tasks indoors or out, according to the weather.

In the middle of the day they partake of a very frugal meal of vegetables, bread and a little fruit. Manual labor then succeeds for two hours, aftr which each monk occupies an hour in private prayer, or reading in his own cell until four o'clock, when they again assemble for vespers. The supper consists of little more than bread and water. After half an hour in meditation they retire promptly at eight o'clock. The bed is a hard straw mattress, with a coarse coverlet, and the Trappist never lays aside his habit, even in sickness, unless it should prove extreme.—Saturday Night.

Canada Away In Lead.

Canada won the majority of world's honors in individual classes at the International Dry Farming Congress at Tulsa, Okla., and 7 out of 16 sweepstakes, including the grand prize for best bushel of hard wheat. This was for "Marquis" variety grown in Saskatchewan, which is also a Canadian discovery. "Marquis" wheat was perfected by Dr. Charles E. Saunders, Dominion Cerealist, at Ottawa.

Montana won four more, thus giving the north supremacy in all classes in which they could effectually compete. A threshing machine, valued at $1,250, was won by Paul Gerlach of Saskatchewan. Best peck of barley, $150 gasoline engine, was won by Nicholas Taitinger, Claresholm. Best bushel of oats, a harvester and binder, valued at $165, was won by E. J. Lanigan, Elfross, Sask. Best peck of flax, $50, won by John Plews, Carnduff, Sask. Best sheaf of barley, $50 discharrow won by A. H. Crossman, Kindersley, Sask. Best sheaf of flax, $50 plow, won by R. C. West, Kindersley, Sask. Best sheaf of oats, $20 cultivator, won by Arthur Perry, Cardston, Alta.

SOCIETY

WEDDING—PERSONALS

BEST—FISHER.

Peterborough friends of the bride will be interested in the following clipping from the British Columbian of New Westminster, of Thursday, Nov. 20:

The marriage of Mr. Robert H. Best and Miss Iola Lillian Fisher, daughter of Mrs. Mayne Fisher, was solemnized at the home of the bride, 438 Sixth street yesterday evening at 8.30 o'clock in the presence of near relatives and friends. Under a floral horseshoe emblem of ivy and chrysanthemums, Rev. W. W. Abbott read the simple but impressive marriage service of the Methodist church. The bride was attended by Mrs. N. C. McLean, of Victoria, as matron of honor, and the groom was supported by Mr. Donald F. Mackenzie of Vancouver.

The bride, who entered the prettily decorated drawing room on the arm of her brother, Mr. Bruce Fisher, to the strains of the bridal chorus from Lohengrin, played by Mr. H. Stobart, wore a gown of white brocade, the bodice tastefully draped with ninon de soie. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley, and the bridal veil was crowned with a wreath of orange blossoms.

The matron of honor was smartly attired in a pink duchess gown with a gold embroidered tunic and carried a shower bouquet of pink roses. She wore a black velvet hat with paradise plume. The little winsome flower girl, Miss Mayne Adeline Walker, niece of the bride, was daintily clad in a white silk empire dress. She proudly wore a pretty gold bangle, the gift of the groom, and carried a basket of violets.

The groom's gift to the bride was a very handsome pendant of peridot and pearls, and to the matron of honor, amythest and pearl earings.

After the ceremony a dainty luncheon was served and again receiving the congratulations of their friends the bridal pair left by limousine motor car to catch the Victoria boat at Vancouver. The bride's travelling costume was a smart brown tailored suit with a hat en suite.

Among the out-of-town guests were Mrs. Mackenzie and her daughter, Miss Winewood Mackenzie, Mrs. Hewie and Miss Chew, of Vancouver; Mr. N. C. McLean, of Victoria, Mr. and Mrs. John Fisher, Winnipeg.

After a honeymoon trip to the Sound cities, the happy couple will take up their residence at Sixth avenue, New Westminster.

WHITTY—RASHOTTE

A very pretty wedding took place in St. James Church, Stirling, Thursday Nov. 27th., when Marguerite, only daughter of Mr. and George Whitty was married to Felix Rashotte of Tweed. The bride, wearing a beautiful gown of white duchess satin with Juliet cap and veil, entered the church to the Lohengrin wedding march, leaning on the arm of her father. She carried a bouquet of carnations and lily-of-the valley. The bridesmaid, Miss Gertrude Clancy, of Peterboro, cousin of the bride, was charming in apricot satin with overdress of gold sequin carrying a bouquet of pink carnations, with a large picture hat and white feather bandeau and mount. Mr. Jack Quinn, of Tweed was best man.

The nuptial mass was celebrated by Rev Father O'Farrell assisted by Father McFadden, of Wooler. Guests were present from Peterboro, Brighton, Keene, Tweed and Wooler. After the wedding breakfast at the bride's home Mr. and Mrs. Rashotte left for Detroit and Bay City, the bride travelling in a navy blue tailored suit with hat to match, and wearing a beautiful set of mink furs the gift of her parents.

On their return home they will take up their residence in Tweed.

"THE LIGHT ETERNAL"

This Excellent Production Make a Return Visit Here Next Saturday Dec. 6

"A theme of beauty is portrayed with realism in "The Light Eternal" a drama modelled upon the masterpiece of Cardinal Wiseman's "Fabiola," which has already been seen in Peterboro for three performances last season, and which will return again to the Grand theatre, on Saturday next, December 6th.

"The Light Eternal" is especially beautiful from the standpoint of those delighting in artistic scenery. The piece ably portrays the life of the Christian in the later days of the Roman Empire when the followers of the Nazarene were persecuted as dogs and when there could be no more contempt than that applied in the word "Christian."

The story of Christian martyrdom in which the principal characters are a converted Roman and a pagan Princess, is woven about the plot. The play is notably worth while.

The presenting company will be the same as before with Louise Dunbar and John Milton in the leading roles

DEVOTIONS IN THE EVENINGS

On Wednesdays and Fridays at Sacred Heart Church

Yesterday was the first Sunday in Advent, and likewise the first day in the new ecclesiastical year. At the Church of the Sacred Heart Rev. J. J. O'Brien preached a very appropriate sermon on starting the new year well and checking that ever growing tendency to become lukewarm in things pertaining to religion.

He also announced that on every Wednesday and Friday evening till Christmas there will be devotions in the church at seven-thirty.

Yesterday morning a Novena was started in honor of the Blessed Virgin. It will be brought to a close on December 8th, which is the feast of the Immaculate Conception, the evening of which will be marked by a reception of some twenty-five young ladies into the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin.

PUBLIC SCHOOL INSPECTION

Dr. Struther's Lecture on Wednesday Next

Dr Struthers of Toronto, as already announced, is to lecture on Wednesday evening next in the Collegiate Hall on the Medical Inspection of schools. The lecture will be illustrated by slides. Miss Palmer, a local musician will give several violin solos. Admission is free.

Dr Struthers is the chief Medical School Inspector of the city of Toronto, and is an authority on this subject. He has inspected the systems used in this work in England and other countries, so approaches his subject with a fund of personal knowledge and experience. Anyone at all interested in the consideration of this matter, even from a ratepayer's point of view, should not fail to attend.

Medical school inspection is being considered in cities like Guelph, Berlin and Galt, and towns like Pembroke. Stulton, a town adjoining Sault Ste. Marie already has it. The larger cities, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Stratford, Kingston, Ottawa, Brantford, Niagara Falls, etc., have it. It has been tried in small places like Parkhill, Ailsa, Craig and Chandeboge. The north Middlesex experiments in the rural schools, while of a transitory nature, showed from 68 to 90 p.c. of children defective—about the same proportion as in the cities.

MISS QUINN TO GIVE AN ADDRESS

NEEDS SHIFTING BOARDS; LAKE BOATS SAFER THEN, SAYS CAPTAIN LAWSON

Resumed Inquiry Into Causes of Lake Disaster Elicit Suggestions—Weather Man Says No Saturday Night Forecasts Could Be Sent Out Because Telegraph Offices Were Shut.

GODERICH, Dec. 2.—Another session of the coroner's inquest in connection with the recent disaster on Lake Huron, was held here yesterday afternoon and a further adjournment was made to Saturday, Dec. 13, when it is hoped a conclusion will be reached. Coroner Hunter presided and Crown Attorney Seager conducted the investigation, which has developed into a general enquiry as to the conditions affecting lake navigation.

Capt. Alex. Lawson, who navigated the lakes for many years in sailing craft, said that vessels should be compelled to use shifting boards. He thought, too, if some of the wooden lifeboats carried on some of the freighters were put into the water they would not float; the metallic boats were better. There appeared to be no boat drill, and the men who sail the freighters nowadays would not be able to handle the boats if they got them launched. Goderich harbor, he said, should be widened and deepened and with the completion of the breakwater it would be a good harbor.

William Allan of the Toronto office of the Dominion meteorological service gave some very interesting testimony. He said the heavy gale signal was up at all ports on the lakes from Nov. 7 to Nov. 10, and the forecasts sent out predicted strong winds and snow. Only five times this season, once in July, once in September, twice in October, and then on Nov. 7, were the heavy gale signals ordered up on the lakes, and on each occasion it was justified by the weather that followed. It was the practice to make out the weather charts twice each day, at 9.30 a.m. and 10.30 p.m., and immediately afterwards to wire the forecasts to all the stations. On Saturday night the forecasts were not sent out, as the telegraph offices closed early and were not open regularly on Sunday. Accordingly, when the storm abated on Saturday, Nov. 8 (this storm was felt chiefly on Lake Superior), there was no way of giving mariners a warning of the great storm that came on Sunday. The witness maintained, however, that as the heavy gale signal was still up this should have served as a warning. Since the storm the meteorological office has been sending the Saturday night forecast to the wireless station at Midland, where it could be communicated to vessels having wireless equipment.

That there were not enough inspectors and that the inspectors did not have sufficient time to do their work thoroughly was the opinion of John W. Taylor, for many years an engineer on lake steamers. As a consequence, not much dependence could be placed on lifeboats and lifebelts for the saving of life. He, too, thought every vessel should have a shifting board.

Capt. Stephen, of the steamer Kaministiquia, who has the proud distinction of having brought his vessel safely through the storm on Lake Huron, told of his experience on the fateful day. Capt. Stephens made several suggestions for the improvement of Goderich harbor, but said no matter how good a harbor it might be no vessel could have made it in that storm.

R. A. Harrison of Cleveland, agent of the Lake Carriers' Association, told of the system by which that association kept close track of all the sailors shipping in their boats. By means of this system all but one of the bodies from the lake carriers' boats had been identified.

Rescue Stations Needed.

OTTAWA, Dec. 2.—Col. John A. Currie, M.P. for North Simcoe, is in Ottawa to-day to urge upon the Government the appointment of a commission to enquire into the recent great lakes catastrophe, and to report upon the feasibility and desirability of establishing life-saving stations on the Canadian shores of the lakes.

Col. Currie points out that all along the shores of the United States side of the great lakes, life-saving stations exist, and he is of the opinion that had there been life-saving stations at some of the points where vessels drifted ashore during the recent storm many lives would have been saved.

The probabilities are that joint action will be taken with the United States Government in this connection.

REVOLT IN SOUTH CHINA.

Rebels Are Leaguing With Outlaws to Oppose Yuan Shi Kai.

PEKIN, Dec. 2.—Official telegrams received at the capital yesterday from various provinces in South China, report that the Chinese rebels are intriguing with numerous outlaw bands to form the nucleus of another rebellion against the Government of President Yuan Shi Kai. Pekin officials believe that the rebel party will not be able to organize or finance another revolution, but in other quarters fear is expressed that it may succeed in perpetuating the lawless conditions which now prevail in almost every province of the republic.

The Chinese Government is developing an extensive secret service and summary executions without a semblance of a court trial frequently occur.

HOUSES CARRIED AWAY AND PEOPLE MEET DEATH

CREEK SWELLED BY HEAVY RAIN

Canadian Press Despatch.

BELTON, Texas, Dec. 2.—A downpour of four hours' rain so swelled the creek which runs through this place that it carried away fifty houses. Mrs. W. C. Polk and four children were caught in their home and drowned, while the husband carried a fifth child to higher ground.

Another family of five campers, whose names are unknown, were wiped out, and further down the stream a sudden wave carried away the main street bridge and with it an unknown man who stood watching the on coming flood.

BURNS VOLUMES FOUND.

Priceless Treasures Will Be Restored to Scottish People.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 2. — The mystery surrounding the whereabouts of the Glenriddell manuscripts of the Poet Burns, which were sold by the Athenaeum Library of Liverpool last summer, and for which a committee of Scots in England and Scotland have been searching, was cleared up here last night when John Gribbell, vice-president of The Philadelphia Public Ledger and associated in the Curtis Publishing Co., announced that the two volumes were in his possession. Mr. Gribbell made the announcement at a dinner of the St. Andrew's Society. He declared he had purchased the manuscripts from a dealer and he would restore them to Scotland, forever protected by a deed of trust, as a gift to the people who gave Robert Burns to the world.

Mr. Gribbell, who was not assigned a toast on the program, surprised the diners when he rose to give an account of the romance of some of Burns' manuscripts and revealed the whereabouts of the missing volumes. As he finished speaking the two quarto volumes, bound in old polished calf, were removed from a steel and fireproof box and laid before the guests.

VICEROY HARDINGE MAY RESIGN HIS POST

LORD HARDINGE.

That Lord Hardinge, Viceroy of India, has decided to resign at the first of the new year has been reported persistently in government circles. It is regarded as probable that Lord Kitchener, present British ruler in Egypt, will be appointed to succeed Lord Hardinge.

NO TRACE OF LAVELL.

Country-Wide Search Has Failed To Find Professor.

HAMILTON, Dec. 2.—In spite of the country-wide search that is now in progress, no tidings have been received of the missing man, Professor Lavell. His wife received word yesterday that he had passed through Ingersoll on Nov. 15, but she says he was in Columbus, Ohio, then. Her belief is that he is still living, and that he boarded a train near the spot where he left his coat and a note in a rowboat. She thinks that he went to Niagara Falls or Buffalo. The fact that he left a note, she thinks, indicates that he felt he was about to be overcome by some mental weakness.

PROF. C, F. LAVELL.

This city is placarded everywhere with offers of $500 reward for his discovery alive or dead.

Professor C. F. Lavell is a son of the late Dr. Lavell, for many years warden of Kingston Penitentiary. The missing man was professor of history and education in the State University of Ohio, at Columbus. He was five feet 10 1-2 inches in height, weighed 153 pounds, with blue eyes, brown hair, with a touch of gray at the temples and a moustache. He was 41 years of age.

EVIDENCE ALL IN

Argument of Counsel in Rates Case Will Begin Thursday.

OTTAWA, Dec. 2.—All the evidence in the western freight rates case has been put in. At four o'clock yesterday afternoon Chief Commissioner H. L. Drayton, K.C., declared the case formally closed and called on the respective counsel to proceed with the argument, but on the plea of James Bicknell, counsel for the Dominion Government, and of F. H. Chrysler, K.C., counsel for the C.P.R., the board agreed to an adjournment until Thursday morning. From the time the arguments begin until they are definitely closed the board will hold evening sessions if necessary as it is planned to call a halt on the arguments not later than Saturday.

Mr. Bicknell will be the first to address the board. He will be followed by counsel for the western provinces in the case and Isaac Pitblado, K.C., for the Winnipeg Board of Trade. The legal representatives for the railways will follow.

COUNCIL SPRINGS SURPRISE ON CITY CLERK ARMSTRONG

Presentation of Travelling Companion is Made by Mayor Bradburn on Behalf of the City Fathers

Last night before the City Council adjourned, the presentation of a handsome leather travelling companion was made by Mayor Bradburn to Mr. S. R. Armstrong, City Clerk in Peterboro for twenty years.

"The Council and myself," said Mayor Bradburn, "a short time ago heard that you, on or about the eighth or ninth of November, had spent twenty years in the service of the City of Peterboro. Twenty years when you look ahead, seems a long time, but when you look back, it does not seem so long. I can assure you that the Councils of other years and the Councils during my time, appreciate extremely, the manner in which you have conducted your office, and the kindness shown us in trying to guide us along the straight path and by trying to direct us when we first joined the Council as Aldermen of the City of Peterboro.."

S. R. ARMSTRONG, for twenty years city clerk for Peterboro.

Mayor Bradburn also referred to the services given by Mr. Armstrong in connection with the work of securing new industries, which had necessitated considerable travelling.

"This Council," continued His Worship, "asks you to accept this travelling bag so that in going away you may take it with you and feel that you have the best wishes of the Council in 1913.

Mr. Armstrong was touched by the wholly unexpected action of the Council and he returned his hearty thanks for their kindness toward him.

PRISONER FREED FROM KINGSTON NEVER SAW AN AUTOMOBILE

Peter Derosch, Who Killed a Man In Vancouver In Early Eighties, Was Brought East In a "Prairie Schooner" — He Showed Terror After His Release When Motor and Street Cars Passed Him.

KINGSTON, Dec. 2. — Peter Derosch, aged 75, passed through the gates of the Portsmouth Penitentiary yesterday a free man, after serving thirty years within the walls of the prison.

Derosch was sent here from Vancouver, B.C., for murder for which he was tried, found guilty and sentenced to the hanged. The mental condition of the man at the time of the murder constrained the Department of Justice to commute the sentence to life imprisonment.

He is said to be the oldest prisoner in Canada. Derosch was brought from the coast to the penitentiary before Canada had a transcontinental railway. The long journey was made by stage coach and "prairie schooner," by boat for a short distance and a tramp to Sudbury, thence by train.

When he was released yesterday, Derosch looked for the first time on an electric street car and an automobile. As he was leaving the big gate of the prison an automobile passed, Derosch sprang back and broke away from his escort, trying to get behind the walls of the prison. A street car then passed and the aged prisoner showed the same signs of terror. He was taken to the G.T.R. station on the street car, but for a time he refused to go near the car.

When Derosch came to the penitentiary he was placed in the insane ward, where he was confined for eight years. His condition improved and for about twenty years he has been acting as a "trusty." He has been a model prisoner. Derosch secured his pardon through the efforts of the Salvation Army, who will care for him in Toronto.

Not Duke's Jewels.

LONDON, Dec. 2.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—There was no truth in the reported theft of the Duke of Connaught's jewels. The stolen property belongs to a private gentleman.

TO EMPLOY "MOVIES."

Hamilton Separate Schools Will Have Up-to-Date Instructions.

HAMILTON, Dec. 2. — Following an order passed by the Hamilton Separate School Board at their meeting last night a series of motion picture films will be acquired for use in connection with geography instruction in the schools under the board's jurisdiction.

The board recently purchased a motion picture machine to aid in making school courses more adaptable to the minds of young children. It was thought that the impression made by living pictures would be more lasting than the best of textbooks could produce.

The children enrolled in the Separate schools of Hamilton are the first in Canada to learn through this new method. When the order of the board goes into force they will be afforded the opportunity of seeing the life of the countries of the world pictured at life size. The wood-cuts of the old geographies will be discarded for film reels and the names of places will mean more than ever they did before.

It is expected that if this venture proves successful the motion picture method will be extended to other courses.

CHURCHILL FLIES.

British First Lord of Admiralty Pilots an Aeroplane.

LONDON, Dec. 2.—Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, has become a competent aviator. He has taken lessons recently at the flying depots, and on Saturday ascended at East Church in a dual control biplane with Capt. Lushington.

On Saturday morning Winston had some final lessons to complete his experience, and after lunch, donning a leather jacket and airman's cap, he took his seat in a dual control biplane with Captain Wildman Lushington.

Reaching an altitude of 500 feet, Mr. Churchill took charge of the machine, flying to and fro in a strong wind for nearly 45 minutes and covering altogether between 30 and 40 miles. Capt. Lushington then resumed control and brought the machine to the earth.

To Discuss Hindu Problem?

VANCOUVER, Dec. 2.—Although he ostensibly is only here on a general investigation trip, Commissioner General Caminetti, head of the United States immigration service, who was in the city for several hours yesterday, according to advices from Victoria, is making arrangements for a conference with Sir Richard McBride on the Hindu problem, which, in the light of the recent ruling of Chief Justice Hunter, has now assumed a most serious aspect.

MANITOBA MAN GETS BIG PRIZE AT CHICAGO CATTLE SHOW

With His Steer Glencarnock Victor II., J. D. McGregor of Brandon, Carries Off the Championship of All Grades and Cross-breeds by Ages—Same Exhibitor Wins Several Other Big Awards.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2.—Yesterday at the International Live Stock Show in the cattle classes, the time was taken up with the judging of fat steers. Entries in these classes were very much in excess of any previous exhibition and competition was keen, twenty and even twenty-five in a class was not uncommon.

J. D. McGregor, Brandon, took one first, one fourth and two championships. The first-class in which he showed was that of steers, calved between Jan. 1 and Sept. 1, 1911. There were 22 in the class and he got fourth with Glencarnock Advance. The next class was that of calves dropped between Sept. 1, 1911, and Jan. 1, 1912. In this class he got first, with Glencarnock Victor II., against 19 competitors.

The next struggle was for the championship of all grades and cross breeds by ages. It was a fateful moment, as it is always felt that the grand champion of grades and cross breeds has an excellent chance for the championship of the show. Finally the award was made to the Manitoba steer Glencarnock Victor II.

Next came the classes of three, made up of one two-year-old, one yearling and one calf. The McGregor herd was made up of Glencarnock Advance, Glencarnock Victor II. and Glencarnock Boy, the last named a June calf. With this herd J. D. McGregor pulled off another prize of $75. This win meant that he had the three best cross bred or grade steers in the show. There was four prizes in the class and every one of them was taken by a Black herd.

Mayor Handles Policemen.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 2.—Mayor Walker established headquarters at the police station early yesterday and said he would take personal charge of the police department until the strike of the union teamsters and chauffeurs, which began at midnight Sunday night, is settled. He said he had 100 mounted policemen and 400 patrolmen and expected to be able to handle the situation without assistance from the state.

Toronto's Check For Exhibition.

TORONTO, Dec. 2.—The City of Toronto will receive a check this year from the Canadian National Exhibition Association for $60,000, representing the surplus from this year's Exhibition, after all accounts have been paid. This is the largest amount ever turned over to the city from the Exhibition.

Dr. Alexander Bell Honored.

LONDON, Dec. 2.—The Royal Society yesterday awarded the Hughes medal to Dr. Alexander Graham Bell of Washington for his investigations into technical electricity. The society elected Sir William Crookes president for the ensuing year.

CAN'T STOP SMUGGLING

Arms and Ammunition Pouring In to Mexican Rebels.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—How the American border patrol has found it well nigh impossible to enforce the embargo against the shipment of arms and ammunition into Mexico, was described in a report from Brig. General Bliss, commanding the forces on the border, made public yesterday at the War Department. Practically the entire population along the international line, the report said, is in sympathy with the Mexican rebels, and as the result, large quantities of war munitions have been smuggled across in spite of the unceasing vigilance of the troopers.

Gen. Bliss complained of the vagueness of the law declaring instructions to the army are so general that too much of a task was imposed upon the troopers and junior officers. He recommended that two of the best equipped officers of the Government's legal force be sent down to travel along the line and decide question of doubtful rights and powers.

In this connection the general referred to instructions sent to him last June to hold troops in readiness to go to the aid of the threatened American consular representative at Piedras Negras. For several days the general pointed out the question of possible peace or war rested entirely upon the discretion of this consul, as it was a foregone conclusion that the American soldiers would have had to fight their way into Mexico if the necessity of protecting the consulate had arisen.

The necessity of keeping a considerable proportion of the U. S. army on the border for an indefinite period was forecast in the report. Gen. Bliss, who has been on the line ever since the beginning of the Madero revolution, called attention to the fulfilment of his prediction that the breaking up of Orozco's army last year into small bands would not restore peace, because the large lawless element among the troops would not consent to return to ordinary vocations.

LABOR PARTY PLANNED.

Prominent Union Men Engaged In Effort to Launch Campaign.

OTTAWA, Dec. 2.—An effort is being made by the labor leaders throughout the country to organize an independent labor party on the lines of the labor party in Great Britain. Hopes are entertained by the leading men of the Trades and Labor Congress that they will be sufficiently organized to place candidates in the field in such industrial centres as St. John, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

They propose to have a labor party in the House of Commons which will not be affiliated with either of the present political parties on general issues, but play an independent role, while uniting solidly on all matters affecting the interests of the laborers.

FIGHTS FOR LIFE.

Police Lieut. Becker Seeks a New Trial, on Ground of Conspiracy.

ALBANY, N.Y., Dec. 2.—A conspiracy that found its support in perjured testimony put former Police Lieut. Charles Becker in the Sing Sing death house for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, attorneys for the convicted man argued yesterday in the Court of Appeals. Justice Goff, who denied Becker a new trial, and District Attorney Whitman, who prosecuted the case, were criticised severely. Becker's counsel appealed from the order denying their motion for a new trial, and asked a reversal of judgment. Mrs. Becker was in the courtroom by the special request of her husband. Judge Werner presided. Chief Justice Cullen and Judge Gray, both of whom will retire from the court this month, did not sit in the case. It is expected that a decision in the case will not be rendered for three months.

LACKS INFORMATION

Dr. Fernow's Suggestions Already In Force Says Hon. Mr. Hearst.

TORONTO, Dec. 2.—In reply to the demand made by Prof. B. E. Fernow of Toronto University Forestry Faculty for an expert analysis of soils in the "clay belt" of Northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Hearst stated yesterday that every surveyor sent out by the Department was given instructions to prepare exact reports of the soil qualifications he discovered. No district was open unless it was known that it would produce good crops.

It was declared also that the average settler was more inclined to look at the actual results of the land, and to judge the soil quality from the growth upon it than to depend entirely on a scientific analysis. To carry out a scheme similar to that proposed by the dean would be almost impracticable.

Some of the references of Dean Fernow to the class of people living on poor farms are said by the Department to be out of accord with actual conditions.

Canadian Nominee Opposed.

LONDON, Dec. 2.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Charles N. Armstrong, Canadian railway promoter and contractor, who is the official Conservative candidate for Colne Valley, is threatened with opposition from Capt. Bagnall, the previous Conservative candidate, who alleges that he has been slighted by the party. Armstrong, although a Conservative, supports the policy of home rule all round, but it is not understood that this attitude has caused the present difficulty. The situation is additionally interesting as Charles Leach, the present Liberal member, has decided to retire.

Arctic Explorer Lost.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2.—An attempt to discover the fate of Ernest Dekoven Leffingwell, geologist and Arctic explorer, who went into northern Alaska, Aug. 25, was begun yesterday by the faculty of the University of Chicago. Leffingwell started north with the Stefansson expedition, and was to have returned to Point Barrow by Nov. 1. Nothing has been heard from him.

Enquiry Is Urged.

OTTAWA, Dec. 2.—The executive of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada had the question of the high cost of living under consideration, and is strongly in favor of the appointment by the Government of a commission to make a thorough investigation of the problem.

PARTY EGOTISM

There is a feeling among more sensible Canadians that we ought to keep the question of the high cost of living out of party politics. But there is one man who has done his best to forestall such a consumation. Sir Wilfrid Laurier annexed the whole business at Hamilton. He practically declared that the Borden Government was the cause of this universal state of things and that the only remedy was in the hands of the Liberals. It is such narrowness and blatant political egotism that causes unnecessary strife and bitterness between parties, making impossible a fair discussion of the subject and delaying the carrying out of measures which might allay the evil.

Such opportunist politicians grasp at every crisis, make a parrot cry and try to monopolize the whole druggist shop. The temperance movement in Ontario is suffering from this division of forces. Anyone who does not cry "abolish the bar" is a degenrate. "The bar or the boy," shouted The Globe over the East Middlesex election, and the inference is that whoever votes against Mr. Rowell is voting against the boy. Such party tactics are nothing short of contemptable and do not advance the cause of temperance. The true friends of the liquor interests are these extremists who divide the temperance camp and ban everyone who does not agree with their way of dealing with the problem. We are quite willing to believe that there are sincere abolitionists, but there are also people who do not believe in such extreme measures, not because they love whiskey but because they sincerely believe in slow and sure methods. Most people would abolish, not only the bar but the brewery as well if that were possible. Most of us would abolish the social evil. But the devil is too deeply entrenched in our moral and national constitution to be dislodged by a mere shibboleth or even an act of parliament.

The point of these remarks is, that it is possible to disagree on policy and yet to be united in principle, and that neither side has the right to condemn the other as altogether wicked because of a difference in a point fo view. The high cost of living is a universal problem just now, in free-trade as well as protectionist countries, and this attempt of the Liberal leader to saddle the Conservative government with the blame for a world-wide complaint and to set himself up as the emancipator of the race is too funny for words. It is not a statesmanlike way of dealing with a serious problem. The question is at present under consideration at Ottawa and will possibly be submitted to a none party investigation board.

HINDUS IN THE WEST

There has been for a long time an attempt to stop the Oriental coming into British Columbia. It is well-known that Premier McBride is very pro-British in his views of immigration. Hindus seem particularly fond of the far western Province, but the people do not seem to be too fond of the Hindu. The difficulty in steming this tide of immigration seems to be in the fact that Hindus are British subjects, and are citizens of the Empire. Hitherto the Hindu has been kept back by "Federal orders in Council." These are now declared by Chief Justice Hunter to have been illegal, and that no Hindu can be kept out of Canada except for idiocy crime or disease. It is now feared that shiploads of Hindus will now flood British Columbia.

Without making any invidious comparison between the Hindu and the European it must be admitted that Canada is scarcely suited to the Oriental, and a mixed population which would be the result of a Hindu invasion of British Columbia would scarcely tend to establish a united Canada or fulfil the hopes of those who have dreams of "Canada a Nation."

A CITY OF THE DEAD

Those who have followed the scrappy reports that have come over the ocean of the Dublin strike have not realized its effect upon the people, and especially the suffering of innocent children as the result of this iniquitous dispute between labor and capital.

The "Times" Dublin correspondent says:

> "The situation could hardly be less hopeful. Dublin is almost a city of the dead. The streets are silent and empty, the harbor is deserted. An immense moral depression prevails.

The Westminster Gazette says:

> The only transport work round the quays of the Liffey is being done by imported labor under the protection of soldiers and mounted and foot police, adequate reserves of whom are in readiness for any emergency; but while the strikers do not demonstrate there is little cause for alarm. They lie round the vicinity of Liberty Hall, passive spectators of the convoys of goods which the authorities at Dublin Castle and Phoenix Park themselves to collect and deliver for their own use, the military having to do all the loading, as well as driving the vans and trollies.

The painfullest feature of the dispute is the huge number of women and children who have to be charitably assisted. Under the superintendence of Miss Larkin free breakfasts are supplied to the children each morning from Liberty Hall, and a depot has been running for some time for the supply of clothing and boots. As early as half-past six in the morning there are queues of barefooted girls and boys clamoring for bread round the portals of the Federation headquarters.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Jim Larkin is still trying to stir up strife among the English Trade Unionists, calling upon them to emulate the Dublin Transport Workers. Emulation, they say, is the sincerest form of flattery; but in a case like this, it is the maddest form of suicide.

Our Royal Duke, the Governor-General, has been robbed of jewellry from one of his English residences. We are very sorry to hear this, but he should have brought his jewellry with him.

The Globe asks a question: "Is the World a free-fooder or a bally hooter?" If we might be permitted to reply we would say that the average man of the world is by nature a free-fooder. But since the curse of Eden he has had to eat bread by the sweat of his brow.

Dr. Griffiths Thomas, of Wycliffe College, has been preaching a series of advent sermons, in which he is emphasizing the Second-Coming of Christ. He says that "Christ is just as likely to come to-day as ten years hence." There is nothing very definite about that. He's a poor prophet who cannot fix a date within less time than ten years. Very few of us can keep up our interest in the millenium that long.

It is now said that the chief cause of the stringency from which Canada has been suffering is to be traced to the Balkan war. For those who feel that Canada owes nothing to the Empire, the words of Sir George Parish are interesting and important. "There is no doubt," he says, "that a foreign municipality, however prosperous, pays at least one per cent more for its money than an average city in the Dominion of Canada." So that it pays to be patriotic.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WHERE TUBERCULOSIS IS BRED

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir— I was surprised to note in your preface to Mr. West's letter that anyone had taken exception to the Review's remarks on Tuberculosis Sunday. I had heard nothing but commendation of those remarks.

It is not preaching we need but practice and one of the places to begin is in the churches themselves. Some of them, especially the older ones, have a stale odor of dust and bad air about them always and when filled with people during a service of one hour and a half to two hours in length they serve as likely places wherein to contract tuberculosis.

Other such favorable places are Opera Houses and perhaps worst of all are the moving picture houses.

At a recent lecture given in the Collegiate Institute, the ventilation was so bad as to produce suffering to those accustomed to well aired rooms. And yet the audience was largely made up of school teachers who are supposed to know what good ventilation is for.

Again, I have seen small children rehearsing for a concert where the air was so impure that I doubt if an up-to-date farmer would allow live stock to breathe it.

These are the places where practice and not preaching is needed to begin a campaign of prevention.

Yours truly,

"READER"

CHRISTMAS APPEAL
FOR
The Hospital for Sick Children
COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1913, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,367 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 427 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto.

SLAIN IN DISPUTE

Winnipeg Citizen Is Struck on Car by Minneapolis Man.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 1.—A street car squabble Saturday afternoon eventually cost the life of William Hallburton, an old-time resident of Winnipeg. Henry R. Howard, manager of the Pitner Lighting Co. of Minneapolis, is under arrest in that city awaiting instructions from the Winnipeg police. Howard attempted to get off a car near the C.P.R. station. He had some trouble getting through the crowd, and as Hallburton was directly in his way he attempted to give him a shove out of the way. In the mix-up Hallburton received a couple of blows on the jaw. Later he collapsed, and died at nine o'clock.

Extradition papers are being made out, and it is understood Howard will be charged with manslaughter.

Governor Escapes Assassin.

HONG KONG, Dec. 1.—Gen. Chi Kuang Lung, Governor of Canton, on Saturday, for the second time within a fortnight, was attacked by an assassin, who endeavored to plunge a knife into his heart. Gen. Lung, however, escaped with only a wound in the hand. Gen. Lung personally killed four of his guards, fearing treachery at their hands.

Serious trouble in Canton is anticipated shortly. The Chinese are apprehensive and business is becoming stagnant. The police have been reinforced. Stores of bombs are frequently found in the city.

Close of Inland Navigation.

KINGSTON, Dec. 1.—The last cargo of grain consigned to the Montreal Transportation Co. arrived at the elevator Saturday when the steamer Keyport discharged 85,000 bushels of grain. This season the local elevator handled 11,085,000 bushels of grain, which figures are about the same as last year.

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF
BAYARD VEILLER

"Garson has confessed!"

Mary turned and confronted the inspector, and answered without the least trace of fear, but the firmness of knowledge:

"Oh, no, he hasn't!"

"What's the reason he hasn't?" Burke roared out wrathfully.

"Because he didn't do it."

"Well, he says he did it!"

Mary, in her turn, resorted to a bit of finesse, in order to learn whether or not Garson had been arrested.

"But how could he have done it, when he went"— she began.

"Where did he go?"

"You ought to know, since you have arrested him, and he has confessed."

Burke was frantic over being worsted thus. To gain a diversion, he reverted to his familiar bullying tactics.

"Who shot Griggs?" he shouted.

"My husband shot a burglar," Mary said languidly. "Was his name Griggs?"

"Oh, you know better than that," Burke declared, truculently. "You see, we've traced the Maxim silencer. Garson himself bought it up in Hartford."

For the first time, Mary was caught off her guard.

"But he told me"— she began, then checked herself.

"What did he tell you?" Burke questioned.

"He told me that he had never seen one. Surely, if he had had anything of the sort, he would have shown it to me."

Burke pressed the button on the desk, and, when the doorman appeared, ordered that the prisoner be returned to her cell.

"I suppose," Mary said, "that it's useless for me to claim my constitutional rights, and demand to see a lawyer?"

"Yes," Burke agreed, "you've guessed it right, the first time."

Cassidy came hurrying in with a grin of satisfaction on his stolid face.

"Say, chief," the detective said with animation, "we've got Garson."

Burke asked Gilder and the district attorney to withdraw, while he should have a private conversation with the prisoner.

"Now," he said when they were alone together. "I'm going to be your friend."

"Are you?" Mary's tone was noncommittal.

"Yes," Burke declared, heartily. "And I mean it! Give up the truth about young Gilder. I know he shot Griggs, of course. But I'm not taking any stock in that burglar story—not a little bit! No court would either. What was really back of the killing? Was he jealous of Griggs? Well, that's what he might do then. He's always been a worthless young cub. A rotten deal like this would be about his gait, I guess. Tell me, now, why did he shoot Eddie Griggs?"

There was coarseness a-plenty in the inspector's pretense, but it possessed a solitary fundamental virtue; it played on the heart of the woman whom he questioned, aroused it to wrath in defense of her mate. In a second, all poise fled from this girl whose soul was blossoming in the blest realization that a man loved her purely, unselfishly. Her words came stumbling in their haste.

"He didn't kill him! He didn't kill him!" she fairly hissed. "Why, he's the most wonderful man in the world. You shan't hurt him! Nobody shall hurt him! I'll fight to the end of my life for Dick Gilder!"

Burke was beaming joyously.

"Well, that's just what I thought," he said, with smug content. "And now, then, who did shoot Griggs? We've got every one of the gang. They're all crooks. See here," he went on, with a sudden change to the respectful in his manner, "why don't you start fresh? I'll give you every chance in the world. I'm dead on the level with you this time."

By now Mary had herself well in hand, again vastly ashamed of the short period of self betrayal caused by the official's artifice against her heart. As she listened to the inspector's assurances, the mocking expression of her face was not encouraging to that astute individual, but he persevered manfully.

"Just you wait," he went on cheerfully, "and I'll prove to you that I'm on the level about this, that I'm really your friend. There was a letter came for you to your apartment. My men brought it down to me. I've read it. Here it is. I'll read it to you!"

He picked up an envelope, which had been lying on the desk, and drew out the single sheet of paper it contained. Mary watched him, wondering much more than her expression revealed over this new development. Then, as she listened, quick interest touched her features to a new life.

This was the letter:

> I can't go without telling you how sorry I am. There won't never be a time that I won't remember it was me got you sent up; that you did time in my place. I ain't going to forgive myself ever, and I swear I'm going straight always. Your true friend. HELEN MORRIS.

For once, Burke showed a certain delicacy. When he had finished the reading, he said nothing for a long minute.

Mary's eyes were luminous in the joy of the realization that for her, after all, rehabilitation might be in a measure possible, though nothing could ever repay the degradation of years infinitely worse than lost.

Burke's harsh voice, cadenced to a singular sympathy, broke in on her reverie of pleasure and of pain.

"You knew this?" he inquired.

"Yes, two days ago."

"Did you tell old Gilder?" he asked.

Mary shook her head in negation.

"What would be the use?" she reminded him. "I had no proof. No one would believe me."

"They'd believe this. Why, this letter sets you clear. If old Gilder should see this letter, there's nothing he wouldn't do to make amends to you. He's a square guy himself, if it comes to that, even if he was hard on you. Why, this letter wipes out everything."

Then, the insistent question beating at his brain forced him to speak roughly, building hope on the letter's inestimable worth to the woman before him.

"Who killed Griggs?"

There was no reply. And, presently, he went on, half ashamed over his own intrigue against her.

"Say," he said, and, for once, his voice was curiously suppressed, "you tell me who shot Griggs, and I'll show this letter to old Gilder. Now, listen," he cried eagerly. "I give you my word of honor that anything you say in here is just between you and me." Unconsciously his eyes darted to the window, behind which the stenographer was busy with his notes.

That single involuntary glance was enough for the keen instinct of the woman to make a guess as to the verity.

"Just tip me off to the truth," Burke went on ingratiatingly, "and I'll get the necessary evidence in my own way. Now, there's nobody here but just you and me. Come on, now—put me wise!"

"Are you sure no one will ever know?"

"Nobody but you and me." Burke declared, all agog with anticipation of victory at last. "I give you my word!"

Mary met the gaze of the inspector fully. In the same instant, she flashed on him a smile that was dazzling, the smile of a woman triumphant in her mastery of the situation. Her face was radiant, luminous with honest mirth.

She spoke in a most casual voice, despite the dancing delight in her face. The tones were drawled in the matter of fact fashion of statement that leads a listener to answer without heed to the exact import of the question, unless very alert indeed. This is what she said:

"I'm not speaking loud enough, am I, stenographer?"

And that industrious writer of shorthand notes, absorbed in his task, answered instantly from his hidden place in the corridor.

"No, ma'am, not quite."

Mary laughed aloud, while Burke sat dumfounded. She rose swiftly, and went to the nearest window, and with a pull at the cord sent the shade flying upward. There was revealed the busy stenographer, bent over his pad. A groan of distress burst from him, and he fled the place in ignominious rout.

The smiling Mary was returned to her cell.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Confession.

BURKE pressed the button call and ordered the doorman to send in Cassidy. When the detective appeared he asked:

"Does Garson know we've arrested the Turner girl and young Gilder?" And, when he had been answered in the negative: "Or that we've got Chicago Red and Dacey here?"

"No," Cassidy replied. "He hasn't been spoken to since we made the collar. He seems worried," the detective volunteered.

"He'll be more worried before I get through with him!" he growled. He regarded Cassidy speculatively. "Do you remember the third degree Inspector Burns worked on McGloin? Well," he went on, as the detective nodded assent, "that's what I'm going to do to Garson. He's got imagination, that crook! The things he don't know about are the things he's afraid of. After he gets in here, I want you to take his pals one after the other, and lock them up in the cells there in the corridor. The shades on the corridor windows here will be up, and Garson will see them taken in. The fact of their being there will set his imagination to working overtime, all right."

Burke reflected for a moment, and then issued the final directions for the execution of his latest plot.

"When you get the buzzer from me, you have young Gilder and the Turner woman sent in. Then, after a while, you'll get another buzzer. When you hear that, come right in here, and tell me that the gang has squealed. I'll do the rest. Bring Garson here in just five minutes. Tell Dan to come in."

As the detective went out, the doorman entered, and thereat Burke proceeded with the further instructions necessary to the carrying out of his scheme.

"Take the chairs out of the office, Dan," he directed, "except mine and one other—that one!" He indicated a chair standing a little way from one end of his desk. "Now, have all the shades up." He chuckled as he added: "That Turner woman saved you the trouble with one."

He returned to his chair, and when the door opened he was to all appearances busily engaged in writing.

"Here's Garson, chief," Cassidy announced.

"Hello, Joe!" Burke exclaimed, with a seeming air of careless friendliness, as the detective went out, and Garson stood motionless just within the door.

"Sit down a minute, won't you?" the inspector continued affably. He did not look up from his writing as he spoke.

BALLAD OF SIMPLE SUSAN.

SIMPLE SUSAN went a-fishing
For to catch a whale,
Wore a costly Paris bonnet
With a spangled veil,

Wore a pair of high heeled slippers
And her silken hose,
Other things wore Simple Susan,
As you may suppose.

Wore her newest, tightest pattern
Tubb skirt with a slit.
As a dress display fair Susan
Certainly was "it."

Susan wore her hair in frizzes
And made up her face;
Then she motored off a-fishing
With a languid grace.

Susan didn't take a rod or
Reel or creel or hooks,
And for bait she just depended
On her bonny looks.

Simple Susan went a-fishing.
Luck? Well, pretty fair—
Went a-fishing in the city—
Caught a millionaire!

A Baby's Party.

Mothers who wish to celebrate the first anniversary of the baby's birthday should give a party after the following suggestions:

All the guests should be mothers, who can also bring their babies, and the invitations should be sent out to the infants themselves with a note to the effect that "you can bring your mother with you if you like."

Other guests may be invited, but it is understood that all are to be baby worshipers, as the party is not to be spoiled by the presence of cynics.

The tea table should be decorated with little cradles of gilded wickerwork filled with the appropriate bloom of the month and tied with a lover's knot of satin ribbon to harmonize. In the center should be an arch of flowers towering above the baby's birthday cake, decorated with its one white candle, or, as some say, two, one to be the "life candle" and to be kept for the second birthday cake.

A postcard photograph of the baby, with the date of its birth in silver letters beneath, should be given to each guest and a small knot of flowers presented to all the babies assembled. One of the features of the afternoon is the baby guessing competition, in which every mother takes part.

Across the doorway is hung a curtain with a hole large enough to contain a baby's hand. One at a time each baby thrusts its fingers through this hole, and the mothers are asked to identify the child.

A prize of a baby's bib or a dainty pillowcase may be given, and the mother who makes the most mistakes is awarded a foolscap.

SCREAMED WITH THE TERRIBLE PAIN

"Fruit-a-tives" Completely Cured Distressing Kidney Trouble.

ST. THOMAS, ONT., April 1st, 1913.
"In 1911, I was laid up with Kidney Trouble and not able to get out of my chair. Had tried many kidney remedies without satisfactory results. The pain was excruciating and my screams could be heard on the street. One day a friend from Ottawa came to see me, and when he found me in such poor health, said he would send me a sample of "Fruit-a-tives", which he did and I commenced taking them. The results were so apparent with the first few doses that I continued to take "Fruit-a-tives" and was completely restored to my normal state of health. I would strongly advise anyone suffering with Kidney Trouble to take "Fruit-a-tives" and cure themselves" CHARLES CALVEART.

TURNBULL BUILDING ELEVATOR

Aldermen Take Different Views and Application is Granted

DOORS CLOSE 11 A.M.

Provision for Pedestrian Traffic and Conduit Work

New light shed on the application of the Toronto Savings and Loan Company to provide a freight elevator in the sidewalk on Simcoe street, for the Turnbull building when the matter was discussed by the City Council last night.

In the width of the sidewalk the elevator top will occupy 5 feet 2 inches. There will be sufficient space for pedestrians to pass. The sidewalk will not be blocked with boxes and the company accepts all liability in case of accident. Sufficient provision will be made for city conduit work.

When these facts were placed before Council the application was granted.

Mr. Wight and Mr. Tuesley appeared on behalf of the application. Mr. Wight pointed out that it was at his request, the Company was providing the elevator. He thought the nominal rental of $1 per year, instead of 2 cents per square foot per year was sufficient.

In the resolution passed the rental was fixed at 1 cent per sugare foot per year. The elevator must not be used after 11 a.m.

Ald Anderson continued his objection to the steel doors of the elevator which, in his opinion, would be dangerous.

"This is the time to fix the matter" said Ald. Duffus who suggested that the doors be of corrugated iron.

Ald Duncan remarked that as the company would be liable in case of accident, they would look after precautionary measures.

AFTER THE BAZAAR

Rev. Jas. Price is Grateful to Those Who Assisted

Rev. Jas. Price wishes to thank the very many kind friends who assisted in organizing and otherwise helping in the work of the bazaar.

It is impossible for him to thank all the kind friends personally. Were he to attempt it, he says, it would require two or three columns of this paper, but there is only one exception Mr. Price wishes to make and that is to thank St. John's people for their great efforts in behalf of St. George's Church. Without St. John's great help there could have been no bazaar.

THE MEN'S CLUB AT ST. LUKE'S

Sidney Gibbs is Elected President For the Year

The Men's Club of St. Luke's church elected officers last night as follows:

Hon. President—Rev F. J. Sawers.
Hon. Vice-Presidents—J. J. Turner, Jr.; George Curtis, Claude Rogers.
President—Sidney Gibbs.
Vice-President—Arthur Knott.
Sec.-Treas. Robert Heafield.
Executive Committee—Robert Long, Gordon Butcher, Clifford Cox, Gordon Logan, Edwin Heap, Arthur Moffatt, and Ira Huggins.

ALD. LANGFORD NOT IN FAVOR OF SPENDING MORE MONEY ON THE FIRE DEPARTMENT

Some Good Arguments for and Against the Acquisition of Motor Chemical and Hose Apparatus

Ald. Wm. Langford fought a lone battle at the Council meeting last night. The North Ward representative objected to the expenditure contained in the Fire, Water and Light Committee report by the recommendation that a by-law be prepared authorizing the borrowing of $8,000 by debentures to pay for a motor-driven combination chemical and hose engine.

The recommendation was adopted and afterwards the by-law for presentation to the ratepayers was passed, with the only negative vote being recorded by Ald. Langford.

Ald Langford pointed out that $12,000 had been spent on the fire department last year. It was $15,840 this year. This was an extraordinary expense in his opinion. It was $3,000 more than last year.

"Is that not sufficient, gentlemen?" asked Ald. Langford.

"I recognize that we should have a good department, but it seems to me we should go slow. We don't want to add to the tax rate next year.

When asked if he did not vote for the increase in the salaries of firemen. Ald. Langford said yes.

"Well, that's where most of the extra expense comes in!" remarked Ald. Duncan.

"I recognized the high cost of living, and that the men were not getting any too much," returned Ald. Langford.

THEN THEY LAUGHED.

"This is quite consistent at the last meeting of the year," said Ald. Gordon, whereupon he who held the floor replied that he was not speaking for election purposes. He was in the Council for another year.

"Go ahead. Ald. Langford," encouraged the Mayor.

"I'm trying to put myself in the place of the working man in his little home," continued Ald. Langford. His taxes are rising rapidly every year. The taxes have been doubled in perhaps the last fifteen years. The workingman feels it. I have sympathy for the man who struggles along trying to make both ends meet."

THE MAIN OBJECT.

Ald. Gillespie said that the committee in making the recommendation was thinking of the men on the outskirts of the city. By the introduction of the motor engine, considerable money would be saved in insurance and fire loss. The motor would be able to get to the fire more quickly than the horses.

Ald. Duncan said two experienced men would be necessary to look after the apparatus. There was also other expense.

THE PEOPLE CAN DECIDE.

In the opinion of Ald. Gordon there was nothing more efficient for the outlying districts than this same system. The people could decide whether or not they want it. He felt that the outlying districts would support the by-law.

"Is it the opportune time?" questioned Ald. Johnston, when he noted that the other money by-laws would be before the people.

"I don't believe the people want to keep down the taxes when it will cost money to do so," remarked Ald. Green. He expressed himself in favor of more fire protection and the acquisition of the combined equipment.

Ald Duffus held that the industries in outlying districts deserved all the fire protection the city could give. They were at the mercy of the horses. The water did ten times more damage than smoke. With the engine, the firemen could get to the fire more quickly and tons and tons of water would not have to be used.

PENNY WISE, ETC."

"How would the poor man be if 400 men were laid off because of fire at the C.G.E.," said Ald. Buller, in speaking in favor of the recommendation. It was not a new question. "It will be penny wise and pound foolish if we don't put this by-law before the people," quoth the People's candidate.

Ald. Anderson said it was absolutely necessary that the firemen should have means of getting to the fires in the early stages.

CHARLOTTE STREET CHURCH LADIES' AID SCORE AGAIN

Very Large Audience For First Presentation of Their Unique Entertainment

Between four hundred and fifty and five hundred people assembled in the Sunday School room of the Charlotte street Methodist church last night for the unique and exceedingly fine entertainment put on by the Ladies' Aid Society in connection with the church. The auditorium was filled and standing room alone could be obtained in the gallery.

It was plain that only after untiring work of those ladies in charge could the entertainment be put on in such an up-to-date way. A large Union Jack hung over the stage which was rather peculiarly fitted suitable to the style of play. One outstanding accoutrement was an old fashioned spinning wheel which attracted considerable attention.

The play, which reminded one of a tableau, was entitled "An Afternoon Tea in a Friendly Village in 1662," thus the costumes were of the old style and the quaker bonnet was very prominent.

Mrs. Kelly, as Irish as the name sounds and with a brogue like a Fenian, was a genial old lady who was fond of company. In the first act she has a few friends with her, and entertains them in the good old fashioned way. Does she show her friends picture post cards? Hardly not. The family album is the point of interest and the pictures were represented by posers.

One after another she exhibits her relatives going from her grandfather and grandmother down to her one time soldier lover who is represented by Fire Chief Howard.

The Irish cry was in evidence when the picture of a deceased sister was exhibited but true to the characteristes of the race she was representing, a good joke drove away all sorrow.

In the second act Mrs. Kelly has her own "pals" invited to become acquainted with her friends from from the city, Mrs. Vernon and Mrs. Wood. A great deal of amusement was given when Mrs. Vernon undertook to incite a little of the "We-Want-Our-Rights" spirit into them for they were all of the "I'm from Missouri and you gotta show me," type. While men were being hammered around, the Deacon suddenly arrives and, after much blarney is handed out, Miss Jane Skining, a man-hater, beats all her rivals and captures that distinguished person.

In addition to the play, solos were rendered by Miss A. Richardson, Mrs. A. F. Lane, Mrs. W. Lyle and Messrs. Fleming and Downey. Mrs. Christie gave several recitations.

Miss Mabel Charry, the church organist was the accompaniste for the evening and also gave selections of "Old Airs" between the acts.

The participants in the entertainment were:

BREWER BROWN'S EARLY LIFE AND HIS CONVERSION

Scenes of His Life Reproduced at The Temple

The sordid side of life attendant upon nights spent in the gutter, and carousals in bar rooms and heart-rending scenes that take place in the life of the drunkard, were reproduced by Brewer Brown at the Salvation Army Temple last evening before a packed house. Envoy Brown who was once a pugilist, and also as deep in the gutter as any human being could possibly be, gave a vivid reproduction of his life and that of his wife and children.

The reproduction which consisted of how Brown came home drunk and kicked his family around was quite realistic. How the landlord was always after his money and how the family was many times on the verge of starvation was also a prominent issue in the life of the stout little Army man. Fights and "raising rough house" with the bar keeper and the fights with the police were not unusual.

The story of how the Salvation Army sisters saved his family from starvation was told with a vividness that depicted the average life of the man who was a victim to drink.

The Army carrying on their good work in front of the saloon and the rescue of Brown from the depths was carried out as though real. The conversion of the pals of Brown including the barkeeper, the bums and others following the conversion of Brown was very effectively told.

The reproduction then went on to show the life of the converts while against the drink habit struggle against the drink habit. The closing scene was that of the happy reunion of the old friends, once drunkards and now engaged in the Army work.

Brewer Brown was assisted by the members of his family, while Bandmaster Peryer made an ideal landlord of the Dew Drop Inn. Bands-Bert Gray as the landlord was very fine, and the assistance of Bandsman F. Gandy as policeman, was also well done.

WORK IN CHINA

Miss Quinn Told of Her Work Among Chinese

Miss Quinn delighted a large and appreciative audience at St. Paul's church last evening. The occasion was a very interesting illustrated lecture on her life and surroundings as a missionary under the Christian Missionary Alliance in China. The graphic description of the valuable assistance of her boys, her helpers, and the modes of the natives connected with Miss Quinn's district greatly impressed the audience. Miss Quinn did not point out the horrors of the land but told of the marvellous work being carried on amongst the natives.

Miss Quinn was a teacher at St. Paul's about fifteen years ago.

Some engagements are announced by the mother and denounced by the father.

Miss Ina Shepherd who has charge of the clearing house in Birmingham, Ala., is probably the first woman in the United States to hold that position.

PRAISE FOR GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

I have just returned from a business trip to the West including Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon and Edmonton, and at the latter point, having a day or two at the week end to spare, took the opportunity of running down over the Grand Trunk Pacific Line to Tete Jaune, B.C. The sight of Mount Robson alone repaid for the trip, but the scenery generally was magnificent. The track was as smoothe as some much older roads in other parts of the Continent, an dit is marvellous how the Grand Trunk Pacific route was discovered, which gave almost a level grade for the entire distance through the mountains, thereby avoiding the steep grades, long tunnels, and snow sheds which are necessary owing to routes of some of the other railroads crossing the Rockies. The service the Grand Trunk Pacific is offering to the travelling public between Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Edmonton far exceeded my expectations. The standard Sleeping Cars and also Tourist Cars are the most modern type an dthe service of the Dining Cars is beyond criticism. The courtesy and attention shown to passengers by all your employees on the train is of a nature that commended itself very highly to me. The time of the Grand Trunk Pacific trains between Winnipeg and Edmonton is several hours shorter than by other routes, but although I travelled on two or three different trains, found them always on time, an din view of the excellent track could not but be impressed by the fact that running time between Winnipeg and Edmonton could be reduced very much if necessary and the shorter time schedule maintained. "The McDonald," the new Grand Trunk Pacific Hotel at Edmonton is beautifully located on the heights overlooking the Saskatchewan River an dits opening next year is being looked foward to by many. 1d

TO JAIL FOR THIRTY DAYS

Hubert Hemmings Forgot to Settle for His Board Bill

TOLD "WHOPPERS"

Now He Must Wait to Finish His Boarding House Romance

As a result of his "millionaire" stories, Herbert Hemmings, an Englishman, was fined $23.75 in police court this morning, and lacking sufficient funds he will spend the next thirty days on the hill and will have the pleasure of eating his Christmas dinner at Castle Nesbitt.

Hemmings was charged with obtaining board and lodging under false pretences. His victim, Mrs. Anna Edwards, claimed that on the 28th of October the prisoner came to board with her. He claimed he owned a farm on which he had paid the sum of $2,000 near Jackson Park. The farm was supposed to be equipped with all needs of the farmer. He excused himself from living on the farm in the winter as he liked the city the better in the winter.

A day or so before this the man had come to the house looking for a housekeeper, she had asked her daughter it she would like to take the position, but the daughter, who gave evidence this morning, refused to accept the job.

A ROMANCE.

A girl was boarding at the home of the complainant about this time and the prisoner and the girl, it is said, promptly fell in love with each other and the daughter of the boarding house mistress said they were always hugging and kissing each other. One evening the girl was found missing from her room and upon the landlady investigating, the girl, she said, was found asleep in the arms of the prisoner in a chair. The girl was told that she must leave, but the man interfered and said that he loved the girl and that he would pay a dollar a week more for her board if she was allowed to stay. He then sent, or rather claimed he sent, a cablegram to the Old Country for fifty pounds.

Hemmings got up one morning and after asking what they had for breakfast, he said he would go out and get something nice. He left and was not seen again until last evening when he was identified in the cells by the ladies. On the eve of his unexpected departure he had only paid $3. Since his departure he had shaved off his moustache.

The prisoner admitted owing the $10 for board and said that he would pay it as soon as he got work. He also admitted having no farm or ever having owned a farm.

NAMED IT RAVENNA.

Just When the Ohio Town Was Going to Be Called Tappan.

Shortly after the Revolution Benjamin Tappan, son of a wealthy Boston merchant and the original owner of what is now Portage county, O., entered his father's tract in the west and spent the winter there. Other settlers joined him, and a settlement was begun, which had the dignity of a town at a time when a single log cabin at each place marked the present sites of the cities of Cleveland and Buffalo The place was one of singular natural beauty, and the question of a name soon arose.

Now, it happend that at this time a younger brother of Benjamin Tappan's and his wife were in Italy and came upon the old town of Ravenna. Delighted with the place, the young bride expressed to her husband the wish that somewhere in the new world there might arise a town worthy to bear the name of the wonderful old Italian city.

The husband immediately thought of his brother in the Ohio wilds and at once dispatched a letter in which he pictured the beauties of the Italian city and expressed the wish that the town then arising in the wilderness be named in its honor.

Many months later Benjamin Tappan, despairing of finding a suitable name for the town, was about to yield to the wishes of his neighbors and bestow the name of Tappan upon it when the letter arrived. So, instead of Tappan, the town was named Ravenna, which name it still proudly bears.—Ladies' Home Journal.

FAREWELLS AND GIFTS AT SPRINGVILLE CHURCH TO DR. MARSH AND FAMILY

On the Eve of Their Departure for Holstien, the Congregation and Friends Gather to Say Goodbye

A large number of people journeyed from Peterborough to Springville last evening to bid good-bye to Rev. Dr. Marsh and his family who are moving, after seven years sojourn at Springville manse, to Holstein, Ont. No further evidence was needed of the regard in which Dr. Marsh is held by, not only his own church but by all classes throughout the district, than the representative gathering that crowded the little church on the highway at Springville last night.

The drive sheds at the back of the church overflowed with rigs, bright autos illuminated the roadway and a special bus was chartered to carry some of those who went from Peterborough.

REV. ROBERT POGUE

Rev Robert Pogue of St. Paul's church occupied the chair, and a big and varied program of vocal and instrumental music was provided. An orchestra from Peterboro played during the evening. Professor Renwick and Mrs. Renwick also contributed to the program, along with a male voice quartet from George street church. Miss Logan of St. Paul's church played two violin solos and Miss Clarke gave two readings. Altogether the musical entertainment was very much appreciated.

The program was interspersed with brief speeches by various ministers and laymen.

Rev Robert Pogue at the outset said that they had met together with mingled feelings; they had come to enjoy a social evening but that it was to be the last of its kind as they had met to say good-bye to Dr. Marsh, as pastor of Springville congregation. He said that it would be long before Springville had a pastor of Dr. Marsh's ability and attainments. That not only the congregation but the Presbytery would feel his loss.

REV. MR. BUTLER

Rev Mr. Butler of Fraserville, said that he was glad the churches were coming together in brotherly communion. The Christian ministry had gone a long way along the pathway of co-operation. He had the greatest brotherly affection for the Presbyterian church. Preachers may come and preachers may go but the church goes on forever.

REV. MR. WICKETT

Rev Mr. Wickett, Methodist minister from Cavanville, said he was pleased to realize that the most kindly and affectionate spirit had ever existed between Springville and Fraserville. He had enjoyed Dr. Marsh's association and sincerely regretted his departure. The two churches may differ on some points; he, personally, liked the itenerancy of the Methodist ministry, but on essentials they were at one. He had appreciated Dr. Marsh and his talented family and he wished them God's blessing and every success in the truest sense of the term.

MR. T.C. ELLIOT

Mr T.C. Elliot of Peterboro made a few genial and interesting remarks. Referring to the Presbyterians and Methodists, he said the Presbyterian Church dated further back than any other, that Adam and Eve wore the kilts and when Joseph was put into the pit his brethren looked up and saw the camels a'coming. He said the saddest things were the partings, but we did not know the full value of our friends until they were taken from us. Selfishness was one of the greatest gifts of God. We are selfish enough to want to keep Dr. Marsh. Dr. Marsh had taught us that the world was bigger than we had thought it was. With the sincerest heartfelt emotion we bid him and his family God's speed.

MR. R. R. HALL.

Mr. R. R. Hall spoke at some length upon the value of Dr. Marsh's work in Peterborough as a man of science and an astronomer. He said: "We can all take off our hats to Dr. Marsh." He had known him for many years, and had found him to be one of the most interesting men he had ever met. The study of astronomy had been a greater blessing to mankind than many people realized. To the spectrum was due the discovery of radium, which promised to be a very effective medium in curing disease. He personally owed a great debt to Dr. Marsh, and felt he was losing a personal friend. He joined with every heart and soul in Springville in wishing him God-speed.

PRESENTATION TO MRS. MARSH

After a closing solo by John Marsh, Mrs. Saunders and Mrs. Macintosh presented Mrs. Marsh with a very valuable mink muff, and read the following address:

Dear Mrs. Marsh:

It is with sincere regret that we meet here to-night to say farewell to you all.

During the past seven years you have spent in our midst, we have ever found you a true friend, cheerful and ever ready to encourage us, and we know we have been greatly helped by your example.

We feel that it is owing to your leadership and untiring and unselfish efforts that our societies have been so successful and helpful. We can assure you that your labors amongst us have been greatly blessed, and we know that your removal will be a loss that will be greatly felt in our neighborhood.

We are glad of the consolation that you will be bettering yourselves by the change, and it would be selfish of us to wish you to remain.

We earnestly pray that God may bless and prosper you in your new home, and that you may have many useful years in His service.

We ask you to accept this gift as a mark of the high esteem in which you are held by us.

Signed on behalf of the ladies of Springville Congregation.

MRS. J. MacINTOSH.
MRS. A. E. SANDERSON.

Miss Duncan and Miss White then presented Miss Marsh with an address and a life membership certificate of the W.M.S. to which Miss Marsh made a gracious and feeling reply

Mr Wilson and Mr. Fowler read the following illuminated address to Dr. John Marsh and presented him with a purse of gold:

Mr John Marsh and Miss Mary Marsh. From the members of the choir of Springville Presbyterian Church.

It is with feelings of deep regret we realize that the associations which we so thoroughly enjoyed from the commencement thereof are now about to cease, and that you, by your response to the call of duty to other scenes, are about to leave our midst. We, as a choir, therefore desire to express our sincere appreciation of the very great interest you have taken in the service of song; also, by our association you have, through your high ideals, developed within us a desire for noble service and forged Heaven's strongest chain, friendship. In Mr. John Marsh we recognize the stewardship of special talents and thankfully acknowledge your fidelity to the duties of organist so proficiently and faithfully rendered. We have found in you, Miss Marsh, the same noble qualities and extend to you our thanks for service rendered in song. We especially appreciate the influence of your associations. This influence has so permeated us that by your removal from amongst us a discord in the harmonies of service has been caused. We unitedly invoke Heaven's choicest benedictions to accompany you through life; may your achievements heretofore be but the prelude of a grander and nobler chorus in which we may all again unite. If not mid earthly scenes, may it be our happy lot to blend again our voices in praising him who was dead and is now alive, in one Grand Anthem, where Friendships never are severed and parting are unknown.

Rev Dr. Marsh then spoke a few final words. He said his affection for the people of Springville had been so great that it was one of the trials of his life to separate from them. The congregation had rallied round him and had done more good than he had done them. He felt keenly leaving his many friends in Peterborough, but he was by no means going out of their life, and hoped to renew many times his old association. He would visit Peterborough on December 16th to lecture before the local Astronomical Society.

A lunch and social time was enjoyed in the manse after the meeting by a number of friends of Dr. Marsh and family, closing a very interesting and enjoyable evening.

Dr Marsh and his family must travel to Holstein to-day with pleasant memories and with the feeling that, though they have left friends behind them, the love and esteem and good wishes of Springville and Peterboro friends follow them into their new home and sphere of labor.

Is It Possible to Evangelize the World in This Generation?

This Message Is Intended Specially for Professing Christians

What Is Meant by Evangelizing the World?

THE GLORIOUS POINT ABOUT THE MISSIONARY SITUATION IS THE FACT THAT IT IS NOW DEEMED POSSIBLE TO EVANGELIZE THE WORLD IN THIS GENERATION.

People sometimes ask what this means. They desire to know if it is expected that all the heathen will be led to become professing Christians within the lifetime of people now living?

Unfortunately no. That is not expected. Here at home we have thousands of people who have heard the Gospel Message but who have refused to accept it. They prefer lives of sin. Having once heard the message in its fullness the responsibility for the final decision rests with the individual.

WHAT WE DESIRE TO ACCOMPLISH IS TO SO MULTIPLY OUR FORCES, AT HOME AND ABROAD, THAT WITHIN THE LIFETIME OF PEOPLE NOW LIVING EVERY PERSON IN THE WORLD SHALL HAVE HEARD THE GOSPEL MESSAGE OF SALVATION UNTO ETERNAL LIFE AND BE GIVEN AN OPPORTUNITY TO MAKE A DECISION FOR JESUS CHRIST.

A PRACTICAL IDEAL

About 15 years ago men, in lage numbers first began to realize their responsibility to missions. In 1906 the Laymen's Missionary Movement was launched. Even before this keen, shrewd business men had become interested. They demanded that the whole missionary movement should be placed on a business basis. It was.

One of the first moves made was to consult leading authorities in all the great missionary fields. They were asked to estimate how many missionaries in addition to native assistants, would be required so lead the missionary enterprise as to accomplish the evangelization of the world in this generation.

THE REPLIES OF THESE AUTHORITIES WERE COMPILED. THE AVERAGE OF THEIR ESTIMATES WAS FOUND. IT WAS THAT THE ONE MISSIONARY TO EVEY 50,000 HEATHEN WOULD BE SUFFICIENT. TO PROVIDE THIS NUMBER OF MISSIONARIES THEN BECAME THE GOAL OF THE MISSIONARY MOVEMENT. IT IS OUR GOAL TO-DAY.

WHAT THE TASK INVOLVES

In 1900 it was estimated that there were approximately 1,200,000,000 people in non-Christian lands. Fully three fourths of them had not had an opportunity to learn of Jesus Christ. This represents one half of the human race.

There are about 18,000 male and female missionaries in the foreign field. Allowing one missionary to every 50 heathen it will require 18,000 more missionaries to evangelize the world in this generation. Allowing two missionaries to every 50,000 heathen it will require 36,000 additional missionaries.

On the latter basis the Protestant Christians of Canada should send out about 1,600 missionaries.

This is possible. It calls all Christians to service and to prayer.

The Difficulties Can Be Overcome

THERE ARE TREMENDOUS DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY OF EVANGELIZING THE HEATHEN. IT IS BELIEVED THAT THE DIFFICULTIES CAN BE SURMOUNTED.

NEVER BEFORE IN THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD WAS THE TIME SO RIPE FOR A GREAT ADVANCE OF THE MISSIONARY MOVEMENT IN FOREIGN FIELDS AS AT PRESENT. WHAT IS REQUIRED IS THAT CHRISTIANS AT HOME SHALL DO THEIR PART.

DIFFICULTIES REMOVED

DURING THE RECENT PAST MANY OF THE GREATEST OBSTACLES TO THE SPREAD OF CHRISTIANITY HAVE BEEN REMOVED.

Until within the past few years it used to take the missionaries weeks and months to reach the out-lying mission fields. NOW MOST OF THESE FIELDS CAN BE REACHED IN HOURS WHERE IT USED TO TAKE DAYS AND WEEKS.

The greatest railway enterprises of the time are those now building or projected in non-Christian lands. The Siberian railway has brought hundreds of millions of people in the far east, a month nearer to the Christian nations of western Europe. The Cape to Cairo Railway, and the lines being stretched from the east coast of Africa are opening up the "Dark Continent" from end to end. China now has 6,000 miles of railway lines. Similar transformations have been or are being effected in other fields.

AT ONE TIME JAPAN, CHINA, KOREA AND OTHER LARGE SECTIONS OF COUNTRY WERE CLOSED TO MISSIONARIES. NOW THEIR DOORS ARE WIDE OPEN AND THEY INVITE THE MISSIONARIES TO ENTER. FOR THE FIRST TIME IN THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY PRACTICALLY THE WHOLE WORLD IS OPEN TO MISSIONARIES.

For many years it was thought that owing to their dense ignorance it would take several generations of education to fit the heathen to understand and accept the gospel message. It is now known that less than one generation is sufficient to bring heathen to Christ in any of the non-Christian countries of the world.

TRANSLATING THE BIBLE

One of the greatest difficulties missionaries have had to contend with has been the translation of the Bible into the almost innumerable heathen dialects. To-day alphabets have been established for and translations of the Bible made into all the chief or conquering languages and into a great many of the second class languages. Translations have been made into the languages which are spoken by 1,200,000,000 people. Translations have to be made still for only 300,000,000. Thus the Bible can now be read in their own language by four-fifths of the heathen people of the world.

"Mountains" of difficulties have thus been removed by faith.

The Resources of the Christian Church

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IS ABUNDANTLY ABLE TO PROVIDE BOTH THE MEANS AND THE WORKERS THAT ARE REQUIRED TO EVANGELIZE THE WORLD IN THIS GENERATION.

The little Moravian Church in 1900 had sent out 2,000 of its members as foreign missionaries. If the members of Protestant Churches in the British Isles, the United States and Canada (not to mention other parts of reformed Christendom) were to do equally as well they would have a force of nearly 400,000 foreign workers. No such number would be required to achieve the evangelization of the world in this generation.

Missionaries estimate that if only one out of every 50 Christian young men and young women who will go through the universities and colleges of Canada and the United States in this generation were to offer themselves for forieign service, the required number of missionaries would be provided. WHEN THE STUDENTS OF EUROPE ARE TAKEN INTO CONSIDERATION IT WILL BE SEEN THAT CHRISTIAN COUNTRIES CAN WELL AFFORD TO SPARE THE NUMBER OF WORKERS MENTIONED. THEIR GOING FORTH WOULD QUICKEN AND BRING RENEWED SPIRITUAL VIGOR TO THE HOME CHURCHES.

AMPLE FUNDS AVAILABLE.

There are some 25,000,000 children in the Sunday Schools of Protestant lands. Were they trained to give even only two cents a week per member, it would yield an amount equal to the present total missionary gifts of Christendom.

Mr. G. T. Manley, of Cambridge University, taking 100,000 as an outside limit of the number of foreign missionaries required, and assuming that Britain's share would be one-third, estimated that the $50,000,000 required to support them would be far more than supplied if each communicant in Great Britain were to contribute four cents a day.

The world would have been evangelized long ago if Christians had perceived the relation of money to the Kingdom, and had accepted their stewardship.

WHAT LEADING MISSIONARIES SAY

Missionaries who have had years of experience in the various non-Christian countries of the world, believe that it is entirely practical to evangelize the world in this generation.

This is what some of them have said:

"If the Church of Christ were what she ought to be, twenty years would not pass till the story of the Cross will be uttered in the ears of every living man."—Simeon Calhoun.

"It is the fault of the Church if from amongst the present rising generation any advance to old age without hearing of Christ and His salvation."—Dr. J. C. R. Ewing, Principal of the Forman Christian College, Lahore, India.

"The professed people of Christ now living have it in their power to give every responsible human being the chance of intelligently accepting Christ as His Saviour from sin."—Rev. J. F. Campbell, Canadian Presbyterian Church, India.

"Let each Christian so resolve and so act that if a sufficient number of others will do likewise, all men before this generation passes away may have an adequate opportunity to know of Christ."—Dr. John R. Mott.

DAYS OF THE PILLORY

TORONTO ONCE HAD STOCKS AND WHIPPING POSTS.

Primitive Devices of Punishment Were In Full Swing In the Old Richmond Street Court House and Prisoners Were Branded In Open Court — Victims of Pillory Were Placed In Machine.

Even so modern a city as Toronto has at least one landmark of dubious reputation. Paris has its Bastile, London its Tower, Oxford its St. Giles, Salem its Witch's Hill, and Toronto its pillory and stocks.

The punishment of lawbreakers by exposure to public scorn in the pillory and stocks goes back to early days. As far back as 1350 a statute was passed requiring the erection of stocks in every town in England for the punishment of persons convicted of fraud, perjury, libel, sedition and other infractions of the law, and for the correction of drunks and vagrants. More serious offences were treated with greater severity.

The stocks was at first used only for male offenders, and women were treated to the ducking-stool—a punishment which consisted in tying the culprit hand and foot to a stool, and either exposing her in some public place or ducking her in water. Later, however, courtesans, common scolds and brawlers were put in the pillory and stocks.

In some cases the heads of the men were shaven and the hair of the women cut off, and the victims were left for hours or even days at a time to the tender mercies of the populace. When in the 17th and 18th centuries political offenders were put in the stocks they were often pelted with eggs and other missiles, and at times subjected to rough usage at the hands of onlookers. On the other hand, there were instances of sympathy having been shown for individuals under punishment at the hands of a tyrannous magistrate.

Offenders such as cheats and pickpockets, for whom the stocks had no terrors, were frequently whipped in public. The culprit was usually tied to the tail of a cart and drawn through the streets, the executioner following him closely with his whip. Whipping also was a common form of punishment for women sentenced to Bridewell Jail.

The pillory had many forms, but the design generally used in England consisted of a frame mounted on a wooden post fixed in a platform raised several feet above the ground, behind which the victim was compelled to stand, with his head and arms protruding through openings made for them. The stocks was of a somewhat similar character, except that the legs were secured in the openings in the frame. In many places in England those two implements of punishment were combined with a whipping-post.

As the pillory and stocks were the recognized forms of punishment in England until far into the eighteenth century, it was natural that they should be introduced into Upper Canada soon after the opening up of the province for settlement.

The law courts in Upper Canada a hundred years ago were surrounded with all the trappings and ceremonial of the highest courts in England. The population was but a mere handful, the court houses were rude log buildings, but the dignity of the courts must be respected, whatever or whoever else might suffer. There was a Vice-Chancellor and a Chief Justice in the court, one or both of whom was usually a knight or baronet, and Chief Justices and barristers galore, all direct importations from Lincoln's Inn, with an Attorney-General and Solicitor-General in the councils of the Lieutenant-Governor at York.

The chief court of the province—the Court of King's Bench — was held in York, the original Parliament Building at the foot of Berkeley street being used until 1813, and after that, until the erection of the court house at the corner of King and Church streets, an old house was used which stood on Richmond street, where the Confederation Life Building now stands.

The early judges who presided over these primitive courts were as severe in the administration of the justice laid down in the law of the day as they were punctilious in the enforcement of the rules of dignity and order in the conduct of the courts. Criminals and offenders brought before them got justice—cold, untempered justice — unmixed with mercy. The pillory and stocks were a constant resource in misdemeanors and minor offences, with flogging and branding, and even the gallows for those of a more serious character. In the old Richmond street court house on many occasions prisoners were branded in open court, the iron being heated in the wood stove which heated the room, and the initial letter of the offence committed burned on the hand of the victim convicted.

In 1803 Lieutenant-Governor Peter Hunter had set apart by proclamation the six-acre block bounded by Church, King, Jarvis, and Front streets for the use of the people of York for the purpose of a public market for the sale of cattle, meats, poultry and other provisions. This square soon became the centre of the life and activity of the town. It was the rendezvous of the citizens, and especially on market days was a busy and animated spot. Public auctions were held here in the open air, and at a later date the authorities opened a public well in the square and fitted it with a town pump.

The market-place, therefore, was the logical spot for the erection of the pillory and stocks, and it is probable, as they were often resorted to, that the farmers from the countryside and the citizens of York and their wives usually found the punishment frames filled on market days with persons sentenced to public exposure.

She Saw Him Passing By.

That the aged are not easily roused to enthusiasm or excitement is well known, but they are not often as calm as the old lady that The Windsor Magazine tells about.

An old man fell from a second story window into the street where an anxious crowd immediately gathered to see whether he was seriously injured. One of his daughters rushed frantically into the first floor room, where his wife sat knitting, and cried:

"Oh, mother, mother, father's fallen from the top of the house into the road! Oh, dear! Oh, dear!"

"Yes, my child," answered the old lady placidly, looking up from her work; "I saw him pass the window."

Army Kills Tigress.

EPERNON, France, Dec. 1.—The tigress which recently escaped from an enclosure where a moving picture of a tiger hunt was being taken, and which caused a panic among the country people in this district, was killed Saturday in the forest by a shot from one of the 1,500 soldiers who had been sent out to hunt the animal. The terror-stricken peasants had for several days been afraid to go into the fields, and had kept their children locked in the houses.

EXPERT ON DEFENCE

Col. Gwatkin Has Had Charge of Organizing Canada's Militia Staff.

Col. Willoughby Garnous Gwatkin who has been appointed Chief of the General Staff of the Canadian Militia in succession to Major-General Colin Mackenzie, is one of a little band of four or five Imperial army officers on the much-abused staff of the Canadian militia, who during the past seven or eight years have been trying to evolve system out of chaos in Canadian defence matters. Just what has been done in the direction of elaborating schemes for mobilization, armament, the expansion of existing units, training, military intelligence (within and beyond our own borders), military surveys, the selection of defensive positions and the preparation of detailed plans for their defence will never be known; for those are things which necessarily have to be kept secret; but this much is no secret; thanks to the efforts of a few enthusiastic, hard-working experts loaned by the War Office to Canada there have been evolved plans for the defence of the Dominion at any point attacked which would be simply invaluable in the event of trouble. As far as the military knowledge (intelligence) of the country is concerned and also all strategical planning, Canada today stands in a position of readiness that she never did before. And none of the experts who have effected this have been more active, more useful, or less obtrusive than Colonel Gwatkin. He was secured for the militia eight years ago by General Lake—a more brilliant staff officer or better judge of men never wore His Majesty's uniform. For four years Col. Gwatkin was director of operations and staff duties, in which position he practically had charge of the organization of the Militia Staff on its present lines, defined the details of the various officers, etc. During this period he for a time acted as administrator of the Corps of Guides, in which organization he has always manifested a great interest.

In 1910 he was called back to England to assume the duties of General Staff Officer of the first grade in the Eastern Command, but a year later, General Lake was instrumental in securing his return to Canada to assume the duties of staff officer in charge of mobilization of the Canadian Militia as at present existing, at full war strength, and also plans for the mobilizing of a force deemed necessary to successfully hold Canada against hostile attack. These plans, it is known, met with great praise from General French and General Hamilton. Col. Gwatkin, who belongs to an English family famous in the church and the army, is fifty-four years of age; but scarcely looks it. In appearance and conversation he might pass more readily for a university professor or a litterateur than a soldier; but a heavy determined chin and an alert eye bespeak the soldier too. His first military service after leaving Sandhurst was in the Manchester Regiment, in which, after holding the appointment of adjutant for some time rose to the rank of major. Taking a course at the staff college at Camberley, he passed with honors and was posted to the staff in Egypt, and later was placed on the headquarters staff of the army in England. He was a D.A.A.G. on the headquarters of the army and did good service in connection with the equipment and despatch of troops to South Africa. Col. Gwatkin is such a fiend for work, and has stuck so close to his special duties that he is not as widely known as most members of the militia staff, but those who do know him esteem him no less for his attractive personal qualities than for his conspicuous professional ability—Family Herald and Weekly Star.

Will Be Largest 'Breaker.

The new ice-breaker, which is to be built by the Canadian Marine Department, will be the largest in the world. It will be used on the St. Lawrence. The Government has adopted the policy of having all such vessels constructed in Canada, and at present two big dredges are being built at Collingwood, a lighthouse and buoy boat at Toronto and a fishery protective boat at Sorel, for use on Lake Manitoba.

Violation by foreign fishermen of fishing regulations on the Pacific Coast has caused the protective fleet to be increased and there have been suggestions to utilize the Niobe and Rainbow for that service.

Impure Linseed Oil.

A bulletin on the analysis of linseed oil has just been issued by Dominion Analyst McGill. In this he states that detection of adulterants owing to their diverse character is far from a simple matter. He advises that large buyers of linseed oil, both boiled and raw, insist on a specification of the article being produced. Adulterants are found to be rosin oil, hydro-carbons, and fish oils, cotton seed oil and soya bean oil.

Out of 53 samples tested 36 were found genuine, 10 of doubtful genuineness, and seven adulterated.

Of six or seven samples recently gathered in Toronto not one was found to be pure.

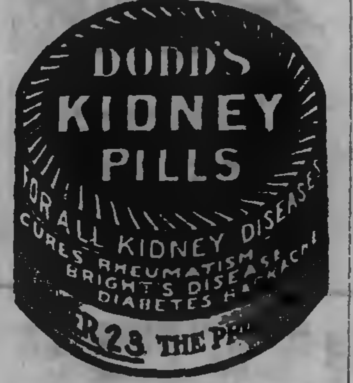
The Mint's Work.

Since the Canadian Mint was opened for business in 1908 silver coinage to the value of $5,710,944 has been produced, comprised as follows: Fifty-cent pieces, $751,285; twenty-five cent, $2,586,196; ten-cent, $1,393,582; five-cent, $970,880. In addition to these a quarter of a million dollars worth of one-cent bronze pieces were minted, $1,500,000 worth of gold sovereigns for the British Government, and Canadian gold pieces to the value of nearly two million dollars.

Still Growing.

The total immigration to Canada during the first seven months, April to October, of the current fiscal year, was 327,913, made up of 128,868 British, 80,330 American and 118,715 from all other countries.

During the seven corresponding months of the last fiscal year the total number was 300,841, composed of 118,497 British, 100,140 American and 82,204 from all other countries. The increase is 9 per cent.



CANADIAN DUCKS.

Something About the Autumn Lure of the Hunter.

Canada's wild ducks are divided into two classes, namely, marsh ducks and open-water ducks. The marsh ducks are, for the most part, homenesters. To this class belong the teal, both green wing and blue wing; the mallard, the black and the grey.

These ducks hold mostly to shallow ponds and reedy water-beds. Many of them nest in the low lands of Northern Ontario and afford good sport any time after the opening of the season—in most provinces, the 15th of September—until the middle of October. Most of the marsh ducks migrate early. Particularly does this hold good of the blue-winged teal, who owns the distinction of being the swiftest-winged of all wild ducks. This bird has been known to attain a speed, in flight, of over ninety miles an hour.

The marsh ducks are shy birds, and either they possess a greater degree of intelligence than their cousins of the open water, or else they are less trusting, for they decoy very poorly.

They fly in little disordered bunches that make it hard for the fowler to "lead on his bird." Marsh ducks are seldom found on open water.

The open water ducks are orderly fellows. They fly in straight lines, with a leader at their head. To this class belongs the redhead, the canvasback, the bluebill, spoonbill, buffle-head, ruddy duck and widgeon. These ducks, with the exception of the ruddy, are all good decoyers, particularly the bluebill, which has been known to fly into the decoys while the shooters were standing up in full view in the blind. Often, too, they will twist about and return to the flock of wooden ducks, above which only a minute or two before deadly toll had been taken of their ranks.

The redhead is without doubt the finest duck that flies, with one single exception, the canvasback. They fly in flocks, usually of from ten to twenty, they are swift and graceful, and while suspicious, are good decoyers.

Wild ducks are very tenacious to life. It is marvelous the amount of heavy shot it takes to bring them down, therefore the necessity of the modern "full-choke" gun.

The open water ducks come into our waters any time after the first of September. Usually, however, the greater number do not arrive until a month later. The fifteenth of October usually shows a goodly number of ducks in the feeding grounds.—Canadian Courier.

The loveliest of enamels come from Norway and they rival those of France.

THE BLUE OF THE SKY.

It Is Caused by the Oxygen in the Air, Says a Scientist.

Professor Spring of the University of Liege has a theory of his own regarding the blue of the sky.

Scientists have tried to explain the blue of the sky ever since the days of Leonardo da Vinci and Sir Isaac Newton. Some have held that it was due to the polarization of the solar light, while others have held that the blueness is due to the reflection, or, rather, the vibration, upon the minute drops of water which the atmosphere holds in suspension or upon the matter in the atmosphere, according to Tyndall.

Professor Spring has rejected all these theories, denying the "dust theory" altogether. He holds with Lord Rayleigh that instead of the dust increasing the blueness it diminishes it greatly. And according to Professor Spring, all of the appearances of blue tints in the atmosphere are explicable when we consider liquid oxygen. "Liquid air" is known to be decidedly blue in color, so the contention that blueness is due to the oxygen in the air seems to be substantiated.

If condensed and liquid air are blue in color it is most probable that the blueness of the sky is due to the oxygen in it.—New York World.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Dec. 1.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, offerings for sale this morning amounted to 1900 cattle, 500 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 300 calves.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for cattle today, but prices were well maintained at the advance noted a week ago on account of the continued scarcity of good stock. There continues to be a steady demand for supplies of common cattle for shipment to the United States, but the volume of trading doing in this direction is by no means as large as it was sometime ago. Demand from butchers was only for small lots to fill actual wants. Packers bought freely, however, and sales of a few loads of choice steers were made at $7.75 to $8 and good at $7.25 to $7.50 per 100 pounds.

Sheep and Lambs Wanted.

The feature of the small meat trade continues to be the strong undertone to the market for sheep and lambs. Prices for the former have scored a further advance of 50c and for the latter 25c per 100 pounds. At the higher range of prices there was a good demand and an active trade was done, with sales of western lambs at $8 to $8.25, and choice ewes at $5.25 to $5.50 per 100 pounds. The trade in calves is quiet, owing to the large falling off in the receipts, but there is a good demand from local buyers for all the choice stock offered at firm prices.

A weaker feeling developed in the local hog market and prices declined another 25c per 100 pounds, but at this reduction there was a keen demand from packers as some of them were short of stock, and an active trade was done with sales of selected lots at $9.25 and straight lots at $9 per 100 pounds weighed off cars.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7.50 to $8.25; do., medium, $6 to $7; do., common, $5 to $5.50; canners, $2.65 to $3.75; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $6.50 to $6.75; do. medium, $5 to $6; do. bulls, $4.50 to $6.25; milkers, choice, each, $85 to $90; do. common and medium, each, $75 to $80; springers, $65 to $70; sheep, ewes, $5.25 to $5.50; bucks and culls, $4.75 to $5; lambs, $7.50 to $8.25; hogs, f.o.b., $9 to $9.25; calves, $5 to $20.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, Dec. 1.—Cattle—Receipts 23,000. Market steady. Beeves, $6.60 to $9.50; Texas steers, $6.75 to $7.70; stockers and feeders, $4.90 to $7.40; cows and heifers, $3.30 to $8.15; calves, $7 to $11.

Hogs—Receipts 37,000. Market weak. Light, $7.15 to $7.80; mixed, $7.45 to $7.95; heavy, $7.50 to $7.97½; rough, $7.50 to $7.65; pigs, $5.10 to $7.15; bulk of sales, $7.60 to $7.85.

Sheep—Receipts 47,000. Market weak. Native, $3.90 to $5; yearlings, $5.10 to $6.50; lambs, native, $5.90 to $7.50.

West Lorne May Vote Again.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 2.—To allow the issue of liquor licenses a bylaw to repeal local option may be submitted in West Lorne at the municipal elections. Local option does not so far as the courts have decided, prevail in the village, but on account of the narrow margin which determined the ruling of the courts, the Ontario License Department refused to allow the commissioners to grant a license. A petition has reached the village council to submit the measure again.

Nearly every aspect of rural education and life is discussed in the "Proceedings of the Sixteenth Conference For Education In the South," copies of which are available for free distribution by the United States bureau of education.

Letting the Cat Out of the Bag.

While expounding to his wife the alleged fact that men can control their tempers better than women can Mr. Hinks fell over the cat.

"That settles it," he hissed. "I've often threatened, but now I'll drown the brute!"

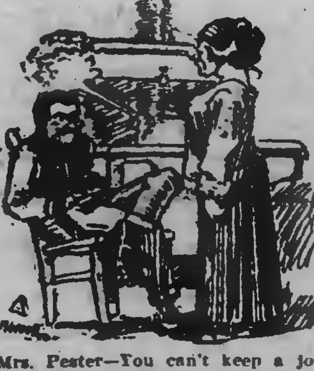
His wife begged him to be merciful, but his mind was made up.

Accordingly he placed the offending feline, along with two large bricks, in an old flour sack, and hastened upon his murderous errand. On reaching the canal he threw in the bag with such vigor that he overbalanced and fell into the muddy water. After struggling for half an hour and incidentally drinking half the water in the canal he returned home, wet and weary and found the cat on the front steps.

"Well, of all!"— exclaimed Hinks. "Why, I drowned the brute!"

"I don't think so," said his wife as she let him in. "You didn't give me time to tell you that there was a hole in that bag."—Fun.

Where It Showed.



Mrs. Pester—You can't keep a job You never seem fired with enthusiasm.

Mr. Pester—I was today. You should have seen the enthusiasm the boss displayed in firing me.—Chicago Daily News.

Wonderful.

"Mind reading? Nonsense," said Hawkins contemptuously. "Nothing in it. I'll give you $10, Jimmerson, if you'll read my mind right now. What am I thinking?"

"Why," said Jimmerson, eyeing Hawkins keenly, "you are thinking that mind reading is perfect nonsense, that there is absolutely nothing in it and that therefore your $10 is perfectly safe."

"By Jove," cried Hawkins, paying up like a gentleman, "that's wonderful, Jimmerson! You got it exactly. How the dickens do you do it?"—Judge.

Good Wishes From Home.

When Mr. Brown was away from home on an extended business trip he got a long letter from his wife. It ended thus:

"Baby is well and lots brighter than she used to be. Hoping you are the same, I remain.

"Your loving wife."—Philadelphia Ledger.

There Are Others.

"Mrs. Mortimer says she derives more pleasure from the education of her children than anything else."

"Yes. She's never happy unless they're at their kindergarten."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Not Needed.

"Now, this," said the barber, holding up a pink bottle, "is a splendid thing for baldness."

"Thank you," replied the victim coldly. "I have all the baldness I require."—Pathfinder.

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 1. — After deliberating for nearly 24 hours a jury in the district court Saturday declared Mrs. Hilda Rowland guilty of having attempted to entice a young woman to go from Minneapolis to Winnipeg to lead an immoral life. Mrs. Rowland has not been sentenced.

RATEPAYERS TO VOTE ON BRIDGE ACROSS OTONABEE RIVER TO SERVE EAST CITY

City Engineer is Preparing Estimate of the Cost and the Matter Will Not be Delayed

VOTE IN JANUARY

"In the interests of very many workingmen of the city, I trust you will take this matter up," said E.A. Peck, M.P.P., when he appeared before the City Council last night and urged that a bridge be provided across the Otonabee river from Maria street to Dalhousie street, to serve the people of East City and others

J. C. Shook, C. E. Adams, Ald. Buller, Ald. McIntyre, Ald. Anderson, spoke strongly in favor of the bridge being provided.

PETITION WITH 800 NAMES

A petition had been received with 800 signatures. In reply to a request from Ald. Buller, the City Engineer reported that he could give an estimate of the cost in ten days.

"The bridge has my hearty support and endorsement," said Mayor Bradburn. "There had," he said, "been difficulties and it was not thought advisable to place a by-law for the bridge before the people."

The Mayor said he would call a meeting when Mr. Parson's submitted his estimate and have a by-law prepared for submission to the people next January.

Ald Anderson urged that the by-law be submitted to the ratepayers at the municipal elections. He also hoped that the ratepayers as a whole would vote for the bridge as the East City ratepayers had voted for industries coming to the city.

POSSIBILITIES OF THIRD CANDIDATE FOR MAYORALTY

There are possibilities that a third candidate may spring into the field for the mayoralty, disputing the position with Messrs. Buller and Gillespie. There are rumors of a fairly strong candidate, on whose account several interests may combine to further his election. The next few days will see developments.

RIVAL OF PADEREWSKI

At Conservatory This Evening

There are a great many people in Peterborough who enjoy good music, but not enough of them know when it is on hand. Advertisement is necessary for business purposes. If you have a good piano for sale you could not do better than put it in The Review, or to be more correct, advertise it in these columns. You can buy a good piano any day, but you cannot every day purchase the privilege of hearing one of the world's greatest pianists. This privilege is everybody's tonight at the Conservatory, where Arthur Friedheim, the only rival of Padrewski, is to give a recital. Arthur Friedheim is at present on a tour and recently visited Ottawa, where H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, with Princess Patrica, and a large party from the government house, occupied the Royal box.

The great Pianist is to be supported by Signor Agostino Caruso, grand Italian tenor, whom critics claim will take the place of his famous cousin.

This concert is not arranged by Mr. Gliddon, but he has rented the Conservatory Hall at a reasonable price, in order to encourage such a fine artist as Arthur Friedheim to come. Mr. Glidden informs The Review that he has another treat in store for Peterborough music lovers in the near future.

PRACTICAL TALKS TO FARMERS ANNUAL INSTITUTE MEETINGS

Speakers Deal With the Various Problems That Confront Tillers of the Soil

How He May Produce With Better Returns --Dairying and It's Possibilities

Splendid addresses given by practical men marked the third and fourth regular winter meetings of the West Peterborough Farmers' Institute held yesterday afternoon and evening in the Lakefield Town Hall. The Ontario Department of Agriculture indeed favored the local body for better speaker could not be collected together. Both meetings, which were presided over by President, Mr. C. E. Moore, were attended by very large audiences and as Secretary Mr. Wm. Collins remarked, the number who renewed their membership and the number who joined gave promise of better things.

The afternoon meeting was opened by the President. Mr. Moore, in a few words explained the purpose of these meetings which was to acquaint the farmer with up-to-date methods and also for the answering, by men of authority, of all questions that yearly present themselves. After thanking the members for their large turnout, he called on Mr. J. N. Paget, of Canboro, the first speaker.

Mr. Paget remarked that he was not there to give them a lecture, them and answer any question with which they are confronted. On the program, the title of his speech was "Handling Finished Products Until It Reaches Consumer." He stated however, that he wished to change that subject and bring before them the same question with which he dealt the day previous at Ennismore, that was the question of "Profit and Loss in Dairying." To illustrate his remarks, Mr. Paget had charts hung up before the audience on which statistics were placed to show in actual figures the results obtained by the methods he was agitating.

"Profit and Loss" is a question that is not only of interest to one class of farmers, but rather to everyone. Many men are losing money in dairying, and sometimes losing it when they think they are making something, this is attributed to the fact that farmers, not all farmers, but the average farmer does not understand his cows. Some farmers have cows giving an abundance of milk, even as much as 4,000 pounds per annum, and imagine that better results could be obtained by better feeding. That is where they make the mistake for it is not the feeding that regulates the flow but rather the capacity of the cow. Then, what is capacity? For this we must go outside our own Dominion.

To that little country of Denmark, which has been noted for dairying for many centuries, do we give the credit for the discovery and the development of the capacity of the cow. They had been dairying for centuries and this matter received their careful attention. They found that the average cow was not giving enough milk to pay for her keep, which is generally quoted at 3,000 pounds per year. They then set about to weed out, so as to speak, the poorly milking cows and to keep only the best class. Thus it was discovered that good breeding and that alone was responsible for a cow giving abundance of milk. A poorly milking cow can be fed on the very best of food and yet she cannot give the amount of milk expected because she has not the capacity. This is obtained by good breeding.

Hon. Sydney Fisher was visiting in Denmark some eight years ago, and he became well versed in this new idea. He introduced it into Canada and the first step taken was to take a census of the amount of milk given by the cows. The average was found to be some 3,000 pounds. About five years ago testing associations were formed and since then by the new method the average has increased to 6,000 pounds. Surely then the flow of milk depends not on the feeding, but rather on the capacity of a cow and since this is developed by good breeding, this should receive a respectable amount of the farmers' attention.

Business Principles.

The fundamental principle of the prosperity of the country is agriculture. It is the greatest industry in the world and one upon which all others depend. Every other industry depends on agriculture for success. Then why does not the men who are engaged in this great industry apply business principles to the conduct of their business? That question has never been answered, although year by year and mainly through the instrumentality of the Farmers' Institutes are farmers beginning to put a few more business principles into their work. The farmer has ceased to be a back number. Years ago he was accosted as a clod-hopper, hayseed, etc., but this has passed and the people of the world are seeing more plainly every day that the farmers are the men who are working at the greatest of all sciences. Since this is true, then the farmers must study and learn to understand the elements of the soil. The day when it was the strong man who made money on the farm has passed and it has given place to the day when it is the man who is educated scientifically along the lines of farming, is the successful one.

It was by putting business principles into their work that the people of Denmark were able to increase their average of milk received from 3,000 to 14,000 and 15,000 per cow inside of twenty-five years. Therefore, why not begin this work in this section? The first thing to do is to find out just what your cows are doing. Are your cows producing

INDIANAPOLIS SEETHES.

Two Serious Clashes Occur In Course of Teamsters' Strike.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 3.—An effort to call a general strike in sympathy with the teamsters' and chauffeurs' strike was started at a meeting of the teamsters' union late yesterday. No definite action was taken, it being decided to wait until the union officers had conferred with the leaders of the Central Labor Union.

The first fatality of the strike, which was started Sunday night, occurred yesterday when a crowd interfered with an ice wagon, in charge of six men, on whom special police powers had been conferred.

Another crowd was fired upon yesterday by William Wharton, a negro, when the wagon owned and driven by himself was attacked. Jack Long, a teamster, was wounded. Wharton was arrested.

Fifty business men with horses were sworn in as the citizens' cavalry yesterday. They volunteered to assist the mounted police.

Railway Cartage Service.

OTTAWA, Dec. 3.—The council of the Board of Trade yesterday appointed a deputation to go to Montreal to interview the officials of the Grand Trunk and C. P. R. to ascertain if it has yet been decided definitely to discontinue in January the present cartage system and if so what arrangements have been made to accommodate merchants. Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and London are affected by the proposed change.

Crippen Case Recalled.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—The famous Crippen murder in England four years ago, was recalled here yesterday by the announcement of a firm of lawyers that a country-wide search had been begun for Mrs. Theresa Hunn, of Brooklyn, sister of Mrs Hawley Harvey Crippen. Mrs. Hunn is a beneficiary of her murdered sister's estate and the lawyers want to pay her her share. She formerly lived in Brooklyn.

Kent Health Officers.

CHATHAM, Dec. 3.—At a meeting of the medical officers of health of Kent yesterday, Kent County Health Officers' Association was formed, to promote the general health of the county and to make a special study of sanitary surroundings. The officers elected were: President, Dr. C. R. Charteris, Chatham; vice-president, Dr. Hanks, Blenheim; secretary, Dr. Reid, Merlin.

Accident To Paper Workers.

ST. CATHARINES, Dec. 3.—While tending a machine at the Kinleith paper mill yesterday afternoon, George Albon, a married man, 30 years of age, was caught in a belt and dashed against a beam, falling to the floor and fracturing the base of his skull. He is in a critical condition at the General and Marine Hospital, and is not expected to live.

Surgeon Wouldn't Help.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 3.—Otto Fiala yesterday shot and killed his wife at the home of her mother, south of St. Louis, and then shot himself.

A physician who was called refused to attend Fiala, saying he deserved to die. Fiala's wound was pronounced fatal. He and his wife had been separated.

Arkona's Destructive Fire.

FOREST, Dec. 3.—Fire at Arkona early yesterday morning resulted in the total destruction of Robert Crawford's stove shop, W. J. Clark's harness shop and residence, William Holmes' photographic studio and a portion of Fuller Bros.' departmental store. Loss $10,000, with little insurance.

BREAKS EVERY RECORD.

With 143,000,000 Bushels Marketed Grain Still Pours In.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 3.—Figures obtainable at the Winnipeg Grand Exchange show that up to Dec. 1 the farmers of Western Canada marketed 143,000,000 bushels of grain, for which they received in actual cash $90,000,000.

This is the greatest movement ever known, and it is but part of the story of western prosperity, for the grain is coming along more rapidly than ever and there is no sign of abatement. The excellent weather makes conditions ideal for shipment. Monday every record in the history of the local grain exchange went by the board when a total of 1,873 cars of all kinds of grain was inspected in Winnipeg. Yesterday there were 1,200 cars in sight.

Decision on Hindu Question Is Serious Declares McBride.

VANCOUVER, Dec. 3. — "This judgment has brought about a critical state of affairs and one which will be given every possible consideration by the Provincial Government in order to protect the interests of the province in so far as the Government's constitutional authority will permit," declared Premier McBride, in discussing the turn of affairs on the Hindu immigration question following the issuance of Chief Justice Hunter's written judgment.

"We have always tried to make it clear that objections which the Government of this province entertains toward the entry of Hindus are not upon race grounds, but are of an economic and social nature," said Sir Richard.

Premier McBride intimated that he did not desire to express any opinions upon the judgment itself, but added that he believed the question would probably occupy the attention of the courts for some time.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA

Mother of the present King of England, is now sixty-nine years old. Her name in full is Alexandra Marie Charlotte Louisa Julia, and she was the eldest child of the then King of Denmark. She was married at eighteen to the Prince of Wales, later King Edward VII, who was three years her senior. For nine years she was the beloved queen of England and since her husband's death she has been lovingly termed "The Queen Mother."

Churchill's Comrade Killed.

EASTCHURCH, Kent, Dec. 3.—Captain Gilbert V. Wildman-Lushington, commander of the British naval flying corps, with whom Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, made a long flight Saturday, was killed yesterday at the naval flying ground here by a fall with his biplane.

The well-known aviator was flying with a brother officer, Capt. Henry Fawcett, of the Royal Marines, who was piloting the aeroplane and who suffered slight injuries while the machine crashed to earth and was splintered to matchwood.

HUERTA IS ISOLATED AND TOTTERING DECLARES WILSON

U. S. President In His Message to Congress Says the Administration Will Maintain a Policy of Watchful Waiting—Internal Troubles In Mexico Will Work Gen. Huerta's Fall.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3. — "We shall not, I believe, be obliged to alter our policy of watchful waiting," said President Wilson yesterday in dealing with the Mexican situation in his message to Congress. He predicted that the collapse of the Huerta regime would take place speedily as a result of the internal troubles of Mexico.

In his message the President said: "There is but one cloud upon our horizon. That has shown itself to the south of us, and hangs over Mexico. There can be no certain prospect of peace in America until Gen. Huerta has surrendered his usurped authority in Mexico; until it is understood on all hands, indeed, that such pretended governments will not be countenanced or dealt with by the Government of the United States.

"Even if this usurper had succeeded in his purposes, in spite of the constitution of the republic and the rights of its people, be would have set up nothing but a precarious and hateful power, which could have lasted but a little while, and whose eventual downfall would have left the country in a more deplorable condition than ever. But he has not succeeded. He has forfeited the respect and the moral support even of those who were at one time willing to see him succeed.

"Little by little he has been completely isolated. By a little every day his power and prestige are crumbling and the collapse is not far away. We shall not, I believe, be obliged to alter our policy of watchful waiting. And then, when the end comes, we shall hope to see constitutional order restored in distressed Mexico by the concert and energy of such of her leaders as prefer the liberty of their people to their own ambitions."

No Oil For Huerta.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 3. — Preferring to incur the displeasure of the Huerta Government to a very practical manifestation of the rebels' wrath, the producing oil companies of the republic yesterday cancelled their contracts for supplying the National Railways with fuel oil.

This is regarded as one of the most serious blows dealt the Government, because it is likely to bring about early suspension of railway traffic, which would interfere greatly with military operations and would strike vitally at the commerce of the country.

Most of the oil used by the railways is produced in the coast region of Tampico and southward.

Huerta's Generals Yield.

JUAREZ, Mex., Dec. 3—Seven generals of the Mexican regular army are ready to surrender, and the backbone of the Huerta dictatorship in the north has been broken. A peace commission arrived in Juarez last night bearing terms of the surrender.

FOR NAVAL HOLIDAY.

U. S. House of Representatives Strongly Favor Scheme.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Dec. 3.—The House for hours yesterday debated the Hensley resolution to commit the United States to the Winston Churchill plan for an international year's holiday in naval construction, and last night the advocates of the project predicted passage of the resolution in the House by Friday. Consideration of the matter will be resumed Thursday, with both sides, the advocates far outnumbering the opponents, prepared to continue the debate.

The idea of suspending naval construction for a year, first proposed to the British Parliament by the first Lord of the Admiralty, has since been commended by leaders of all parties in the American Congress. Representative Hensley of Missouri, author of the measure, in urging its adoption, pointed out that only two per cent. of the United States revenues is devoted to the benefit of agriculture, while 60 per cent. goes to defray the cost of the past war and to prepare for future wars. He declared that all over the country there was going up the cry of the high cost of living, while enormous expenditures were being made for military and naval purposes.

Representative Foster of Illinois said the time had come when the United States should take the lead of all the world nations in the movement for peace, to lift the burdens from the people and to leave the settlement of differences to arbitration.

Representative Decker of Missouri declared that the United States built battleships "because, forsooth, our neighbors build them." He suggested that a year's naval holiday might be extended indefinitely.

Young Farmer Killed.

PORT COLBORNE, Ont., Dec. 3. —Fred Kramer, aged 25 years, son of John Kramer, formerly of Humberstone township, was killed almost instantly yesterday afternoon while bringing a load of wood into town. The horses started up, throwing young Kramer over the front of the wagon, which passed over his head.

Killed In Winnipeg.

BRANTFORD, Dec. 3.—Word was received yesterday morning of the death at Winnipeg of Leslie Prime, formerly of Brantford. Mr. Prime worked for the Great Northern Railway, and was killed in the yards just outside of Winnipeg. He was a son of the late Arthur Prime, a well-known Grand Trunk engineer.

Aged Physician's Death.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Dec. 3.—Dr. John M. Dee, a life-long resident of Stamford, and the last descendant of one of England's oldest families, died at his home near Stamford Green, early yesterday morning. Dr. Dee was 80 years old. He had been in poor health for some time past. He was unmarried.

TWENTY-FIVE CHARRED BODIES TAKEN FROM RUINS OF HOTEL

Cheap Lodging House In Tenement District Is Destroyed by Fire In Early Morning When Over 100 Men Were Asleep in Upper Stories

Canadian Press Despatch.

BOSTON, Dec. 3.—Twenty-five burned and mutilated bodies were taken from the ruins of the Arcadia Hotel, a cheap men's lodging house in the south end which was destroyed by fire early this morning.

The victims were of the poor class, many of them being negroes, and they were getting a night's sleep in bunks on the fourth and fifth floors of the small five-storey building.

When the men were roused from sleep the stairways were in flames and they had to rush naked to the fire escapes. Police and firemen rescued many but others leaped over the five foot alley to neighboring roofs or walked a shaky plank to an adjoining building.

The Arcadia Hotel was situated at the corner of Washington and Laconia Streets, and the lower floors were occupied by stores. The neighborhood is a low class tenement and hotel district. Besides the dead, a number were missing and scores of burned and injured were taken to hospitals. One hundred and seventy-eight men were sleeping in one large room on the fifth floor and in thirty tiny closets of rooms on the fourth floor. The cause of the fire is unknown.

The financial loss is twenty-five thousand dollars.

THE FRENCH CABINET FALLS

Grave Crisis Is Precipitated by Failure of French Administration to Pass Its Proposals For Tax Exemption of New Loan For Extraordinary Military Expenditures—Senate Will Reverse Vote.

PARIS, Dec. 3.—Premier Barthou was defeated, 220 to 165, in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday afternoon, on the question of whether the new loan of $260,000,000 should be subject to taxation or immune like the existing rentes.

As soon as the vote placing the Government in the minority by 25 was read, the Ministers left the chamber in a body and proceeded to Elysee Palace, where they handed their resignations to President Poincare.

The Ministry, headed by J. Louis Barthou, after a long and vigorous defence, fell as the result of the combined attacks of the recently reorganized Radicals, under ex-Premier Caillaux, and the Socialists, led by M. Jaurez. The Government, by a narrow margin Monday, was victorious in a trial of strength against the Opposition, the new loan being approved by a vote of 291 to 270.

The debate yesterday was on the question of extending to the new loan the same immunity from taxation as enjoyed by the old rentes and the Government again made it a question of a vote of confidence. The Opposition urged that to exempt the new rentes would enable those investing exclusively in these to evade unfairly the projected income tax.

Premier Barthou and M. Dumont, the Minister of Finance, made eloquent appeals to the chamber to respect the traditional immunity of the rentes. To tax rentes, they declared, would deal a deadly blow to the financial prestige of France. But their appeals fell on deaf ears. The sitting grew more uproarious, and frequently the President rang his bell in vain attempt to obtain order. The result of the vote was greeted with wild cheering by the members of the Opposition, while the Government forces appeared greatly depressed.

All the parties agree that the Ministerial crisis precipitated by the vote in the chamber creates a situation of exceptional gravity. The first immediate consequence is indefinitely to postpone the issue of the loan, which the necessity to meet the extraordinary military expenditure makes indispensable. It is also generally feared that the prospect of a tax on rentes will seriously affect the national credit. Some of the political leaders declare that it is not a mere Ministerial crisis but an economic, financial and social crisis, such as France has not seen in many years.

In finding a successor for Mr. Barthou, President Poincare is faced by a task of unusual difficulty and delicacy on account of the radical divergence on capital questions existing between the various groups composing the Republican majority.

Among those most prominently mention for the Premiership are Paul Deschanel, president of the Chamber of Deputies; Jean Dupuy, former Minister of Public Works, and M. Doumergue, former Minister of Education.

TO FIGHT SLAVERY.

British Society Plans To Abolish Latin-American Curse.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—The committee of the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protective Society of Great Britain has decided to take immediate steps with the object of creating a sister organization in America to co-operate with the British Society in watching all matters in which joint Anglo-American action might be desirable.

In explanation of their attempt to bring about the formation of such a society in America the British officials say it is admitted that slave-owning, slave-trading and great cruelty to native races are widely prevalent throughout the regions of South America and Mexico, but the trouble is that Great Britain cannot act without appearing to menace the Monroe doctrine, while Washington apparently hesitates to act alone for fear of creating a feeling of resentment throughout South America.

READY TO COMPROMISE.

Asquith Government Anxious To Secure Settlement of Home Rule.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—The anxiety of the Government to bring about if possible a settlement of the home rule question by consent is shown by the character of the speeches of different members of the Ministry last night. Viscount Haldane, Lord High Chancellor, dilating at Birmingham on the importance of reaching such a settlement, made an appeal for one or more responsible men from each side to meet and talk together with unrestrained freedom, which would be only possible in private conference.

The Rt., Hon. Herbert Samuel Postmaster-General, Sir John A. Simon, Attorney-General, and the Rt. Hon. J. A. Pease, President of the Board of Education, speaking at other places, voiced similar sentiments and emphasized the fact that Premier Asquith had not closed the door to negotiation.

GLENCARNOCK VICTOR II. TAKES THE GRAND PRIZE AT CHICAGO

NOT A CIRCUIT COURT.

Only On Special Cases Would Privy Council Set In Dominions.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—(C.A.P. Cable.) —Prof. Morgan, in his final Rhodes' lecture at University College last night, had an important correction to make on the authority of Lord Haldane, regarding his recent suggestions for development of the judicial committee. Prof. Morgan said his lordship never intended to convey that the committee should go on circuit through the dominions.

The suggestion was that, in cases of great and exceptional importance, where circumstances were such as to give a sitting in a particular dominion, particular value, a number of the judges should be selected from the enlarged panel to go and sit there. It should be remembered, as anyone who looks at the statutes of 1833 and 1844 may discover for himself that the judicial committee is a body possessing as on appellate tribunal exceptional powers of directing the examination of witnesses on oath and of directing enquiries into issues of fact in particular cases and, one can well conceive that there might be cases in which such enquiries were best held in the Dominion itself.

CHEFS ARE ARTISTS.

Hotelmen Disclaim Breaking Alien Labor Laws.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—James Mallon, chef of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, was indicted by the U. S. grand jury for violating the contract labor law in hiring eighty or more cooks through agents in France. The indictment is said to be the first fruit of a Government crusade against the importation of cooks, practiced by many of the big New York hotels and restaurants. The hotelmen have taken the ground that a French cook is an artist and that by hiring them abroad they are no more amenable to the contract labor law than the managers of grand opera are when they engage their European singers.

Shaw Awaits Officers.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—Mervin Shaw, the young clerk, who is accused of embezzling $70 while employed in the Toronto office of Swift & Co., packers, when arraigned before U. S. Commissioner Shields yesterday, waived examination and consented to returned to Canada to answer the charge. Shaw was committed to the Tombs to await the coming of officers from Toronto.

REPORT OF ANALYST HAS BEEN DELAYED

Inquest Into Death of Forsyth Sisters Formerly of Peterboro

HAMILTON, Dec. 3.—The inquest which was to have been held at Central police station to inquire into the circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs. Mary Griffin, was further adjourned, the jurors being told to be on hand next Monday evening. The anaylst's report on the contents of the deceased's stomach was not received from Toronto, and it was decided it would be useless to proceed without it. Coroner Parry intends asking the analyst's department for an explanation of the delay.

The inquest relates to the death of Mrs Griffin and her sister, Miss Ettie Forsyth, who were former residents of Peterborough.

For Second Year In Succession J. D. McGregor of Brandon, Man., Carries Off the Big Event at International Live Stock Show—Woodville Breeder Captures Prize For the Finest Wether.

CHICAGO, Dec. 3.—J. D. McGregor of Brandon, Man., has pulled off the grand championship of the International Live Stock Show of Chicago, the biggest show of its kind on earth.

Glencarnock Victor II. has downed all comers in the steer classes, and there were scores of them. He was first in his class as a grade yearling, then champion of all grades and cross-breds, and then champion of all yearlings, and finally grand champion over all pure breeds and grades. He was bred by J. D. McGregor, his sire was Golden Gleam, and he is out of the same dam as last year's grand champion. His grand-dam was an ordinary red nurse cow. He has been fed on nothing that cannot be grown on any Canadian farm—barley and oat chop, turnips, oat sheaves, prairie hay and a very little linseed meal. He would not know corn if he met it.

It is the first time in the history of the International that the sweepstakes grand championship of the show has been won twice in succession by an individual breeder. Once previously Ames College won two years in succession. It is the third time the championship has gone to Canada.

Ontario sent the finest wether to the show. This is owned by John Campbell of Woodville, Ont.

A feature of the Percheron show was the magnificent silver cup, presented by the Canadian Percheron Society for the best Percheron stallion and four mares owned by one exhibitor. This class will not be decided until Friday and competition will be keen. The International Show's board of management and the American Percheron Society directors are loud in their expression of gratitude to the Canadian Percheron breeders for this token of good-will.

In cattle classes there was something doing every minute. The older breeding classes of Aberdeen Angus were judged. The classes were large and competition keen, but there were no Canadian exhibits. During the afternoon it was announced that the championship and reserve in the car lots of fat steers had been captured by Escher and Ryan of Irwin, Iowa, with Aberdeen Angus yearlings and two-year-olds. The showing of shorthorns is enormous. In the aged bull class, Leslie Smith of St. Cloud, Minn., secured first with his famous bull Ringmaster.

Over in the sheep barns Ontario continued to do herself proud. The grand championship to John Campbell of Woodville was awarded almost at the moment when the McGregor steer topped the cattle rings and was an exact repetition of the performance of last year. In 1912 Campbell won with a pure-bred Shropshire wether; this time with a very handsome grade of the same breed. Experts pronounced him superior sheep, and certainly he has a back like a table.

J. D. McGregor refuses to have Glencarnock Victor auctioned at Chicago. He will be shipped home and loaned first to the agricultural schools of Alberta and a demonstration trip through that province and possibly through Saskatchewan will be made, and later Mr. McGregor declares he will be slaughtered at Brandon and presented to his friends to eat.

Cure For Typhoid Fever.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—A Paris cable says: A successful new method of curing typhoid fever was announced yesterday by Dr. Josue Bellar. It is called auto vaccination, the vaccine used being the culture of eberth bacilli, made of the patient's own blood. After two days' culture in sterilised heat, two hundred million germs are injected into the patient three times at intervals of twelve hours.

RURAL SLUMS

"Within one hundred miles of Toronto, in a territory covering the northern parts of Victoria, Peterborough and Hastings counties, and the southern townships of Haliburton county, a rural slum condition exists which for sordidness and degeneracy, Judging from reliable information received by the Globe yesterday, has not a parallel in any city in Canada."

Thus begins an article on the front page of the Globe yesterday entitled "Poverty and Wretchedness in Trent Valley District." This subject is not a new one in these columns. The Review has in various editorials described and commented upon the state of things prevailing in the districts referred to. The Globe's informant goes on to say: "But the most appalling feature of the conditions in that wasted section of the Province is the vain expenditure of energy on the part of the people who, through lack of means to enable themselves to move away, have been obliged to continue their efforts at farming sterile land. And this condition has brought about a state of physical and mental degeneracy which as a sociological problem invites close investigation with the hope of some kind of relief being extended.

"On a single day last summer four of us walking through a part of Glamorgan township saw, simply as the result of cursory observations, no less than twelve degenerates along the way. There are, as Dr. Fernow intimated, some 150 families, so mentally and physically defective, as well as being economically incapacitated, that they are unable to leave their barren surroundings. They should never have been allowed to go on the land there. And now it is the duty of some institution to see that they are removed to better land and into more healthful influences."

This is very strong stuff for young Canadians to digest, but we can testify that it is by no means an over-drawn picture. It is true many of these very people have a sort of depraved taste for such conditions. Their hard and visionless life has gotten such a hold of them that they have not the powers of desire or will to enable them to shake off the yoke of profitless toil. In Great Britain the poverty of the rural life is often picturesque, where a British "yokel" is sometimes ignorant, he is generally aware of the fact, and is modestly respectful to his betters. But the sad feature about these degenerate democrats is, they imagine that because they own a one hundred and fifty acres of sand, five inches in depth, they are therefore independent and owe nothing to anyone and will accept of no interference with their rights. This spirit is the bane of the average minister who goes into their midst. They will accept nothing from him in the way of criticism or advice. He must come down to their level and pander to their prejudices if he is to get on with them or have even a tolerable existence in their midst. The consequence is, the pastor becomes either a degenerate himself or a sanctimonious bluffer who has no other object in life then to repeat old pious platitude from week to week and scheme to weedle reluctant dollars from the pockets of his tyranical parishioners in order to make a decent showing on his schedule at the district meeting, that he might ingratiate himself with his chairman and possibly get a release into a better field at the next conference.

These observations are not directed as a criticism against any church, but merely as an illustration of the demoralizing conditions to which many of our fellow-Canadians have succumbed, and how even the church is unable to penetrate the thick darkness of their moral and spiritual state. We trust that the attention drawn to this question by the Globe will result in not merely of the geological, but first of all an antropological survey of the Rural Slums of Ontario.

INDEPENDENCE OR ISOLATION?

Bishop Fallon, of the Roman Catholic Diocese of London Ont., has been saying some straight and sane things to those Canadians who have rosy dreams of Independence for the Dominion.

"I am prepared to admit," he said, "that there may be a not inconsiderable number of our people whose minds are open on the question of Canadian Independence, and I am quite ready to express my entire belief in their honesty and sincerity. Independence likewise is an attractive catchword, and quite in harmony with the spirit of the age, which groans at the thought of obedience. The independence of a nation of ten millions, side by side with another of a hundred millions, can be no better than a hollow mockery. The independence of Cuba or of Mexico is not a political reality for me. But the worst I have to say of Canadian independence is that in the inevitable day it will place Canada in a false position. I say 'the inevitable day,' for the enemy will come. Whether from the snowy steppes of Russia or the flowery kingdom of Japan, whether from China, shaking off its slumbers and realizing its giant strength, or from the Imperial ambitions of the German nation I know not. But, in that day the fate of even an independent Canada will hang in the balance, and she may suffer for having failed to face her higher destiny. For there is a higher, a holier and a nobler destiny than Canadian national independence.

"If annexation is undesirable, and independence is either fatuous in itself or false to the higher and holier destiny of our native land, then there remains only some scheme for making permanent the bonds that now bind together the scattered portions of the British Empire, and through which we may honorably discharge those obligations that are common to us all. Call this scheme Imperial Federation if you please. I am not afraid of the phase. It is quite as respectable, quite as defensible, and quite as practical as either annexation or independence, because its parts are unlike, then neither can you federate Canada, even under independence. There is no greater unlikeness, taken as a whole, between Australia or New Zealand on the one hand and Canada on the other than there is between our Eastern and our Western provinces or between Ontario and Quebec.

"There is a scheme of Imperial Federation in the air. It is based on the principle of devotion to the general interests of the British Empire in all its constituent parts. It involves the surrender of no title of local autonomy; it means the assumption of no new obligation. It would simply transfer the responsibility for the great Imperial concerns of peace and war, of defence and foreign relations, to a body where all the parts of the Empire would have their proper representation, and would no longer be a question of Great Britain exercising exclusive control. England would lose her position as the predominant partner, and would be equal to the sacrifice of that proud distinction for the sake of the greater Imperial idea.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Mr. Winston Churchill is the first Cabinet Minister to ascend in an aeroplane—he is now not only the First Sea Lord, he can now claim to be the First Air Lord as well.

The "Orders in Council" which have hitherto kept the Hindu out of Canada, and which have now been declared void, served a very useful purpose. There are some illegalities which are most expedient and some laws better broken.

Not all the emigrants are going far the far west these days, A party, mostly Scotch, are sailing next week for St. Johns, New Brunswick. The Scotch are canny, the west is not attracting them just now.

Bishop Carlisle who has just returned to Penrith from London, told his people the other day that "he never had been so startled in his life as when he saw the silliness of fashion which tried its best to turn its blind eye upon, but without success. He counselled his people to look beneath the veneer of the real life of society's devotees."

German Conservatives seem to have jealous eyes upon Canada just now for some reason or other. They would enforce drastic measures for the exclusion of Canadian wheat, and are urging a tariff war against the Dominion.

What has become of that new "Liberal Monthly?" We have only just thought about it. Was it stillborn, we wonder!

"New Zealand eggs are coming to Canada." Our hens are very stupid just now, and will not lay for anything. One man said the other day that "you cannot squeeze eggs out of 'um."

MAIL EARLY AND RECEIVE BETTER SERVICE

Use Label "Do Not Open Until Christmas"

THE RUSH IS ON

"From the present indications it looks as if the Christmas rush this year will exceed all other years" remarked Postmaster Edgar to a Review reporter to-day.

Therefore the post-office officials are urging the public to send their parcels early so as to avoid any congestion. Ample preparations are being made for the big rush which starts in reality next week. During the past few days the quantity of mail handled was a big increase over other years. Every facility is arranged this year so as to handle the great amount of mail expected and sixteen men have been engaged to assist in the big rush.

The mail will be handled as expeditiously as possible. With the assistance of the public this mail can be handled even more quickly.

A big rush is anticipated in the United States so the senders of gifts would do well to send their gifts early to friends in the States. There is generally a congestion in the mail departments and if friends do not receive their long looked for gifts they can blame the postman across the line.

Great care should be taken by those intending to send mail to the old country, by getting the mail away at once.

Many people wait till the last moment to send their mail to the post office because they do not wish their gifts to reach their destination before Christmas. Their own delay in the matter sometimes means that the gifts are not received till after Christmas. It is suggested that the mailing be done earlier and labels such as "Do not open before Christmas" be used.

BRITISH MAILS

The last British mails leaving Peterboro will close on the 10th and the 14th of this month, at 4 o'clock. The public are requested to make use of the first mail to prevent a possible congestion on the 14th.

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF
BAYARD VEILLER

Garson's usually strong face was showing weak with fear. His chin, which was commonly very firm, moved a little from uneasy twitchings of his lips. His clear eyes were slightly clouded to a look of apprehension as they roved the room furtively. He made no answer to the inspector's greeting for a few moments, but remained standing without movement, poised alertly as if sensing some concealed peril. Finally, however, his anxiety found expression in words. His tone was pregnant with alarm, though he strove to make it merely complaining.

"Say, what am I arrested for?" he protested. "I ain't done anything."

Burke did not look up, and his pen continued to hurry over the paper.

"Who told you you were arrested?" he remarked cheerfully in his blandest voice.

Garson uttered an ejaculation of disgust.

"I don't have to be told," he retorted huffily. "I'm no college president, but when a cop grabs me and brings me down here I've got sense enough to know I'm pinched."

"Is that what they did to you, Joe? I'll have to speak to Cassidy about that. Now, just you sit down, Joe, won't you? I want to have a little talk with you. I'll be through here in a second." He went on with the writing.

Garson moved forward slightly to the single chair near the end of the desk and there seated himself mechanically. His face thus was turned toward the windows that gave on the corridor, and his eyes grew yet more clouded as they rested on the grim doors of the cells. He writhed in his chair, and his gaze jumped from the cells to the impassive figure of the man at the desk. Now the forger's nervousness increased momentarily. It swept beyond his control. Of a sudden he sprang up and stepped close to the inspector.

"Say," he said, in a husky voice, "I'd like—I'd like to have a lawyer."

"What's the matter with you, Joe?" the inspector returned, always with that imperturbable air, and without raising his head from the work that so engrossed his attention. "You know, you're not arrested, Joe. Maybe you never will be. Now, for the love of Mike, keep still and let me finish this letter."

Slowly, very hesitatingly, Garson went back to the chair, and sank down on it in a limp attitude of dejection wholly unlike his customary postures of strength. Again, his fear fascinated eyes went to the row of cells that stood silently menacing on the other side of the corridor beyond the windows. His face was tinged with gray. A physical sickness was creeping stealthily on him, as his thoughts held insistently to the catastrophe that threatened. His intelligence was too keen to permit a belief that Burke's manner of almost fulsome kindliness hid nothing ominous—ominous with a hint of death for him in return for the death he had wrought.

Then, terror crystallized. His eyes were caught by a figure, the figure of Cassidy, advancing there in the corridor. And with the detective went a man whose gait was slinking, craven. A cell door swung open, the prisoner stepped within, the door clanged to, the bolts shot into their sockets noisily.

Garson sat huddled, stricken—for he had recognised the victim thrust into the cell before his eyes. It was Dacey, one of his own cronies in crime—Dacey, who, the night before, had seen him kill Eddie Griggs. There was something concretely sinister to Garson in this fact of Dacey's presence there in the cell.

Of a sudden the forger cried out raucously:

"Say, inspector, if you've got anything on me, I—I would"— The cry dropped into unintelligible mumblings.

Burke retained his manner of serene indifference to the other's agitation. Still, his pen hurried over the paper, and he did not trouble to look up as he expostulated, half banteringly.

"Now, now! What's the matter with you, Joe? I told you that I wanted to ask you a few questions. That's all."

But, after a moment, Garson's emotion forced him to another appeal.

"Say, inspector"— he began.

Then, abruptly, he was silent, his mouth still open to utter the words that were now held back by horror. Again, he saw the detective walking forward, out there in the corridor. And with him, as before, was a second figure, which advanced slinkingly.

Again the door swung wide, the prisoner slipped within, the door clanged shut, the bolts clattered noisily into their sockets.

And, in the watcher, terror grew—for he had seen the face of Chicago Red, another of his pals, another who had seen him kill Griggs. At last he licked his dry lips, and his voice broke in a throaty whisper.

"Say, inspector, if you've got anything against me, why"—

"Who said there was anything against you, Joe?" Burke rejoined, in a voice that was genially chiding.

"Say, inspector, if you've got anything on me"—

"What's the matter with you today, Joe? You seem nervous." Still, the official kept on with his writing.

"No, I ain't nervous," Garson cried, with a feverish effort to appear calm. "Why, what makes you think that? But this ain't exactly the place you'd pick out as a pleasant one to spend the morning." He was silent for a little, trying with all his strength to regain his self control, but with small success.

Burke believed that his opportunity was come. His hand slipped into the pocket where was the pistol, and clutched it. He stared at Garson fiercely, and spoke with a rush of the words:

"Why did you kill Eddie Griggs?"

"I didn't kill him!" The reply was quick enough, but it came weakly. Again, Garson was forced to wet his lips with a dry tongue, and to swallow painfully. "I tell you, I didn't kill him!" he repeated at last, with more force.

"You killed him last night—with this!" Burke cried, viciously. On the instant, the pistol leaped into view, pointed straight at Garson. "Why?" the inspector shouted. "Come on, now! Why?"

"I didn't, I tell you!" Garson was growing stronger, since at last the crisis was upon him. He got to his feet with lithe swiftness of movement and sprang close to the desk. He bent his head forward challengingly, to meet the glare of his accuser's eyes.

There passed many seconds, while the two men battled in silence, will warring against will. In the end it was the murderer who triumphed.

Suddenly, Burke dropped the pistol into his pocket, and lolled back in his chair. His gaze fell away from the man confronting him. In the same instant, the rigidity of Garson's form relaxed, and he straightened slowly.

"Oh, well," Burke exclaimed amiably, "I didn't really think you did, but I wasn't sure, so I had to take a chance. You understand, don't you, Joe?"

"Sure, I understand," Garson replied, with an amiability equal to the inspector's own.

Burke pressed the buzzer as the agreed signal to Cassidy. "Where did you say Mary Turner was last night?"

At the question, all Garson's fears for the woman rushed back on him with appalling force.

"I don't know where she was," he exclaimed doubtfully. He realized his blunder even as the words left his lips, and sought to correct it as best he might. "Why, yes, I do, too," he went on, as if assailed by sudden memory. "I dropped into her place kind of late, and they said she'd gone to bed—headache, I guess. Yes, she was home, of course. She didn't go out of the house all night." His insistence on the point was of itself suspicious, but eagerness to protect her dulled his wits.

"Know anything about Gilder?" Burke demanded.

"Not a thing," was the earnest answer.

The inner door opened, and Mary Turner entered the office. Garson with difficulty suppressed the cry of distress that rose to his lips. For a few moments the silence was unbroken. Then presently Burke by a gesture directed the girl to advance toward the center of the room. As she obeyed he himself went a little toward the door, and when it opened again and Dick Gilder appeared he interposed to check the young man's rush forward as his gaze fell on his bride, who stood regarding him with sad eyes.

Then, while still that curious, dynamic silence endured, Cassidy came briskly into the office.

"Say, chief," the detective said rapidly, "they've squealed."

"Squealed, eh? Do they tell the same story?" And then when the detective had answered in the affirmative he went on speaking in tones ponderous with self complacency.

"I was right, then, after all—right all the time. Good enough." Of a sudden his voice boomed somberly. "Mary Turner, I want you for the murder of"—

Garson's rush halted the sentence. He had leaped forward. His face was rigid. He broke on the inspector's words with a gesture of fury. His voice came in a hiss:

"That's a —— lie! I did it!"

CHAPTER XIX.

Anguish and Bliss.

GARSON shouted his confession without a second of reflection. But the result must have been the same had he taken years of thought. Between him and her as the victim of the law, there could be no hesitation for choice. The prime necessity was to save her, Mary, from the toils of the law that were closing around her. For himself, in the days to come, there would be a ghastly dread, but there would never be regret over the cost of saving her. He had saved her from the waters—he would save her until the end, as far as the power in him might lie.

The suddenness of it all held Mary voiceless for long seconds. She was frozen with horror of the event. When, at last, words came, they were a frantic prayer of protest.

"No, Joe! No! Don't talk—don't talk!"

"Joe has talked," Burke said, significantly.

"He did it to protect me," she stated, earnestly.

The inspector disdained such futile argument. As the doorman appeared in answer to the buzzer, he directed that the stenographer be summoned at once.

"We'll have the confession in due form," he remarked, gazing pleasedly on the three before him.

"He's not going to confess," Mary insisted, with spirit.

But Burke disregarded her completely, and spoke mechanically to Garson the formal warning required by the law.

"You are hereby cautioned that anything you say may be used against you." Then, as the stenographer entered, he went on with lively interest. "Now, Joe!"

Yet once again, Mary protested, a little wildly.

"Don't speak, Joe! Don't say a word till we can get a lawyer for you!"

The man met her pleading eyes steadily, and shook his head in refusal.

"It's no use, my girl," Burke broke in harshly. "I told you I'd get you. I'm going to try you and Garson, and the whole gang for murder—yes, every one of you. And you, Gilder," he continued, lowering on the young man who had defied him so obstinately, "you'll go to the house of detention as a material witness." He turned his gaze to Garson again, and spoke authoritatively: "Come on now, Joe!"

Garson went a step toward the desk and spoke decisively.

"If I come through, you'll let her go—and him?" he added as an afterthought, with a nod toward Dick Gilder.

"We'll get the best lawyers in the country," Mary persisted desperately. "We'll save you, Joe—we'll save you!"

Garson regarded the distraught girl with wistful eyes. But there was no trace of yielding in his voice as he replied, though he spoke very sorrowfully.

PROGRESS OF LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT

First Reports From the Every Member Canvass

Almost all the city churches taking part in the Laymen's Missionary Campaign got away to a good start on the every member canvas which is being made this week. Yesterday morning very few of the churches were able to report fully concerning their work, owing to the fact that the returns had not all been received from their various representatives, but as far as received the returns have been most gratifying.

Most churches report already that people are starting to give to missions who never gave before, and any who have been giving in the past are increasing their givings. The middle and poorer classes are responding generously.

A striking feature of the reports so far received is the surprise expressed by a number of the canvassers at the pleasure they find in the work through the cordial way in which they ar ereceived in the homes in which they have called. They report that the canvas is proving of great value in bringing the work of the Church more closely home to the individuals in the homes called on.

So far the first response has been received from Mark Street Methodist Church. This church has undertaken to obtain an increased revenue for current expenses of 50 per cent, and in the givings for missions of 100 per cent. Yesterday's reports show that the increase for current expenses so far recorded amounts to 40 per cent, and for missions to 86 per cent. Practically all the canvassers in this church are very enthusiastic with the progress they have made.

St. Paul's Church, with partial reports received from nine out of 26 districts, report total givings for current expenses of $1,386, and for missions of $995. The cards so far turned in show a number of gratifying increases.

St. Andrew's Church received only a few reports at noon yesterday, but expected many more in the course of the afternoon. Thirty cards received showed increases for missions of $125, and for current expenses of $114.

The representatives of the different churches will continue to-night, by which time it is expected that the work will be largely completed in most of the churches.

FARMERS IN FAVOR OF THE PLOUGHMEN'S CLUB

Secretary Wm. Collins, of the West Peterboro Farmers' Institute expressed the opinion this morning that it was quite probable that a Ploughmen's Club would be formed.

Mr. Collins asked for a show of hands at the Institute meetings in Ennismore and Lakefield and the response indicated that the movement was considered with favor.

ANNUAL EXCURSION

The farmers at the meetings were also asked for an expression of opinion as to again holding the excursion in June to the Agricultural College at Guelph and the response was likewise satisfactory.

These two matters will be taken up at the meetings of the East Peterboro Farmers' Institute and if they meet with favor there will be no doubt but that the Ploughmen's Club will materialize." Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., and Mr. H. B. Cowan of Farm and Dairy will present trophies for competition.

MET MAN WITH RED WHISKERS

It Was an Unfortunate Meeting for Blacklister

Rock White, a blacklister, will be another one of the chosen few to eat his dinner at the board of Castle Nesbitt on the 25th of this month. White pleaded guilty at this morning's session of police court to the charge of being drunk while on the "list."

White came through with the friend's description after he had sprung "the old gag" of not knowing the man's name. This time it was an Englishman that did the trick. White said that he met this man near the corner of Murray and Aylmer streets last evening, and that he asked the man to get him a bottle. The stranger did so, and they got drunk as a result. White was arrested. Questioned by the Chief, he said that the man worked in Robinson's livery, and that he had red whiskers. The man never asked him if he was blacklisted.

White was fined $10, and being without funds, he was sent to jail for one month.

PIANO IS PRESENTED

To Protestant Home by Young People's Societies

A very pleasing entertainment took place at the Protestant Home Tuesday evening, when about seventy-five young people representing the Guilds and societies of all the churches met to hold the dedication services on the piano, which has just been purchased through the efforts of the young people.

A short musical program of the following numbers was rendered:

Instrumental Duet—Mr. and Miss Kenyon.

Vocal Solo—"Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold"—Mr. Morphet.

Piano Solo—Miss Kendry.

Vocal Solo—"Then You'll Remember Me."—Mr. Batley.

Instrumental Duet—Mr. Treneer and Miss Girvin.

Piano Solo—Mr. Treneer.

Mr Williamson, the chairman of the Executive Committee, called on Mr. Baker to present the piano to the Home, and in a few well chosen words he asked the Board of the Home to accept the piano from the Young People's Societies.

THE DEDICATION.

Mr. Mansell, pastor of Charlotte street church, made the formal dedication, and spoke of the refining influence of music in people's lives, and how pleased he was at the idea of the young people working together with such a good purpose in view; that fifty years hence, we would appreciate the value of the gift we had made, when scattered throughout different parts of the Dominion, perhaps hearing old familiar fireside songs.

Mrs. Rogers followed Mr. Mansell's address by a short talk on the harmony and purity of music.

Miss Nichols of the Protestant Home Board, spoke of her pleasure in the work.

Miss Lancaster thanked the young people for the work they had done and were doing every week at the Home, and the evening was brought to a close by the singing of the Doxology.

GILLESPIE FOR MAYOR

To the Electors of the City of Peterboro

Ladies and Gentlemen— At the urgent solicitation of many of my business and personal friends, I have consented to become a candidate for the position of Mayor of your City, and respectfully solicit your votes and influence.

As in the past, I shall not make any rash promises to gain the vote of any elector, but, if elected, my attitude on every question will be to stand firm for the best interests of our Progressive City.

Having been interested in Peterborough all my life, and one of your aldermen for five years, I may fairly claim to be in close touch with every section and every interest of the municipality, and familiar with its needs and ambitions.

I believe that in all respects the will of the people should prevail; that a vigorous but economical administration is the best administration, and that if your Chief Magistrate is able to devote a fair proportion of his time to his civic duties, it will not be to your disadvantage if he brings with him the experience and energy he displays in the conduct of a large and successful business of his own.

If my success in the Council during the past five years has in the main met with your approval, I shall esteem it an honour to have your further approval and support in the coming contest.

Yours respectfully,

G. A. GILLESPIE

MISSION BAND GAVE CONCERT

Young People Provided an Enjoyable Evening

An admirable varied program was rendered at the entertainment held by the Faithful Workers' Mission Band of St. Paul's Church last evening in the Sunday school room. Rev Robert Pogue presided.

The entertainers of the evening were principally children, who carried out the program to the end with the ability and talent of adults. Vocal, instrumental, nursery rhymes and other simple stories of the nursery were presented. Some of the formers displayed considerable elocutionary gifts.

SUCCESS AGAIN

Another Large Audience at Charlotte St. Lecture Hall

The Ladies' Aid of Charlotte st. Methodist church presented their entertainment entitled "An afternoon tea in a friendly village in 1862," for the second time last night, in the Sunday school room. As a repetition of the night before, the auditorium and gallery were filled to their utmost capacity.

The entertainment was the same as the night previous.

CHRISTMAS TRADE QUIET AS YET

Merchants Would Like to See a Good Fall of Snow

"Yes, business has a tendency to be very quiet at present," so say a number of the merchants.

There now remains but about three weeks to Christmas and the big rush will commence about next week. The majority of the merchants are of the opinion that a big snow storm would be of the greatest assistance to the Christmas business and therefore are earnestly awaiting the first snow fall.

However, one merchant who has been in business for nearly a quarter of a century says that this year has been the best in the history of the store.

Six Months' Trip

Owing to his persistent refusals to work or look after himself, Bruce Roddy, charged with vagrancy at yesterday's session of Police Court was sentenced to six months in Central Prison.

Roddy appeared in court a few weeks ago on the same charge but Magistrate Dumble gave him another chance to make good.

PROMINENT FARMERS IN THE WEST

Arrangements Being Made for a Visit to This City

Word was received in Peterboro a few days ago that twelve representatives of the three great farmers' organizations of Western Canada are likely to wait on the Dominion Government in Ottawa on Friday, December 12 and it has been suggested that arrangements should be made to hold a meeting in Peterboro on Saturday, December 13th., to be addressed by some of these farmers. A meeting of prominent farmers living in the vicinity of Peterboro has been called for next Saturday afternoon to decide whether or not the necessary arrangements can be made.

The eastern men will represent all three of the great farmers' organizations of Western Canada including the United Farmers' of Alberta and the Saskatchewan and Manitoba Grain Growers' Association. These associations have a membership of over 50,000 farmers. These men are also the men who are behind the great Grain Growers' Company which is probably the largest cooperative concern run by farmers in the world. They own timber limits in British Columbia and are erecting their own saw mills. They have a complete chain of grain elevators throughout the West and at Fort William. They have their own flour mills and last year paid their 14,000 farmer shareholders 10 p.c. on their capital stock. This company has a reserve of several hundreds of thousands of dollars and last year did a business of over $60,000,000.

It has been proposed that a dinner be tendered these men in the National Hotel at 1 o'clock on Saturday, December 13th and that they address those present immediately afterward. As the accommodation will be limited it will be possible to issue only a small number of tickets in the event of its being found possible to bring these men to Peterboro. Arrangements at present are in the hands of Warden J. H. Garbutt and H. B. Cowan.

GROCER HAS FINE NEW STORE

Fred C. Rooke to Open His Business on Saturday

Another illustration of the rapid growth of the south end is the completion of Mr. F. C. Rooke's new grocery store on the corner of Prince and Aylmer streets. Mr. Rooke who has been a resident of this city for the past seven years sees great possibilities in this locality and this prompted him to erect his place of business.

It is a store with a dwelling house attached the dimensions of the store being 21 feet by 36 feet. It is of red brick and carries an up-to-date appearance which will no doubt add greatly to the general appearance of that section of the city.

The store will be open for business on Saturday, December 6th.

LADIES MADE GOOD USE OF THEIR TALENTS

Between $350 and $400 Returned by Knox Church Workers

The talent entertainment held by the ladies of Knox Church last evening proved a delightful success. Rev. H. J. Keith presided and an excellent program was rendered. Mr. H. Shurter reported that between $350 and $400 had been received as talent money. Mrs. Lowes of Sherbrooke street was presented with a beautiful bouquet for having collected the largest amount. Mrs. Goodfellow and Mrs. Gillespie also received honorable mention. Refreshments were served at the close.

The following program was rendered:

Piano solo, Miss Ruby Carr.
Vocal solo, Miss Gummerson.
Solo, Mr. Miles.
Recitation, Mr. J. John.
Solo, Mr. Humpage.
Solo, Mrs. Miles.

THE POULTRY SHOW

An Attractive Prize List Covers Ninety-six Classes--Exhibition Will be Held January 6th, 7th and 8th of New Year

"What's the prospects for your show, this winter?" a Review reporter asked Secretary Kelly of the Peterborough Poultry Association last night.

As a reply Mr. Kelly handed over a copy of the prize list with the suggestion to look it over. The folder looked more bulky than in former years and the contents certainly gave evidence that some extensions had been made. The list of specials includes twenty silver cups and numerous other valuable articles and cash, amounting in all to about $300. Besides these special prizes there is the regular cash prizes which will amount to over $500. A fifth prize has also been added in several of the heavier sections.

TOTAL OF 96 CLASSES.

The directors have provided for further competition till now the classes number no less than 96. This is something for which the Association may well feel proud, and it should serve to show that the sixth annual exhibition to be held on January 6th, 7th and 8th, 1914, will be worth while.

TWO GOOD JUDGES.

The judges will be Messrs. Wm. McNeil, of London, Ont., and O. H. Wilson, of Brockville, both widely known men, who are thoroughly qualified to judge, such an extensive show as is that of the local association. Already many applications are being made for prize lists and other information from points far and wide and the directors have been very much encouraged.

DEMONSTRATIONS.

Demonstrations are to be given on how to prepare fowl for market. Such demonstrations have been made before with the result that practical information was shared both by the farmer and customer. This is one of the many educational features of the show.

MEETING TO-MORROW NIGHT.

The directors have called for a full attendance at their regular monthly meeting on Thursday night at 8 o'clock, and as this will be the last meeting before the show, there are several matters of importance to be considered.

GRADUATE NURSE TO BE ENGAGED FOR MEDICAL INSPECTION OF SCHOOLS

Board of Education Also Approves of "Mothers" Meetings and Grants Use of Rooms—

The Board of Education met in regular session last evening with Chairman Dr. Morrison presiding and the usual routine business was transacted.

The Peterborough Horticultural Society wrote the Board regarding pupils of the Central School who were abusing their privileges of being allowed to play in the northeast part of the park opposite the school. As the Society were without the services of a caretaker at present the Board was asked to give the matter their serious consideration. Inspector Mowat will enquire into the matter and the children will be stopped running across the flower beds and the lower part of the park.

WILL ATTEND LECTURE.

The Board as a whole accepted the invitation to the lecture to be given this evening by Dr. Struthers at the Collegiate Institute.

APPOINT GRADUATE NURSE.

The report of the Supervision Committee recommended the appointment of a graduate nurse as follows:

To the Chairman and Members of the Board of Education:

Your Committee beg to report and recommend as follows:

1. That a graduate nurse be appointed from January 1st, 1914, whose duties shall consist in Medical Supervision of the pupils of the public schools and that the Committee of Appointments be authorized to advertise for such nurse.

2. That the Board approve of the "Mothers'" meeting in the schools as suggested by the deputation of the "Women's Council" at the last meeting of the Board and that use of class rooms in each school be granted for the purpose, the necessary arrangements in connection therewith to be satisfactory to the Inspector.

3. That the existing arrangement with the Y.M.C.A. for use of their gymnasium and instruction for the pupils of the Collegiate Institute for a term of five months from November 1st, at $120.00 payable monthly, be continued.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN CRANE,
Chairman.

In making the above report Mr. Crane remarked that the matter had been brought before the Board on previous occasions and as claimed at the last meeting of the Board it would certainly be a great thing for the schools. No school should be complete without medical examination.

Mr. Hill was of the opinion that the physical as well as the mental condition of the children at school should be considered and therefore he was greatly in favor of the new movement. The physical side tended a great deal to make good men and good women as well as the mental educational value. The idea was one of the most important dealt with by the Board for some years. The work was far reaching and the best thing the Board could possibly introduce. Mr. Hill also pointed out that this would probably be only elementary so prominent would the work become.

Mr. Turner enquired if it were fair to pass this thing when members were retiring. The new members might not want to be saddled up with this affair. Chairman Morrison came to the rescue, saying that if it were left over until the new year it would no doubt be entirely put back and that the inspection was one of the biggest necessities of their schools.

The members present at the meeting were Dr. Morrison, Chairman; Messrs. W. H. Hill, Vincent Eastwood, Col. Miller, Dr. Burnham, Dr. Middleton, B. F. Ackerman, L. M. Hayes, K.C., John Crane.

The report on the inspection of the boiler at the Central School was found highly satisfactory.

MANUAL TRAINING.

Inspector A. H. Leake reported by writing on the manual training classes. The teaching staff was of the best while several small changes were mentioned such as the pupils of the high school using text books in the manual training. Inspector Leake also advised that another teacher be appointed to assist Mr. Hagerman so he would be able to give more assistance to the lower grades. This would give Mr. Hagerman an opportunity to supervise the elementary work.

The matter will be dealt with by the Supervision Committee. The equipment of the classes was reported to be in the best of condition and the work carried on in the domestic science class very satisfactory.

Mr. Leake advised that more room be given to this class so that more classes could be accommodated. The Supervision Committee will also look after this matter.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.

Inspector Mowat reported the following school attendance:

Milady's Mirror

Sports Help Good Looks.

The best exercises for women, says a physical director in a girls' college, are those that are simply good fun and have no such special object as the winning of a match.

I would not for worlds forbid women to play games like tennis, hockey and golf, provided that they will not take them seriously.

The two essentials of any form of physical exercise are that it should be enjoyable and that it should be rhythmic. If you enjoy thoroughly, your muscles may get fatigued, but your nerve force will not get exhausted, and if the exercise is rhythmic, if it goes with a swing that brings every muscle of the body into play, then the fatigue will be that glorious, glowing laxness of body.

The secret of that swing, of that rhythm, is this: The body must move the limbs and not the limbs the body. Watch a fine walker, a fine oarsman, a fine jumper. It is always the body that lifts and impels the limb. There, indeed, you have the secret of grace in every action of life—you must make a gesture with your whole body, with your whole will.

A great weakness of golf, as of most other games played with a handle, is that the clubs must be swung on the right side of the body.

Instead of correcting the unwise preference we give to the right hand, such games accentuate it whereby one set of muscles (and one part of the brain) are developed at the expense of another, while the unvaried swing from right to left puts the body out of poise.

Hockey, too, has this fault (though its rhythm is more varied and continuous) and has the additional one of a low crouched attitude which cramps the organs and impedes the breathing.

Tennis is some ways finer. This more than any other ball game exercises every part of the body harmoniously. Its poses and gestures are many and varied; the player gets a quick eye, a lightning flick of the wrist, the instantaneous speed of a cat on the pounce, the power to hit with arm and body curled or far extended, and, if he will and is wise, he may hold the racket indifferently in his right hand or his left.

Unfortunately, though the rhythm is continuous, it is jerky, and, though the gestures are varied, few of them are noble—a tennis player rarely looks dignified—while, when the game is played well, the nervous tension (for women at least) is apt to be too great.

Fencing is too fine an exercise to be ignored. It gives sureness of poise, lightness of limb, grace of carriage and a quickness of eye and of wrist far greater than tennis gives. It commonly shares with golf the unwise preference for the right hand (though some are wise enough to fence with either hand), and it tends to overdevelop the muscles of the wrist and arm.

As to horse riding, there is no sport more exhilarating. There is nothing in motion more splendid than the free movement of the brave creature under you, his quick response to hand or foot, the mingled sense of hazard and security, the sense of being launched in air, the flashing picture of the way and the quick whistle of the wind.

But riding may be overdone, even by strong women. The woman who rides to hounds is a fine picture on horseback, but she is not always graceful on foot.

Brushing the Teeth.

In brushing the teeth use the brush downward for the upper teeth and from the gums upward for the lower teeth. By this method the bristles go between the teeth as well as over the front and sides. The teeth always must be recognized for what they are—invaluable adjuncts to both beauty and health. Consequently no pains are too great to secure perfect cleanliness of the teeth and mouth. If there is too much acidity in the system the teeth will decay quickly and much suffering will be entailed. To counteract this an alkaline dentifrice should be used.

If the teeth are yellow or show discolored spots a little powdered pumice stone can be used. It should be slightly moistened so that it will adhere to the orange wood stick with which it is rubbed on the spots. After brushing the teeth an antiseptic mouth wash should be used.

Fat Women Must Avoid Tight Clothes.

The roly poly fat woman, short and dumpy; the very tall big woman who is fatter than she wants to be and all the other types of stout women are clamoring for the costume which will give them long lines. The well dressed stout woman learned long ago that if she would look her best she must avoid tight clothes. She must also ignore the costume that is conspicuous, whether it is the fabric, the color or the design which makes it so, says the Woman's Home Companion.

Soft materials which drape easily, striped fabrics where the stripe is not too pronounced and neutral colors are all things which the stout woman should consider in planning her clothes. Purple, navy blue, the darkest of browns and greens and deep toned taupes are all becoming and appropriate colors for the very stout woman.

PRACTICAL TALKS TO FARMERS' ANNUAL INSTITUTE MEETINGS

6,000 pounds of milk per annum and thereby equalling Canada's average? If you are getting only 5,000 pounds, how much are you making out of them in money? That is what the trouble is, there isn't enough figuring done. That is where the business principles come in. Mr. Paget cited one instance where a farmer had twenty-six cows. When a testing association was formed in his district and he gave it a trial, he found that he had only six cows among his herd that were actually paying for their feed. He weeded his cows out and at the end of three years he had sixteen cows giving 10,000 pounds more milk than the twenty-six he formerly had. This was done by intelligent advocating of business principles.

Labor Is Saved.

People say that they have enough work with the cows let alone having to weigh each cow's milk. The above illustration will show that labor is saved, not increased, and more money is made. Boys will take an interest in this kind of work and if boys could be kept interested there would be fewer of them leaving home to have their places taken by boys and men from other lands who do not as a general rule, prove a success.

In closing Mr. Paget gave some advice along the lines of getting a good herd started. Pick out the best cow, get a good sire and breed. Do not look for a sire with a first-class pedigree, but rather for a sire with a first-class record for milk. Then you will be assured of abundance of good milk and that is the main object of the work of a dairyman.

Good Buildings, Etc.

The next speaker was Mr. H. K. Denyes, of Halloway. Mr. Denyes dwelt for a few moments on dairying, stating that science was immortal. His earliest recollection of cows is of the time when he spent Saturday in cleaning the open cow shed. Then that stage was passed over and the shed was transformed into a stable. As years went on better and more up-to-date stables were erected and this year he has just completed a thoroughly modern barn. He urged his listeners to erect only first class barns when building, having abundance of air and light, which are essentials of good dairying.

Mr. Denyes also advised them along the lines of raising calves. When you are raising calves be sure and raise only vigorous ones. Be sure and "stay on the job" for it is very easy to spoil them. Give them whole milk for four weeks, for although it costs a little more, it pays in the end. In winter feed them on hay and rolled oats in preference to roots.

He spoke of the mistake often made in breding heifers too young. Young heifers should not be allowed to run at large with a young bull for often this spoils the good work done by the owner when these heifers were young. Let the average heifer come in when it is about three years old, and much better results will be obtained.

The labor question also came under Mr. Denyes' consideration. He brought forth a personal instance of his son and a hired boy who took great interest in the weighing of milk. Each boy was given the same number of cows and a rivalry sprung up which keeps their interest centred on their work and they do not become discontented. Neither of them would care to sever his connections with the farm and that is the way all farmers' sons should be.

Horse Raising.

The question about which Mr. Denyes was to speak was "The Raising of Horses for Profit," but he took up considerable time in dealing with dairying, so that he just gave a brief synopsis of his own address. He spoke very highly of the custom which prevails in that section of the province of raising heavy draught horses. The foreign markets demand these as does the West, thus it is a very profitable work. In raising horses, breeding should be the main question. "If your mare is of the best, then bring her to the best sire. If your mare is not of the best, then don't use her for breeding purposes. Use only an A1 mare. Be sure and bring her to a good sire, even if it is inconvenient. It pays in the end.

In conclusion, Mr. Denyes dwelt for a few moments on not feeding a mare too much grain when she is in fold, and working her some, though not too much.

Never Starve to Death.

Mr. E. A. Peck M.P.P., who was present, was called upon to address the meeting and received a great ovation. He stated that he was pleased to have an opportunity to speak to them and while he had no practical experience at farming he was, however, interested in them and their occupation. He admired them because they were the producers of the food stuff and every one depends upon them. He remarked that he has heard of farmers being hard up for money but he never heard of any farmer starving to death, which is no uncommon occurrence in the big cities. Being elected member of the Provincial Parliament, he felt it his duty to attend these meetings for he knew that they were doing a great work. They teach the farmers to increase the amount of produce and every increase adds to the wealth of the community. He closed by assuring them that if anything could be done through legislature to help them in their work, he would be only too glad to assist.

Fungi Diseases.

Mr. C. E. McDowel, assistant district representative of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, then gave a very interesting and instructive address on fungi diseases. Mr. McDowel, who is comparatively a stranger in this district, stated that he was pleased to make their acquaintance and invited them to come and see them at their head office in Norwood, or their branch office in this city, which was open on Saturday afternoon. He also assured them that he and Mr. F. C. McCrea, the head representative, would be only too pleased to assist them in any way possible.

The last speaker at the afternoon meeting was Mr. George Gillespie, President of the Eastern Dairymen's Association. Mr. Gillespie, after stating that he was interested in agriculture in all its branches, made known the fact that a cow testing association had been formed in this district last year, and at the present time has the largest number of cows under test than has any other association in the province. He referred to the scarcity of cows on the other side of the line and warned his listeners against selling theirs to buyers because a tempting price was offered, for no doubt better prices will be obtainable in the near future. He considered the scarcity of eggs and stated that during the past six weeks not one case of fresh eggs had been delivered to his store. Eggs were bound to go higher as are butter and milk, and if the demand is increased then the produce must increase and this can be done only by adopting the methods advised at these Farmers' Institute meetings.

Farm Home and Nation.

In the absence of Reeve Mr. J. Fitzgerald, Mr. Moore again occupied the chair at the evening meeting. The hall was filled to its capacity and a goodly portion of the audience were ladies, which showed that they were taking a great interest in the work.

The first speaker was Mr. Denyes, and his subject was "Farm, Home and Nation." He remarked that he was pleased to note the large percentage of the audience that were women and women interested in agriculture. He spoke of Canada as a mighty factor of the British Empire and richly endowed with natural resources, such as fisheries, minerals, forests and arable lands. The latter is the attraction of the people of the densely populated districts of Europe, they look forward to Canada as their future home. It is our duty when these people arrive to assist them in becoming good citizens and good British subjects.

Agriculture is a great industry and necessitates considerable work. Farmers therefore need their boys. The example set by boys who have left the farm and to take up other professions is very tempting for 75 per cent. of the professional men of today, such as lawyers, doctors, clergymen, etc., are farmers' sons. Nevertheless these boys are needed on the farm and the only way to keep them is to give them privileges and make them co-partners. Too many farmers give their entire attention to the raising of their stock and crop and not enough to themselves and their children. As an illustration, Mr. Denyes cited an instance of a clergyman who was visiting in Michigan. This clergyman's host was a great live stock man and knew the pedigree of every animal in his barns to perfection. The minister enquired the age of a few of his children and the farmer couldn't tell him. He'd have to "ask the missus." This is too often the case. Farmers spend their time on dumb animals when they should pay a little attention to their families. Some of the men have acquired bad habits which they should stop and give good example to their own and their neighbors' children. Read good literature and become educated so that by talking you will educate your children and home will be a pleasant place which they will loathe to leave.

The farmers' wives and daughters are working too hard. The majority of them work like slaves and then if dinner isn't ready the man comes in a little angry. You should try to be pleasant at least if you cannot assist them in their work. Such heavy work as milking, turning the washing machine and churning, should not be the occupation of the housewife, but rather the occupation of the male portion of the house.

The farmer should improve the condition and the appearance of his home at once if he has not already done so. The yard should be kept clean and the lawn in first class condition. Good magazines and papers should be subscribed for and his children thereby given an idea of the doings of the outside world. Thus the culture of the nation depends more or less upon the culture of the farmers' family and the culture of his home.

Before beginning his address on "The Relations that should exist between the Producer, Proprietor and Maker," Mr. Paget, the next speaker, spoke a few words about making the home cheerful and modern for the young people and thus assist in keeping the boys and girls at home. We, as fathers and mothers, should make our boys and girls co-partners and they will take an interest in our work. I have known men who have had families of boys leave the farm and not become a success at any other position, the fault of which does not entirely rest on the boy." Mr. Paget then cited an instance of a man he knew who had two sons. One day he gave one of them a colt. The lad cared for it and tended to it but a horse buyer drove up to the house one day and without asking the boy, the father sold the colt and kept the money. This sort of thing is not right and it has caused many a farmer's boy to leave home. Both boys and girls should be made co-partners.

In reference to his subject Mr. Paget stated that it was a very old one but the fundamental principle is co-operation and it was about this he centred his address. It is a necessity for agriculturists to work in co-operation as do the manufacturers who are very strong. If the agriculturist wish to succeed they must follow the manufacturers' plan. It was impossible for Mr. Paget to go into all the advantages the farmer would gain, so he limited his discourse more or less to co-operation among farmers in regard to the selling of milk.

Along the Niagara Peninsula cheese factories have for years been one of the main assets to the success of the farmer. They have in fact become wealthy through these factories, but of late they are making a grave mistake. The habit of selling the milk to buyers from Detroit and other cities and to the condensing factories has increased rapidly. It is true that these people pay a little more than do the cheese factories, but does the farmer gain anything. He does not. The by-products of milk are decreasing in quality and number. When a farmer takes milk to a factory he gets the sweet whey. This whey is the best possible food for pigs and calves. When the farmer sells to the condenser and city buyer he gets no whey and so he ceases to raise calves and pigs. He cannot keep up his cattle stock if he doesn't raise calves and as soon as his cows play out he sees his mistake.

Another sideline of this question which Mr. Paget considered was the practise of about three-twentieths of the farmers sending bad and unfit milk to the factories. Owing to the competition it is impossible for the owner of the fatcory to refuse him but at the same time these few are lessening the value of the cheese producd in the vicinity. It is up to the other farmers to stop this and if all united a change for the better would soon take place.

Concluding Mr. Paget spoke to the ladies about forming a ladies' institute and urged them to write for an organizer to come and get it started so that they could become acquainted with the latest methods of farming and thereby greatly assist in this wonderful work.

Mr. E. F. Ellis of the "Farm and Dairy" was the next speaker, and he went farther into the subject of co-operation than did Mr. Paget. Mr. Ellis stated that while he attended the First National Conference on Marketing and Farm Credits called together in Chicago last spring, by the farm press, many delegates spoke greatly in favor of co-operation. Just as the idea was gaining rapid credence with that great delegation and when enthusiasm was at its height, Dr. J. W. Spillman of the United States Department of Agriculture in a short address, presented one phrase of co-operative theory that completely cooled the enthusiasm of many and gave the rest of the gathering such a serious problem to think over that their minds had not completely cleared when the conference ended. His few remarks were "General decrease in the cost of markting would first benefit the farmer by increasing his profits. This would stimulate increased productions which in turn would result in the falling of prices, so that ultimately the consumer would get the full benefit of the saving affected in marketing."

Mr. Ellis stated that he did not agree with Dr. Spillman's plan which was purely socialistic, being this: That the United States government establish a marketing bureau with practically unlimited powers. This bureau would make a study of market conditions and advise farmers as to the acreage of each crop needed each year. In other words, this bureau would practically direct farming operations on every farm in the United States. Natural conditions would be different as they are different when one compares New Westminster Valley to Eastern Canada in regard to dairying. The result would be that the land in certain places would increase in value thus increasing rent and only the land owners could live. The point which Mr. Ellis brought out was this: Co-operation does not lead to increased land values, in both city and country, and while the increase may be of advantage to the original land owners, it acts as a mortgage on the prosperity of the next and all suceeding generations. If Mr. Ellis' reasoning is correct, co-operation must utterly fail to benefit humanity at large, unless along with co-operation some system is adopted whereby the community at large will benefit by these increased land values.

Mr. McDowel and Mr. Geo. Gillespie were called upon, but owing to the lateness of the hour they did not respond.

In connection with the meeting the following musical program was rendered:

AT ENNISMORE

The first of the regular winter meetings of the Farmers' Institute was held in Ennismore yesterday afternoon and evening. A splendid list of speakers brought a goodly number of agriculturists to both meetings which were presided over by the President, Mr. C. E. Moore.

At the Institute meeting yesterday afternoon Mr. J. N. Paget, of Canboro, a native of Peterborough County, addressed the meeting on "Profit and Loss in Dairying." In the opening of his address Mr. Paget urged upon the men in the audience to question him upon any point in which he had not touched.

Other speakers were: Messrs. Denyes, McDowall, E. A. Peck, M.P.P., County Clerk Elliot, Father FitzPatrick, and President Moore.

About eight years ago Hon. Sydney Fisher paid a visit to Denmark, which country has a world-wide reputation for its production of milk and butter. As a result the value of each individual cow was now the subject of study. Six years ago cow-testing associations began to be formed and since that time the average producing capacity of each cow in Ontario has been doubled.

The speaker said that in travelling up and down Ontario only three in every ten knew what the cows were doing. Unfortunately the agricultural people had gotten into the rut of taking too much for granted, of not applying business methods in their business. This was not as it should be.

Agriculture to-day was the greatest industry in the world—the foundation principle of the prosperity of the country. There was not another existing industry that did not depend upon agriculture.

If you have twenty cows in a barn you may say "My cows are paying," but the fact might be that four, five or six of them might be eating the heads off the others. Through the cow-testing system the formers discover the poor cows and discard them, replacing them by cows that paid. One farmer had twenty-six cows. A cow-testing association was organized in his district and he found that only six of them were paying for their feed. He weeded his cows out and at the end of three years had sixteen cows giving 10,000 pounds of milk more than twenty-six cows formerly gave him. This solved the labor problem, as he himself had time to milk sixteen, and saved him the price of the keeping of the ten extra.

"Get rid of the cow that is not giving 6,000 pounds of milk per annum," was the speaker's advice to those present. He met one man who had twenty-four cows and each of them netted over 10,000 pounds of milk a year. This had been accomplished by careful breeding, by which means he hoped to get twenty-five cows yielding 12,000 pounds of milk per annum. There are good cows in all breeds, but then, getting a sire is a most important consideration. A young sire of good breed can be boght from $75 to $150, which is little in comparison to the improved value of the stocks of the next generation.

The first consideration is not feed; it is the cow's capacity to produce milk. A cow with a poor producing capacity cannot be made to give much milk, by giving her all the feed she could eat.

By weighing the milk and estimating thus, the production of the animal, was the only way to prove which were the best cows.

What agriculturists in this country wanted was to feed the cows food that cost the least for production. Well cured alfalfa, clover hay, and corn fed through the silo was ideal food for cows. Bran costs $24 per ton. Alfalfa, with almost the some food value, costs only from $2 to $5 a ton.

Profit was the object of keeping the cows, and if they were handled properly there was no other branch of agriculture that would pay better than that of the dairy cow.

Mr. C. E. McDowel, Assistant District Representative, opened his speech by the statement that in his opinion no other country would respond so readily to a system of underdrainage as Peterborough County. By this drainage the swamps of this county could be made the best producing area, and in the case of land already producing good crops, the yield would be increased from 15 to 30 per cent. In case a farmer does not have the capital to invest in under-drainage he can borrow all the money he needs from the Ontario Legislature, through the County Council, which can be repaid in yearly installments, in twenty years' time.

The speaker explained that the benefit of drainage was three-fold. It had a physical effect on the soil that made it more porous. It made the percolation of air freer, and, paradoxial, though it might seem, it give the soil a better supply of water. The plant could not use standing water, but owing to the system of underdrainage the roots were supplied with more running water.

Drainage made the soil easier to work; made the soil dry and warm earlier in the spring; it will ventilate the soil properly and supply water when water is most needed. It was the business of the District Representative and his assistant to survey the farm of any farmer intending to put in a system of underdrainage. This was done free of charge.

The third speaker was Mr. H. K. Denyes of Halloway, whose subject was "The Raising of Horses for Profit." A man might have for his chief branch on the farm the raising of dairy or beef cows, but as a side line there was good money in the raising of horses.

In the raising of horses careless breeding must be avoided, and good breed, mares must be selected. A few years ago the speaker bought a couple of mares and he inspected hundreds before he found two to suit her. Then the breeder must be very careful in selecting a sire, and stallions should be very cautiously selected. Men couldn't afford to spend time breeding from poor stock.

The mares, while in foal, should not be given too heavy food. They should have freedom and liberty and be given plenty of exercise. Even working the mares before the foal was not going too far in this line.

To-day there was more profit for the raisers of the heavy horses than the breeders of the light horses. It was claimed that the market for horses was on the decline. But even so, horses could be raised for years yet, at a handsome profit. Hundreds of carloads of heavy horses were shipped to the West every year, and these commanded a good price.

The wintering of colts was a phase of horse raising that required much attention. Often colts became in poor condition because they were neglected in the winter. Besides timothy hay and oats, bran should be an article of diet. Separated milk was also a good article of diet.

In closing, the speaker said that although prices for horses might go down it was still advisable to take up breeding horses as a side line for money making.

Mr. Smith of "Farm and Dairy" spoke on the use of manure on the farm. It was the handling of the "loose ends" of a business that decided whether it should be a failure or a success. The reason why the average wheat production in the West was decreasing was because the farms were not being fertilized.

He dealt with the value of manures and showed how a man with 10 cows got $250 a year return from his cattle. There were three ways of handling manure. By leaving it in an open pile a lot of its value was lost. Piling it in a shed was a second method, but the best was to get the manure out on to the field as quickly as possible. In Denmark, the manure was piled over a tank. Then the dry material was spread on the fields and the liquid manure was sprayed on the fields. This was the system used in Denmark, where dairying was carried on as it was in no other country in the world.

"Agriculture is the oldest and most important industry on the face of the earth," said Mr. Peck, M.P.P., "and I don't think anyone here, unless it is our veteran, Mr. Collins, can think more of the value of the Farmers' Institute than I do."

The Farmers' Institutes were the means of keeping the young men on the farm, and of teaching the farmers to get increased crops without increase in labor or cost. Mr. Peck praised very highly the Farmers' Club, and suggested that the use of electricity on the farm would be a good subject for the Institute.

Mr. Elliott, County Treasurer, made a brief speech. As a past President, Mr. Elliott praised the services of Mr. Collins, the energetic Secretary-Treasurer of the Farmers' Institute. Mr. Elliott also spoke on his experience in under drainage, saying: "You may raise horses, beef, cattle or dairy cattle, but unless your land is drained you have started wrong.

The Evening Meeting.

At the evening meeting a programme was presented which was greatly enjoyed. The ease with which this arrangement was made possible, speaks well for the eminent suitability of the hall for the purpose of holding the meeting. It is spacious, light, and can be well heated, and offers every accommodation to speakers and audiences.

The subject of Mr. Denyes' address at the evening meeting was "The Farm, Home and Nation." The speaker first referred to Canada as a great nation and as a factor in the mighty British Empire. A great nation must have stupendous natural resources—fisheries, forests, minerals, arable lands, etc., and in this respect Canada had been richly endowed. She was richer, perhaps in natural resources than any other country in the world.

We were accustomed to speak of the farm as producing the food for the people of Canada. But the farm not only produced the food for Canada, but they produced the men for Canada. In the past the farm had produced seventy-five per cent. of our profesional men, clergymen, doctors and lawyers.

Many a farmer gave a lot of his time to breeding and developing the dairy cow, and a large number who did, neglected to develop himself, who is of far more importance than the bacon hog or the dairy cattle.

Illustrating this point, the lecturer told of a clergyman who went into a farmer's home in Michigan. He was taken out to view the stock, and was given their age, value and pedigree by the farmer, who had them all at his finger-tips. When the clergyman went into the house he asked of the farmer, "So this is your son, George? How old is he?" "I don't know," was the answer, I'll ask my wife." "And how old is Jane?" "I am not certain," was the second response, and again the farmer referred to his better-half for the answer.

Some farmers were making the mistake of spending their time on dumb animals, and not enough of it in their homes. They failed to develop themselves and their children, forgetting that the farm is not only producing the nation's food but the nation's men. He forgets that there is a typical man to aspire to as well as a typical hog, or a typical cow. He does not realize the responsibility that is on him in regard to his own culture, and that of his wife and sons and daughters.

To a great many farmers their wives and daughters are little better than slaves—only a part of the force to do the work around the home. In the home women were worked too hard and men should help in domestic duties more than they do.

The farmer should improve the condition of his home at once, if it was not already so arranged. If he did not the ultimate result would be infinitely below what he might otherwise have attained in this world. They should see that first class reading matter was to be had in their houses. Their residences should be made as beautiful as possible, inside and out, and it should be seen to that their sons and daughters be given an insight into the questions of the day.

This was what the farmer owed to himself and posterity. And in improving the home the community was improved and this in turn exerted an influence upon the nation. Thus did the culture of the nation depend, in a measure, on the culture in the farm homes.

The second address was given by Mr. Paget, on the subject "The Relations that should exist between Producer, Proprietor and Maker." In opening his address Mr. Paget said that his answer to the problem of the sales of farm and dairy products was "co-operation." Not perhaps what is often known as co-operation, but merely the farmer agreeing to supply the makers of butter and cheese with the highest quality of milk and cream. Unless the cheese factories and creameries were given the best milk, they could not produce the best quality of cheese. Then there was the manufacturers' part of the co-operative system. It was his duty to se that the products were handled in the most modern way and that the making of the cheese or butter be carefully looked after.

But the one great essential in this matter, and the one that was most often neglected, was that of cooling the milk before it was delivered. All the cream should be cooled to 60 degrees before it was sent, and should be kept at that temperature till it reached the factory. Then, too, when the cream, separated at one time, was mixed with that separated on a previous occasion, both should be cooled before they were mixed together.

In conclusion, the speaker emphasized that the cooling of the milk was the secret of the whole thing. This would allow the butter-maker to control the acid in the cream.

The Rev. Father Fitzpatrick gave a brief address. He referred to what a previous speaker had said about the home life of the farmers and endorsed it heartily. There was no doubt that some farmers did neglect the culture of the home in their eagerness in the pursuit of material things. He dwelt upon the influence of the home in the nation.

Then, too, the speaker heartily endorsed the system of co-operation, as formulated by a previous speaker, and thought that it was the best way to answer the sales problem.

The programme given last night, which was most heartily enjoyed, was as follows:

Solo—Mr. C. Telford.
Duet—Mrs. Telford and Mrs. Scollard.
Solo—Mr. Telford.
Solo—Miss Lyde Killen.

The farmers unanimously endorsed the organization of a Farmers' Club, which may be commenced next summer, providing other centres endorse it.

Mr. and Mrs. Scollard, Ennismore, entertained the speakers of the day, during the time they spent in the village. Their hospitality was thorough, and the result of their efforts to make the visitors at home was greatly enjoyed.

AMERICAN VILLAGES.

Here is a Writer Who Claims They Are Positively Hideous.

No distinctively American style has arisen, and the average American home remains as ugly and as undistinguished as a Zulu kraal. In its essence it is simply a square box. And from that archetype it proceeds upward, not through degrees of beauty, but through degrees of hideousness. The more it is plastered with ornament the more vulgar and forbidding it becomes. The more it is adorned with color the more that color becomes a madness, a debauch, a public indecency.

Take a train ride through any American state and you will be sickened by the chaotic ugliness of the flitting villages—houses sprawling and shapeless, a huge advertising sign upon every flat wall, an intolerable effect of carelessness, ignorance, squalor, bad taste and downright viciousness.

But make the same sort of journey through France or Germany—say from Bremen to Munich or from Paris to Lyons—or through Austria or Italy or Switzerland, and you will be charmed by the beautiful harmony visible on all sides, the subordination of details to general effects, the instinctive feeling for color, the sound grouping, the constant presence of a tradition and a style. The design of the peasant houses changes twenty times between the Westphalian plain and the foothills of the Alps, but in every change there is a subtle reflection of the physical environment, an unmistakable expression of human aspiration, worldly estate and character.

I don't know any ugly village between Bremen and Munich, nor even a village without its distinction, its special beauty, its individual charm. But I don't know of a village between Washington and Chicago that is not frankly appalling.—Smart Set.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

SECRETARY HEWITT PROPOSES NEW RULE FOR OVERTIME PLAY

List of Amendments to be Considered at the O.H.A. Annual Meeting

Secretary Bond of the local Hockey Club has received a copy of the following amendments to be consideration at the annual meeting of the O.H.A. at Toronto next Saturday.

DESIGNATION OF PLAYERS

James T. Sutherland, of Kingston, proposes that the players of a team be designated as follows: Goalkeeper right defence, left defence, rover, centre, right wing and left wing. This is merely to be in keeping with the times and the style of defence play, dropping the old designations of "point" and "cover-point" which are meaningless now.

AN AUXILIARY JUMPER

Mr. Sutherland also wants a gong sounded by the timekeepers to inform the referee of any variance in the time. He also suggests the following amendment: "All clubs must have an auxiliary jumper directly opposite in color to their regular club sweaters. The home club to wear same when referee finds regular club sweaters conflicting."

FOR EXTRA-TIME GAMES.

All O.H.A. games must be played to a finish, but when the teams are a tie at full time Secretary Hewitt proposes a definite rule, so that there will be ten minutes' play each way without any rest, and if similar periods are necessary, a five-minute rest after each ten minutes of play.

Mr Hewitt also suggests that the off-side line of the goalkeeper be extended to ten feet instead of three as is the rule at present. This applies only to shots that hit the goalkeeper and bound off, not those played with his stick.

AMENDMENT TO RESIDENCE RULE

A very important amendment is that proposed by H. E. Baxter, of Drumbo, regarding the residence rule of the association. At present the rule is that a player residing in a "rural district" must play with the O.H.A. club in the nearest town to his residence. The Drumbo Club wishes to give "a village or police village" the same privileges as a "rural district," so that players in those places would be eligible to play in their nearest O.H.A. town. The great drawback to this arrangement would be the incentive to consolation of teams in adjoining villages to the detriment of other clubs and the hockey of the district.

It is proposed to increase the honorarium of the secretary to $750 per annum.

PRESENT MEDALS

At this meeting Mr. R. M. Glover will bring forward his suggestion that medals be presented to group winners in the association.

Bars Rhodes Scholars.

The recent change in the Oxford athletic regulations, debarring those over 20 from taking part in freshman athletics will have the effect of keeping out practically all of Canada's Rhodes scholars. The purpose of the rule was to encourage the English public school boy of 18 and 19 to take more interest in athletics, but the effect falls indiscriminately on Rhodes scholars and others who enter Oxford from other universities. Practically all Rhodes scholars are at least 21 when they enter Oxford.

Mr. Cline Carruthers, the Rhodes scholar this year from the University of Toronto, and J. H. Taylor, will be also registered at Oxford, will be among those affected.

Blotchy Skin.

The person with a blotchy skin would be greatly benefited by taking the juice of a lemon squeezed into a glass of hot water. Fruit acids are almost magical in their effects upon the complexion if taken properly. When the skin shows signs of a sallow, thick look or angry red spots not coming from sunburn, but from some internal complaint, phosphate of soda, one teaspoonful to a glass of very hot water, taken before breakfast, will cure the condition. This to be taken until the skin clears.

LATEST IN STAR GAZING.

New and Simple Method by Which Asteroids Are Discovered.

An apparatus has been invented and is now in regular use that will actually discover any new stars that may appear in the sky. The ordinary method of discovering new comets, new stars and the tiny planets called asteroids is by careful observation based upon a thorough knowledge of the stars, but the new method, which so far is only being used to discover asteroids, is so easy that a person who did not know one from another could make the discoveries.

A telescope is pointed to a section of the sky, and then, from the stock of negatives of old photographs of the heavens that every observatory collects, a negative covering the same section is selected. This negative is placed under a lens, and behind the negative is placed a green light. In looking through the lens one can discern the tiny points of green light which represent each star.

The observer then looks through the telescope with one eye and through the lens at the negative with the other eye.

Careful adjustments will soon bring the two images into perfect register, as the printers say. Every familiar star seen through the telescope doubles up with its picture on the photographic negative and thus has a greenish light. But if on that night in that section of the sky an asteroid appears it will not be present on the old negative, and so to the observer it will appear in its normal reddish or yellowish color, while every other star appears green. A glance through the combined apparatus will show whether or not there is an asteroid in the field of the telescope that night.—Saturday Evening Post.

BUILT OVER A FLOOD.

Philadelphia Some Day May Tumble Into an Underground Lake.

Engineers in charge of the excavations for the foundations of the addition to the Ritz-Carlton hotel, at Broad and Walnut streets, asserted that central Philadelphia, with its skyscrapers, is resting on a floating island and may at any moment be engulfed in quicksand.

Forty-five feet below the street level workmen poked their picks through the shell-like covering of an underground lake, the waters of which rise and fall with the movements of the tide. The engineers assert that far underground this "lost water" is ebbing and flowing, just as at the open seashore.

How high the water rises or how low it falls is difficult to figure, they say, for this subterranean flood which is surging backward and forward beneath Philadelphia is not "free" water. —Philadelphia Cor. New-York Sun.

Queer Sequence of Coincidences.

Strange coincidences associated with a popular superstition were mentioned at a recent meeting of the municipal council of Milton Regis, Kent, England, in relation to the death of Frederick Littlewood, J. P., aged seventy-three, an ex-chairman of the urban council, which took place last week as the result of an apoplectic seizure.

Four years ago, when Mr. Littlewood had a first stroke, his portrait in the council chamber was found to have fallen. At the time of his second seizure another picture in the same room fell. The day after Mr. Littlewood's death an official on entering the council room observed that another picture had fallen, the glass being smashed.

He Will Train the German Athletes.

Alva E. Kraenzlein, who has been selected by the German Imperial Olympic games commission to train the German teams which will compete in the next Olympic games in 1916, won four contests in the Olympic games in Paris in 1900. He is recognized as one of the greatest trainers in the world, and soon after the visiting committee reached this country it was reported that he would likely be chosen. Although born in Germany, he has lived in this country since he was nine years old. His appointment has been approved in Berlin.

Women to Blame, of Course.

John T. Russell, president of the Master Butchers' Association of America, blames the housewives of the country for the high cost of living. "A fourth part of all the meat killed for the table is wasted," he says. "Poor families refuse to be content with chuck and round steak, despite the fact that those cuts can be made delicious by correct cooking, and the great American family of meat eaters fails to practice proper economy in its meat diet."

Sand is shipped from Seattle to Honolulu for concrete making.

JAMES ROSS' PICTURES.

Late Capitalist Was An Enthusiastic Collector of Art.

People who knew the famous head of the Dominion Coal Co. only as a man of business can have little conception of the man's deep and delicate love of art. In his office he was a financial leader, brusque in manner, swift in decision, ruthless in attack. The big, shaggy head—truly leonine in character—had an air of adamantine resolution about it. There was no room there for sentiment or softness.

But meet him in the beautiful gallery where he had placed his superb collection of great masterpieces, and he was an entirely different man. Then his brusqueness of manner was doffed like a suit of mail laid aside at the end of the fray. From James Ross, captain of industry, he became James Ross, art connoisseur. Nor was he aggressively "arty," after the stlye of so many connoisseurs. He did not indulge in the lingo of the studios. And he did not launch into long, technical disquisitions on the merits and methods of the painters and schools represented.

His attitude towards his pictures was one of silent joy in them. Just to see him look at one of them was to understand at once that they were to him not mere bits of expensive wall decoration, but the pictorial expression of all the beauty and romance of life. He loved them—that is all. And he loved them too sincerely to be willing to talk much about them. At most he would indicate in a few words his personal liking for certain aspects and moods of the pictures. And he always spoke of them as pictures, not as valuable possessions, which had cost a great deal of money—as they undoubtedly had—and had probably increased very greatly in value. He regarded them as a lover of pictures, not as an art dealer.

The writer had the privilege of being shown by Mr. Ross himself through his gallery, and so had an opportunity of observing how delightfully this man of affairs could do the honors of such an occasion. His joy in showing his pictures to those who would appreciate their beauty—and hardly anyone could fail to do so—was almost boyish in its frankness. And what treasures he had to show! —a superb Rembrandt, a great glowing Rubens, Ruysdael's "Storm at Sea," a beautiful pastelle by Millet, one of the finest Raeburns in the world, a couple of Turners full of opalescent light, and a Reynolds marked by all Sir Joshua's characteristic dignity and charm. And these pictures were all perfectly lighted and hung. The beautiful room was a little paradise for lovers of art.

When James Ross stood among these artistic treasures he forgot all about the battles and the strategy of the Exchange. The rich fund of sentiment and poetic feeling which lies at the base of even the most rugged types of Scotch character welled up His love of them was really affecting in its utter simplicity and frankness And though he did not say much about them, his tone was the tone of one who speaks of old and beloved friends.—Saturday Night.

New System Adopted.

Realizing that the demand for farm help was only half way met the farmers in certain districts of the province of Ontario have been organizing themselves into what might be termed companies to further increase the supply of farm help. The method is for the farmers to club together and share the expense incurred of having an agent in Great Britain secure young immigrants suitable for farm work who are to be sent directly to them. This is a plan which is still in the experimental stages, but those who have tried it claim that the results are very satisfactory and well worth the expense involved. It is a system which promises to increase in popularity among Ontario farmers, and this coming season will probably see it still more extensively adopted.

Although the Dominion Government does much to promote immigration to this country, the plan of assisted passage is left to the Provincial Governments. In this the Ontario Government devotes itself exclusively to farm labor and the domestic classes.

Technical Schools Planned.

The growing importance attached to technical education in Alberta is emphasized by the announcement that the Government will appoint a director of technical education to supervise the technical education in towns and districts hitherto without such advantages.

In Albertan cities technical education is already well established. Superintendents either have or will be appointed at Calgary, Edmonton, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat.

A Catholic cathedral, costing half a million dollars, and archbishop's residence, in keeping with the cathedral, is to be built at Edmonton next spring, according to an announcement made by the church authorities.

It is also proposed to build thirteen smaller churches in different parts of Edmonton.

Surveys Were True.

On April 5 the heading of the first section of the C.N.R. tunnel from Mt. Royal Heights to the Maple avenue shaft met in Montreal.

So true had been the surveys that the headings were drilled through to such exactitude that they met on the swinging plumb line wire.

The announcement was cheered by an assemblage of Canadian engineers recently in Toronto. Engineer Brown, who recounted the episode, bowed and smilingly remarked that he would have been quite satisfied if they had "met within an inch."

Durham's Miners.

In Durham, Eng., there are no fewer than 115,000 miners at work in the coal mines.

Population of Korea is now estimated at 14,055, 869.

MONKTON'S SCHEME

By F. A. MITCHEL

"Winterhorne," said Mr. Monkton, proprietor and manager of Monkton's Monthly Magazine, "I want a story written on certain lines, and you are just the man to do the job. Get away from the city. You can't do such work in town. Go down to the Mascott House, in Florida, where you won't have anything to think of but your creation. Here's a check for your expenses going and coming, and I'll write my old friend Charlie Burton, the landlord of the hotel, to send me the bill for your keep."

Winterhorne was given the theme he was to work up and charged to find a real model for his heroine. He was much pleased at the prospect before him and started with a light heart. On the way down he tried to lay-out a plan, but he found that plans usually came to him after he began to write, not before. The season had not yet opened at the southern resorts, and he found little to distract him at the hotel where he stayed. He was making a beginning when one morning after breakfast who should come up the steps from the hotel conveyance but Miss Febiger.

"For heaven's sake," exclaimed Winterhorne, "what brought you down here?"

"What brought you?"

"Monkton sent me down to write a story on a special plan he's taken a desperate fancy to."

"He sent me down on the same errand."

They compared notes as to the character of the work each was to do and found they had been given different themes and different lines of treatment.

"I wonder," said Winterhorne, "what he sent us to the same place for?"

"I can't imagine."

"He's got some scheme on hand—something for a feature to attract attention to the magazine. And he said nothing about my being here?"

"No. He proposed this hotel because he wanted to patronize the landlord, who is an old friend of his. He was very busy when I came away, and I think he forgot about your being here."

"I have it!" said Winterhorne suddenly.

"What?"

"His scheme. Didn't he tell you to find some real model for your hero?"

"Yes, he did."

"And he told me to find some real woman for my heroine. His plan is to have me take you and you take me for a model without either knowing that the other is doing so. He'll make an announcement to that effect—just how he'll manage it I don't know—then publish the stories one immediately after the other."

"What! Give us away?"

"He'll probably use the stories under assumed names."

"Mr. Monkton is a very bright man."

"He'll gain thousands in circulation by this scheme alone."

The scribblers found the genial warmth more conducive to lounging than working. If they had hit upon the editor's scheme their having done so foiled it. They sat together under the exuberant tropical foliage listening to the birds sing or on the sands, lulled by the music of the splashing waves. Now and again both of them, conscious of taking money for work that they were not doing, made spasmodic efforts to get something done. They agreed to humor their employer by taking each other for a model.

The season came and went before they brought their work to a finish. When they returned they submitted the manuscripts to the editor, who took them home with him to read. One day when they were both in the office he called them into his private room together and said:

"What have you two been doing down there in Florida? I sent you down for a purpose, but I don't see that anything has come of it."

"Indeed, Mr. Monkton," said Miss Febiger, "we divined your purpose and did the best we could."

"Divined my purpose, eh? What was it?"

"Why, you had a scheme to get two stories wherein the authors should take each other for a model."

"Oh, I did, did I?"

"I don't see what other purpose you could have had," said Winterhorne.

"Do you suppose I would have tried to rope you in with so thin a scheme as that? If I did I got most awfully sold. You've made Winterhorne out to be a prig, and he's made you talk like an idiot."

Both authors flushed at this.

"I didn't send you off for that purpose at all. I had a different one in view. You, Miss Febiger, have been trying to earn a living at scribbling, which you are not fitted for, and were breaking down. You needed a husband to support you. I concluded that Winterhorne would fill the bill and sent you to Florida to make a match. I'm pleased with the success of my scheme. Winterhorne, permit me to congratulate you. Miss Febiger, I wish you happiness."

"For heaven's sake," exclaimed the former, "how did you get on to it?"

"How? Why, I sent a third author, a woman, to write you both up. She's got a story that will place Monkton's Magazine in the first rank of periodicals."

After a little squeal of surprise from Miss Febiger they all broke into a hearty laugh.

Beware of toy pistols and platonic love.

Hunters In White Garb.

In connection with the hunting season, which opened recently, it has been required by the Saskatchewan Government that all hunters of big game shall wear a complete outer suit of some white material, including a white cap or tuque. This provision is intended to offer more protection to big game hunters than was formerly the case.

SOCIETY
WEDDING—PERSONALS

DAWSON—ARMSTRONG

Two popular young people of the city were united in marriage at 1.30 this afternoon at the home of the bride, when Edna F. Armstrong elder daughter of Mr. S.B. Armstrong 778 Water street, became the bride of Mr. Frank H. Dawson, son of the late Adam Dawson. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. R. G. Peever, B.D., in the presence of relatives and friends of the contracting parties, Rev. R. J. Grobb' assisted.

There were no attendants. The bride entered the room leaning on the arm of her father. She wore white shadow lace trimmed with satin and carried a bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley. Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by Miss K. Warner of Cobourg, cousin of the groom.

The house decorations were white and yellow chrysanthemums and the ceremony was performed in front of a bank of palms.

Following the ceremony a wedding dinner was served and afterwards the newly wedded couple left on the 4.33 C.P.R. train on a honeymoon trip. The bride wore navy blue tailored suit and hat of panned velvet, with persian lamb trimmings. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Dawson will reside at 457 Downie street and Mrs. Dawson will be at home after the New Year.

Among the gifts received by the bride was a clock from the men of the municipal departments; a lamp from the young ladies employed at the city buildings, and an electric coffee percolator from Mayor Bradburn and the Aldermen.

WHITTINGTON—BARNARD.

A bright and pretty wedding was solemnized at "Hillcrest," the home of Mr. and Mrs. Asa Barnard, Bailieboro, when their only daughter, Edith, was united in marriage to Mr. James E. Whitington, of South Monaghan, Rev. W. F. Wickett, of Fraserville, performing the ceremony.

At 1.30 o'clock the bride entered the beautifully decorated drawing room, leaning on the arm of her father, by whom she was presented for marriage.

The nuptial music was rendered by Miss Alvie Embrson, a niece of the groom, while little Cathaline Barnard, a niece of the bride, acted as flower girl.

The bride looked charming gowned in cream batiste trimmed with pearls, and wore a veil festooned with lilies of the valley, and bore on her arm a large sheaf of chrysanthemums.

The groom's gift to the bride was a necklace set in pearls; to the flower girl, a locket set in pearls; to the pianist, a crescent of pearls.

The popularity of the bride was attested by the numerous and costly presents she received, among others being a china tea set, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Denne, of Peterborough, and a clock from the gentlemen clerks of the Denne Firm.

After the ceremony the bridal party and guests partook of wedding repast, after which the happy couple left, amid showers of best wishes, for Toronto and Willoughby, Onto.

On their return they will reside in South Monaghan, and will be at home after January 1st, 1914.

Mrs. G. L. Hay, Hunter street, east will not receive again till after the New Year.

Mrs. John Yonge and daughter, Miss Florence E. Yonge, trained nurse of Buffalo, are in the city, the guests of Mrs. Yonge's son, Mr. T. C. Yonge, the George St. grocer.

Mr. H. Armitage, representing the Glad Eye Company is in the city making arrangements for the engagement of the company at the Grand Opera House, December 9.

THE GLAD EYE

The play that took the honors of the London, 1911-12 season, was the joyous little Farce Comedy adapted from the French of Armond and Nancey, "The Glad Eye." It had an uninterrupted run of one year and three months in the West End of London, and a run of some nine months in the original language, in Paris. It is being toured with immense success, both in Australia and South Africa, and now in Canada. It opened last week in Montreal, and met with immediate favor, both play and company being described as of the very best ever sent over from Britain.

Mr. Louis Meyer, the entrepreneur responsible for "The Glad Eye," has leapt into fame as a theatrical man almost in a night, and seemingly he deserved his success, for, nothing has been spared to give Canada the jolly little play just as she was done in the West End of London. Every member of the company and all the beautiful scenery and appointments have been brought over from the other side, and exact replica of that used in London at the Strand Theatre.

A FAMOUS PIANIST AT THE CONSERVATORY

A Wizard at the Piano — Signor Caruso a Cousin of Caruso With an Enormous Voice—Small But Appreciative Audience

Arthur Friedheim, the great pianist, played last evening at the Conservatory to a very small audience. There were not more than forty or fifty present. But those who were present were very appreciative. What the famous player lacked in numbers he gained in applause, for he was repeatedly encored. Friedheim is certainly a wizard at the piano. His fingers fly over the notes so swiftly that at times they seem to melt into mist. He showed his versatility in "Tannhauser Overture," and "Elfenjagd" and "Campanella" by Liszt. Chopin's "Polonaise" and "Scherzo" were especially fine. Chopin is always sprightly, and a certain relief from Beethoven who is heavy and inclined to be morbid. Mendelssohn's "Spring Song" was very beautiful, he is the sweetest of them all.

Signor Agostino Caruso, who assisted Friedheim, is said to be a cousin of the famous tenor of that name and is also said to be his cousin's equal. His family relation to the great tenor is not doubted, but to assert that he is anything like his cousin in voice is surely a libel upon the famous tenor. Agostino, in the first place, is not a tenor at all, he is a baritone with an enormous range. But although his voice is prodigous and could fill a much larger hall than the Conservatory possesses, it could not fill it with music. His singing is too staccato and passionate. Doubtless this is characteristic of most Italian songs, as he sang solely in Italian. When he was content to dwell upon the lower or medium notes he displayed a sweetness and mellowness which he lost when he rose above the top. He certainly has a good voice and if he will use it, as the Britisher uses his vocal equipment, in gentler and less passionate themes he will command greater appreciation from the average concert public.

The concert last night, we are told, was a financial failure, but that was not the fault of the artists. Friedheim is a master pianist, and can command great audiences in the large cities. But it does not speak well for Peterborough musical people to know that Oshawa has guaranteed Mr. Friedman two hundred dollars to get him to play in that small city next Thursday.

of "The Glad Eye" Company, which appears at The Grand Opera House on December 9th.

What is regarded as the largest bag of game ever secured on a brief hunting trip in the north country was taken into Cobalt by a party of eight Cobalt and Haileybury sportsmen. The gentlemen in question was hunting in the bush some miles from Gillies, and in the course of a trip of about a week shot one bear, one moose and eight deer.

They reported that game, especially deer, were very plentiful this year, and that little trouble was experienced in capturing them. The bear had been attracted near their camp by the smell of the slain deer and was despatched while feasting on

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE SHOULD HAVE THE KNOWLEDGE OF HOW TO RULE

Medical Inspection of the Schools Explained and Advocated by Dr. Struthers

Peterboro Behind Other Cities Says Dr. Morrison the Chairman of Meeting

Under the auspices of the local Council of Women, Dr. Struthers of Toronto, delivered a lecture last evening in the Collegiate Hall, on Medical Inspection of Schools. The lecture was illustrated by limelight views and its object was to explain and advocate Medical inspection of children in all public schools. This system is largely adopted throughout the large cities of England and America.

The chairman, Dr. Morrison, in introducing the lecturer, said that the question bad been before the public for many years, and he did not know whether the idea would be acceptable in Peterborough or not. It takes time to convince people of the necessity of these innovations. But we were behind Kingston, Owen Sound, and many other places smaller than Peterborough.

Dr. Struthers began by saying that on a question of that nature is was not always easy to arouse interest, and he was glad to see so many present.

Rocks the Cradle.

It has often been said that the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world, said the lecturer, but the hand must be guided by intelligence and knowledge. If women are to rule they ought to have the knowledge of the ruler. We are all interested in the problem of "Votes for Women." If the school boards are not aware whether they are going to deal with this problem or not, they soon will, the women will see to that.

The duty of the school was to give an education. We used to think that it was to teach the "three R's." The duty of the school is to prepare the child for life. You may train a child for an occupation but if a child is physically unfit, then all your training is lost.

The physical state is the basis of mental education. We train the hand and then the head and the heart, but the basis of all is the condition of health. The world is progressing rapidly and we must get away from our hide-bound ideas, not to do things simply because our fathers did them. These children are one day going to rule the country, and we should spare no expense in training them for efficient citizenship. There was at one time an out-cry against compulsory education, but the government recognised that if the child is not educated it will become a burden to the state. If we are going to compel parents to educate their children, said Dr. Struthers, we ought to compel them to protect their children from disease. We provide protection from fire, why not from disease?

Preventive Medicine

Tuberculosis is a disease which is all too common in our midst. There are three things which we have to contend with ,contageous disease, tuberculosis and mental deficiency in children. Our inspection of schools is a preventive medicine and prevention costs less than cure. Medical inspection does not mean merely dealing with the teeth, adenoids, etc., but has to do with the

TO WAIT ON PREMIER.

Farmers' Delegation Will Visit Ottawa on December 11.

OTTAWA, Dec. 4.—The Agricultural Council of Canada, which consists of the Grange of Ontario, the Grain Growers' Association of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and the United Farmers of Alberta, will send a delegation to Ottawa on Dec. 16 to meet Mr. Borden. They are coming to discuss certain matters with the Government, principally the question of the tariff.

It is understood that they will ask the Government to put wheat on the free list and thereby secure free entry of wheat into the U. S., under the countervailing clause of the new U. S. tariff; that there be at least a small increase in the British preference, and that agricultural implements be made duty free.

Blames Captain For Wreck.

OTTAWA, Dec. 4.—Captain H. Lindsay, wreck commissioner, in a report to the Dominion Government on the wreck of the steamer Turret Chief censures the captain of the ship. The report states that Captain Paddington did not do all he might have to have prevented the wreck, not having made sufficient allowance for leeway or finding out the speed of the vessel. The construction of the vessel is also condemned.

Counter Charges Filed.

VALLEYFIELD, Que., Dec. 4.—The counter charges, which were promised by the Conservatives when the election petition protesting the Chateauguay bye-election was served, have been filed in the Superior Court here.

The hearing of the charges by Liberals and the Conservative counter charges will take place during the next two weeks, before Judge Charbouneau of Montreal.

EXCERPTS FROM DR. STRUTHERS' LECTURE

The hand that rocks the cradle should have knowledge how to rule.

You may train a child for an occupation, but if a child is physically unfit all the training is lost.

The physical state is the basis of mental education.

If we are going to compel parents to educate their children we ought to compel them to protect them from disease.

Parents will say we are infringing upon their personal liberty, but every law interferes with personal liberty.

A man has not the right to be lord and master of his own home who is not capable.

Motherhood does not confer upon any woman the knowledge of how to train a child.

Some young mothers know no more how to rear a baby than they know how to rear a polar bear.

Parental authority is only exercised spasmodically.

Every school should have a play ground of at least five or six acres.

There should be a closer relation between the school and the home.

HON. J. D. HAZEN

WASHINGTON, D.C., Dec. 4.—Hon. Mr. Hazen, Canadian Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was one of the principal speakers at the opening session yesterday of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, attended by a thousand delegates from all sections of the United States. Mr. Hazen spoke on "The Waterways of Canada," advocating further development, and received an ovation at the close of his address.

Crothers Off to Nova Scotia.

OTTAWA, Dec. 4.—Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, has gone to Sydney, N.S., and he will also visit the various other industrial centres in the Maritime Provinces for the purpose of getting into touch with labor conditions in that part of the country, and obtaining first hand information from both employers and workingmen.

SAILORS MAROONED

Eight Men Are on Easter Island in the Pacific

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 4. — The missing schooner Alvarado, which cleared from the Columbia river on April 1 for Antofagasta, Chile, was abandoned at sea June 13 and the crew of eleven made their way to Easter Island, 2,300 miles off Chile, This was the gist of a wireless message from the steamer Moana received here yesterday. A rescue party will be sent out.

Easter Island is a peak of rock belonging to Chile. It is the easternmost of the Polynesian group, far from trade routes, with an area of about fifty miles, and scantily inhabited. Some of the castaways decided to risk another voyage in open boats. Leaving behind his two mates, the ship's cook and five sailors, N. Benson, the captain, and three volunteers again put out and after sailing for twenty-eight days reached Papeete, in the Society Islands, on Nov. 5.

Ready With Seven Warrants.

BRANTFORD, Dec. 4. — Bailiff Dyckman has in his possession seven warrants, which will be executed the moment the Brantford Street Railway Co. attempts to remove any of its assets. It is alleged by the municipal authorities that attempts to remove generators and other machinery from the Colborne street power house have already been made, and were only stopped when threats of immediate seizure were made. Orders were subsequently received from Toronto not to remove any machinery.

Water Powers Reserved.

OTTAWA, Dec. 4.—At the suggestion of the superintendent of water powers, the Minister of the Interior has placed under reservation all vacant Dominion land that may be valuable for the development of water power. One of these includes Vermilion Falls, on the Peace river, and there are similar reservations in the rivers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

New Government Steamer.

CORNWALL, Dec. 4.—The Dominion Government steamer Scout is likely operating its last season on the upper St. Lawrence. It is expected that the new steel steamer that is to replace her will be ready for commission next season. The Polson Iron Works of Toronto has been awarded the contract to build the substitute, which will be one of the most modern vessels of that class.

SHOT DEAD AT HIS POST

Bank Manager Murdered by Man Who Robbed Bank.

PLUM COULEE, Man., Dec. 4.—H. M. Arnold, manager of the Bank of Montreal here, was shot dead at noon yesterday in an attempt to intercept a masked bandit who got away with packages of money, estimated at from $5,000 to $10,000. He was shot down in the lane in the rear of the bank, where he had followed the robber.

In his hurry the robber dropped one of the packages of money, which has since been returned to the bank.

The bandit, whose whole appearance and demeanor showed him to be a man of desperate character, first held up the proprietor of a local garage and forced him, at the point of a gun, to hand over an automobile. He then proceeded direct to the bank, where a large shipment of money had been sent from Winnipeg for grain buying purposes. What happened inside is only surmised. How the bank manager reached the lane at the back of the bank is a mystery, as the back door was found locked.

The bandit is reported to have headed south at a high rate of speed. The car has been recovered, and it is, therefore, concluded that the robber is hiding in the bluffs nearby.

Arnold's body was found by the junior bank clerk on his return from lunch. He had been shot through the head, and a doctor who made an examination stated that he must have died instantly. From the position of the body there can be little doubt but that the bandit turned and fired when he saw his pursuer.

It is likely that Arnold threw up his hands when covered in the bank and was obliged to submit to seeing the money taken from the safe, which was open for business.

Born In Sussex, N.B.

ST. JOHN, Dec. 4.—H. M. Arnold was born in Sussex, N.B., in 1876, and was the son of Major O. B. Arnold.

NO SUCCESSOR FOUND.

Nobody Seems Anxious To Be Premier of France Just Now.

PARIS, Dec. 4.—President Poincare has not yet succeeded in finding a successor for M. Barthou, whose Cabinet resigned Tuesday as the result of the defeat of the Government in the Chamber of Deputies. The President was busy all day conferring with the Speakers of the Senate and Chamber and a number of other political leaders, among them Georges Cochery and M. Moulens, president and reporter respectively of the budget committee of the chamber.

All agree that whoever takes power will be confronted by an extraordinarily difficult task and some of the deputies maintain that the only satisfactory settlement lies in the immediate dissolution of Parliament.

Boycott Shows Little Effect.

BERLIN, Ont., Dec. 4.—The chief topic of discussion among the citizens is the milk question. The dealers are still charging eight cents per quart and will do so for some time yet, although they have lost a few customers since the City Council offered the suggestion that the consumers stop using milk until such time as the price falls to seven cents. The quantity of milk consumed daily amounts to 900 gallons. There are eighteen vendors.

Want Bill Postponed.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—Great Britain has made pressing representations at Washington as the result of activities of the Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom to secure the postponement of the passage of the Seamen's Bill until after the conclusion of the international conference on safety at sea. Failing a postponement of the measure modification of the provisions of the bill will be urged by the British Government.

Nearly a Centenarian.

MONTREAL, Dec. 4.—The death took place yesterday morning of Dr. Arthur Fisher, father of Hon. Sydney Fisher.

Dr. Fisher was 98 years old and was born in Montreal, which city he had seen grow from a population of 16,000 to 600,000.

CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENCY OF COLOMBIA THINKS COWDRAY OIL CONCESSIONS WOULD BE MONOPOLY

JOSE VICENTE CONCHA

Lord Cowdray's denial of reports that his firm, Messrs. Pearson's Sons, is endeavoring to obtain an "oil monopoly" in the Republic of Colombia, has been received with open scepticism by Colombians in Paris, among them Senor Jose Vincente Concha, nominee for the Colombian Presidency, who happens to be fully informed regarding what they call the "Pearson scandal."

"Lord Cowdray may not chose to label the contract he wishes to have ratified a "monopoly," but the situation that it would create if accepted by the Colombian Congress would amount to nothing less than monopoly."

CONSTITUTIONALIST GENERAL CONTROLS NORTHERN MEXICO

Military Headquarters Will Be Set Up in the City of Chihuahua and Railways and Telegraphs Will Be Reconstructed—Huerta Declares He Is Still Unbeaten and Will Fight as Long as He Lives.

JUAREZ, Dec. 4.—A new era began in northern Mexico yesterday. It marked the peaceful occupation by the rebels of territory abandoned by Huerta's federal troops. With 2,000 rebels, Gen. Francisco Villa, en route from Juarez to the evacuated city of Chihuahua, passed through Ahumada, 85 miles south of the border, and camped at Montezuma, 30 miles further south. Five thousand more rebels will join him on the way, and with a combined force of 7,000 men he will enter the state capital, there to establish what will be the temporary military headquarters of the Constitutionalist party.

The departure of the rebel forces from Juarez, with their equipment, was made on four trains, a garrison of 1,700 solders having been left behind to guard the border town. As far as Ahumada, Villa has restored the telegraph. The railroad runs to Montezuma, where it is interrupted by burned bridges. It is to be reconstructed within a few days.

Whether Gen. Carranza, the recognized head of the revolution, also will go to Chihuahua, seemed to be in doubt, although Villa said he expected Carranza's forces to cross from Sonora to concentrate the men for operations further south.

When the rebels enter Chihuahua, with the tattered Mexican flags which they are carrying as symbolical of their demands for a restoration of constitutional government they will have Zacatecas as the nearest federal stronghold on the south. It is toward that city that Villa insists he will march, and it is possible that he may enter it without striking a blow.

Still Unbeaten, Says Huerta.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 4.—The enunciation of Washington's policy appears not to alarm President Huerta, especially since he long ago abandoned hope of anything but opposition from the United States. He said yesterday:

"I have no intention of yielding. Should this fighting in Mexico continue for years, I shall continue to do my part in it if I am still alive."

Gen. Huerta declared that the country was self-supporting and that forced loans, if made necessary, would enable him to resist indefinitely. So long as he was able to obtain American oil he did not regard the shutting off of native oil from the railways as vital.

To Beautify Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Dec. 4.—E. H. Bennett of Chicago, recognized as one of the foremost city planners in the world, has been selected by the commission to take charge of the work of replanning Ottawa and Hull. E. T. Cousins, engineer of the Toronto harbor commission will assist in the work.

"No Winter" Say Indian Oracles.

PIERRE, S.D., Dec. 4. — The Indians of this vicinity are predicting there will be "no winter this season." Freak December weather prevails all over the Dakotas, with warm rains and the thermometers well above freezing.

WILL BE A TERROR.

Suffragettes Plan Trouble If Mrs. Pankhurst Is Arrested.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, at a meeting of militants at Caupington last night, held to inaugurate the establishment of the suffrage army there, said: "If we have courage to stand together none will be able to stand against us. We will make ourselves a terror to Westminster; we will make the Cabinet Ministers shake in their shoes until they are afraid for their very lives."

Miss Patterson, who presided, said that if the police arrested Mrs. Pankhurst at Plymouth she would be sorry for Plymouth. The suffragettes there would show no respect for property, she declared.

Will Meet Mrs. Pankhurst.

PLYMOUTH, Eng., Dec. 4.—It was announced last last night that the suffragettes had obtained permission to send a deputation aboard a tender to meet Mrs. Pankhurst on the Majestic. The suffragettes held a demonstration here last night, but there were no disorders.

SHOULD AID BIG NAVY

What Use is a Cruiser if Britain is " Beaten " Asks Ward.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The New Zealand naval defence bill passed its second reading in the Dominion Parliament yesterday by 31 to 21 votes.

Col. Allen, in moving, said that when he left the Dominion he supposed submarines and destroyers would be obtained according to the agreement, but the Admiralty declared that such vessels were unsuitable to New Zealand waters. He respectfully begged to disagree.

Pacific payment of a subsidy, he said, without any chance of control or right of discussion, had no educational value. Self-respect forbade definite delegation of naval defence. The clause giving the Admiralty disposition of vessels in time of war was an intimation to their Australian friends that New Zealand regarded unity of imperial control as essential.

Sir Joseph Ward quoted three successive First Lords of the Admiralty as approving a single imperial navy. Why, he asked, had the agreement of 1909 been broken if the Government merely intended a scheme of training? Why were 24 of 26 clauses of the Australian act copied? The present policy would be appropriate if they had a population of 20,000,000 instead.

The Panama Canal, he continued, would soon open the Pacific to the great navies of the world and make all that Canada and Australasia could do ridiculous. If the Minister had not talked of New Zealand navy, the Admiralty would have adhered to the 1909 agreement. What would be the use of a Bristol cruiser or training ship if the British navy were defeated? Better pay a fixed sum for protection by the greatest fleet the world ever saw or was likely to see.

CANADA TAKES FOUR OUT OF SEVEN FIRSTS IN CLYDESDALES

HUGE INSURANCE POLICY.

C.P.R. Deal With Five Syndicates Is the Biggest In the World.

MONTREAL, Dec. 4.—The largest single insurance deal in the world ever consummated is at present being put through by a Canadian concern. The policy is for upwards of $100,000,000. The property being insured is valued at between $112,000,000 and $115,000,000 and belongs to the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. Five big insurance syndicates, among them the largest company of the kind in the British Empire, are interested in the deal.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, said yesterday that the deal would probably be completed by to-day.

Two Barrels of Weapons.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—On the liner Laconia, which sailed for the Mediterranean, were 2,100 steerage passengers, a search of whom, as they went on board, revealed a remarkable supply of dangerous weapons. By the time the last passenger had reached deck with his bundle, two barrels had been filled with revolvers and knives, taken from the intending voyageurs. The weapons were all labeled with the names of their owners, to whom they will be restored when the liner arrives at Naples.

SHIPPING IN HINDUS

Influx of Orientals Blamed on Organization in Manilla

VANCOUVER, B.C., Dec. 4.—Immigration officials of the United States are busy with efforts to frustrate the plans of a secret organization with headquarters at Manila to flood the Pacific coast states with Hindu laborers, according to Anthony Caminetti, commissioner-general of immigration. Mr. Caminetti left here last night for Seattle, after having conferred Tuesday with British Columbia officials on immigration problems.

Advices bad reached the immigration service, Mr. Caminetti said, that arrangements had been made at Manila to send the East Indians from the Philippines with certificates obtained from the Insular government. On the strength of these certificates a party of five Hindus gained admission to the United States at San Francisco, establishing a precedent.

MILLIONS A MYTH.

"Long Lost Brother" Lived High and Died Just After Being Detected.

MONTREAL, Dec. 4.—With the tale that he was her long-lost brother, who had returned after a thirty-two years absence in California with a fortune of three millions, a man whose name was thought to be Jaquet Raymond, was received with rapture by Mrs. Francis Clement, of Ile Bizard, Que. He was given the best in the house, and when taken ill, the family physician, Dr. Ladaceur, St. Genevieve, was summoned to attend to him. Before going to the hospital he visited another supposed sister, Mrs. Letang, wife of a city policeman. He made a will, leaving sums varying from half a million to half a hundred to his various supposed relatives and to charities.

At the hospital his relatives waited on him with assiduity. Two nights ago a mischievous little nephew wanted to see what was in his rich uncle's purse, and stole it from underneath the pillow, to discover only worthless papers.

The discovery was too late to affect the "wealthy uncle," who died the next morning. His estate consisted of the clothes he wore and 15 cents.

THIS YOUTHFUL HUNTER BEARS CHARMED LIFE

WOODSTOCK, Dec. 4.—While out shooting with a friend, Louis McCurdy, a farmer's son, got in front of his friend's shot gun which went off.

The shots all lodged in the game bag on his back and he was unscathed.

This is his third escape of the kind.

WILL NOT TAKE ON BOURASSA

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 4.—Right Rev. Bishop Fallon, head of the Roman Catholic diocese of London, refuses to enter into any controversy with Henri Bourassa, the Nationalist leader of Quebec, over the widely divergent doctrine as to Canada's future that were preached by them at the annual St. Andrew's Society banquet last Friday night. This morning he refused to discuss the editorial of Mr. Bourassa in Tuesday's edition of Le Devoir, the Nationalist editor therein sharply criticizing Father Fallon gor his speech. Bishop Fallon admitted reading the editorial but declined absolutely to say anything concerning it. "I have nothing to say whatever," was the statement to the Canadian Press correspondent.

British Columbia Gets Two Firsts, Saskatchewan One and Ontario One In Addition to Several Lesser Places In Day at Chicago Live Stock Show—U. S. Is Outpointed In the Results.

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—Canada won again yesterday. After capturing the World's Grand Championship steer prize Tuesday it was expected that the Dominion would submit to a relapse yesterday and give the Stars and Stripes a chance at the International Live Stock Show, but such was not the case.

It was announced by the horse show judges in the Arena that Canadian exhibitors had captured four firsts in the Clydesdale classes to the Americans' three. Up to late in the afternoon the race between the two countries had been close. Hopes of rooters of the States, however, were downed when it was announced that Colony Lady Begg, owned by the Colony Farm, Coquitlam, B.C., had taken the blues in her class, making the score four to three for the Canadians.

Of the Canadian winners for the day, British Columbia carried off two firsts, one second, one fourth, and one sixth; Saskatchewan, one first, two seconds, one third and one fifth; and Ontario, one first and two thirds.

The Canadian awards in their classes follows:

Aged stallions—Prince Rupert, second, owned by High McLean, Arcola, Sask.; sixth, Bow Hill Baron, owned by Colony Farm of Coquitlam, B.C.

Stallions, three and under four—First, Lord Ullin, Graham Bros., Ontario; third, Gold Nugget, Graham Bros., Ontario.

Stallions, two years and under three—Second, Fyvie Emperor, owned by Robert Sinton, Regina, Sask.; third, Gallant Buchlyvie, owned by W. H. Bruce, Arcola, Sask.

Stallion foals—First The Prince of Hillcrest, owned by R. H. Faber, Condie, Sask.;

Brood mares, aged—Second, Peggie Pride, owned by Colony Farm, B.C.; fourth, Opal, owned by Colony Farm.

Mare, aged—First, Nerissa, owned by Colony Farm; fifth, Queen of the Revels, owned by R. H. Faber, Condie, Sask.

Mare, three and under four—First, Colony Lady Begg, owned by Colony Farm.

J. & D. J. Campbell of Woodville, Ont., for the fourth year in succession, won the Grand Championship for Shropshire Grade wether.

Glencarnock Victor II., grand champion of the fourteenth annual International Exposition, passed a busy day holding a reception to expert admirers. J. D. McGregor, Brandon, Man., the champion's owner, announced that the great bull will begin an "all start tour" after the close of the Exposition. The start will be made at the Manitoba Agricultural College at Winnipeg.

Canadian sheep exhibitors have things all their own way in the fat classes. In Lincolns, H. M. Lee of Highgate, Ont., has won three firsts and a championship, also third and fourth. J. D. Brien of Ridgetown and John Kelley of Shakespeare each have seconds. In Cotswolds, J. D. Brien of Ridgetown has one first and two seconds and the champion wether; E. Brien & Sons, Ridgetown, have two firsts and one second. E. D. Park of Burford is also in the money.

John Kelley, Shakespeare, has a third, firsts and the championship in fat Leicesters. A. & W. Whitlaw, Guelph, are among the winners. In breeding Cotswolds, E. D. Park, Burford, Ont., wins three firsts and the champion ram; E. Brien & Sons win one second and two thirds.

STRIKE IS ON

Dismissal of Engineer Precipitates a Deadlock in Britain

LONDON, Dec. 4. — The Great Western Railway announced yesterday that it would accept freight for South Wales only subject to the sender's risk. This action has been taken because of the dislocation of traffic due to a strike which has developed, with amazing suddenness. It originated through the dismissal of an engine driver, who refused to handle "tainted" goods from Dublin. The company declined to accede to the demands of the men that he be reinstated. In spite of a manifesto issued by the railway union's executive, declaring that the strike was not authorized, and that no strike pay would be allowed, the movement is spreading and threats are made of a general tie-up of the Great Western system.

At meetings at Swansea and other railway centres in South Wales yesterday the men decided to lay down their tools immediately. Two big Cambrian collieries are idle because the miners have refused to travel or work in trains driven by "black legs."

St. John To Defend Potatoes.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Dec. 4.—The St. John Board of Trade is arranging to send a representative to a meeting to be held in Washington on Dec. 18, to discuss a demand made in the United States that an embargo be placed on Canadian potatoes because of alleged powdery scab. St. John will protest because New Brunswick sends large quantities of potatoes to the States.

HANDS ACROSS THE SEAS.

The Review yesterday emphasized the necessity of expedition in the matter of sending letters or parcels to Great Britain. It was stated that everything should be posted by next Wednesday if the senders wish their gifts or letters to reach their friends in the Old Land by Christmas. This precaution is important, as the postal facilities on the mail boats are almost swamped at this season of the year. Never, perhaps in the history of the world did so many silent messages of love and remembrance pass over so wide a stretch of the earth's surface as will travel to and from Canada this coming Christmas-tide.

More than all the Imperial Federation is the bond of sentiment which binds the British race together by the medium of the mail. Without this Imperialism is impossible. British and Canadian Imperialists could do nothing more effective and lasting in this direction than by encouraging, not only private and individual correspondence, but also facilitating the circulation of British and Canadian news. The true Imperialist should make the most of these modern means of transit, not merely of goods, but ideas and emotions. Many of our newspapers, particularly the Gazette, of Montreal, are making a specialty of getting British news and have permanent correspondents in London for that purpose. They are doing a real service to the Dominion and to those who have left their homes behind them.

These operations should be extended to take in the whole of the Empire. We have too little communication with Australia and New Zealand. Of course we hear about most of the big events that concern the Empire, the navy and etc., but we need a little more "local color." We should know how they spend their lives and conduct their municipal and domestic affairs at the antipodes. A better "exchange" service between the newspapers of the two continents would be effective in this direction.

There is no health without circulation. News is the vital fluid of the social life of a nation, as the interchange of ideas is essential to intellectual development. Isolation spells stagnation. There is one thing characteristic of the American press in the smaller cities, and that is the absence of British news, or in fact, any outside news of the world. It seems to have been the deliberate policy of the teachers of the States to impress the younger generation with the "fact" that the world ends at New York harbor, or that the only things worth talking or writing about were these United States. Consequently the Americans have no great writers, no large-hearted and minded philosophers. The secret of Britain's greatness in the intellectual world is in the fact that she is the sensitive receiver of news and ideas from the ends of the earth. She thinks Imperially. Canada has everything to lose by isolation, and everything to gain by stretching out her hands across the seas.

CAT AND MOUSE LIBERALS

Liberal journals have watched Mr. Borden "like a cat watching a mouse" ever since he went south for a holiday. First they cast doubt upon the report that the Premier was going on a health trip, they thought they had caught him on the sly playing golf and eating at banquets, when he ought to have been in bed or in a bath-chair on a diet of farmaceous food. At last he was tracked to Washington and was seen by a special Liberal private detective, who had secured a reserved seat at the key-hole of the White House drawing-room and saw and heard wonderful things which it were not lawful to repeat. But which go to prove that some secret plot was behind Mr. Borden's visit to the States and that there is suspicion that he only made a circuitous route to put the private detective off the scent. Possibly the Premier is contemplating a reciprocity compact with President Wilson;this would be a dreadful blow to The Globe. The Toronto Star, so far, has not shown any nervousness as to the danger of Canadian autonomy by so close an association of Mr. Borden with Washington, as was the case when the same gentleman visited Downing Street. Washing tonic is good for the Toronto Star, but "Downing Street" throws the editor into a state of nervous prostration.

THE PRODUCER AND RETAILER.

The Kingston Standard is trying to get at the cause of the high cost of food stuffs, and gives an illustration of what goes on in that city. "Here is a case where the primary producer is offered NINE CENTS A POUND for fowl of the best table quality, crate fattened and milk fed, WHILE PRODUCT OF THIS KIND IS MARKETED AT FROM TWENTY TO THIRTY CENTS A POUND.

With a lesson of this character staring us in the face is it difficult to diagnose the cause of the high cost of living? If the same tremendous difference exists between the price paid for the primary producer, and the charge made to the consumer in all the necessities of life, then there must exist between producer and consumer an influence and power as destitute of conscience as a Hyena."

How far this is generally true as applied to other cities, it would be interesting to know.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Globe now says that "emergency" is as dead as Julius Caesar. We always regarded Julius as one of the immortals.

President Wilson has defined his Mexican policy as one of "watchful waiting." This must make Huerta feel very uncomfortable to know that he is being "stared out." Wilson should try a little musical persuasion and sing "I'm watching and waiting for you," This might MOVE him if it is sung with feeling.

The farmers of Western Canada, up to Dec. 1st, marketed one hundred and forty-three million bushels of grain, for which they received in actual cash ninty million dollars. That does not sound like "stringency." Possibly they are keeping the ninty million for seed next year.

When Winston Churchill, as First Lord of the Admiralty, threw out the invitation to the nations to go a' holidaying with him, it was generally understood that Germany was the chief object of his sporting offer. But the German was too busy to notice Winston. Uncle Sam, however, has come forward to take the "vacation." But it is feared the British Sea Lord will not quit without Germany.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

REV. MR. PEEVER'S SERMON

Dear Sir,--

We build our schools because we love education. We do not get up bazaars or bow-wow minstrels or lotteries for that purpose. Anybody who would propose in Peterborough that a minstrel show be got up in aid of the new Queen Mary or King George School or in aid of the Collegiate Institute, would be laughed at. People who would suggest that we have a whirlwind peanut campaign in aid of the waterworks would be looked at in amazement. When we regard anything as necessary or serviceable we go to work and buy it whether it be a chemical engine or a mud-scraper for the streets, but when it comes to Christianity about which we hear a good deal at various times, there is a different tale to tell. Few people will submit to direct taxation in such a cause. They will pay 25 mills on the dollar for the support of Municipal Government and 25 more mills on the dollar towards the support of National Government but when it comes to supporting the cause of Christ—that's another thing. Religion does not present itself in that practical way to the people's minds. We have policemen and even a national soldiery to preserve order. We have volunteer societies and an urgent appeal continually ringing in the air for the preservation of the purity of our moarls. We have a vast system connected with religion but it is on an entirely different basis or almost entirely so and it is this attempt to put it on the same basis with other things that is exciting so much comment. If religion is nothing more than the return of favors received, the payment for services rendered, then bring on your business basis but if it is a matter of an entirely different sort, if it is something that rests upon the lofty spirit—not a thankfulness for favors received—but of self-sacrifice, if it rests upon a basis of Love which has nothing in it akin to taxes but which has something in it akin to education, then the least we can do is to cease to degrade it into a mere business. The sermon of Rev. Mr. Peever on Sunday night was surely timely. No one thinks of making philosophy a matter of business. No one would attempt to degrade the scientific spirit into being a mere matter of business. The whole world would howl if a great investigator discovered a cure for disease and patented and manipulated it as a monopoly as if it were coal oil stock or Cobalt shares. It is this spirit of nobility that our people are losing sight of and that the Christian religion is being deprived of and that is having the effect upon the world at large by causing it, in this twentieth century, to grow careless of the Churches, as one American writer has said "Almost to ignore them altogether." There have been many fitful attempts at revival of late but it cannot be denied that the atmosphere is changing, that Christianity is not regarded with the awe, reverence and affection which produced profound impression upon the people one hundred years ago. It is this materializing, this commercializing of things that cannot be commercialized that is ruining religion, and when we see a man sitting on a Board of some religious institution crying out that the only way to make a success of the Church is by making it a matter of business, he is ruining that Church as a centre of religion. Such a man had better stick to his last. He is changing the temple, as so scornfully referred to by Christ, into a money exchange. Mr. Peever has sounded a note that he is well able to sound that should meet a response in every person capable of responding to it. I have heard people who take an active part in Church work actually approve of the statement that it is proper to say "My country, right or wrong, my country.' Such people of course are hopeless and it is the actions of such people that produce that intensely bad effect which, not appearing on the surface, can only be detected after the roots of the plant have been destroyed. Surely it must be plain that a Church built—not erected through loyalty and love—but through the medium of pancakes and mutton pies, is a pancake and a mutton pie Church, and ought not to pose as a Church, but as an eating house which it is. Running religion as a matter of business is expressly forbidden by Christ. Judged by a business standard Christ's handling of religion was a complete failure. Surely if it had been intended otherwise it could have been so managed.

Yours truly,
READER.

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF
BAYARD VEILLER

"No, you can't help me," he said simply. "My time has come, Mary. And I can save you a lot of trouble."

"He's right there," Burke ejaculated. "We've got him cold. So, what's the use of dragging you two into it?"

"Then they go clear?" Garson exclaimed, eagerly. "They ain't even to be called as witnesses?"

"You're on!" Burke agreed.

"Then, here goes!" Garson cried, and he looked expectantly toward the stenographer.

"My name is Joe Garson."

"Alias?" Burke suggested.

"Alias nothing!" came the sharp retort. "Garson's my monaker. I shot English Eddie, because he was a skunk and a stool pigeon, and he got just what was coming to him." Vituperation beyond the mere words beat in his voice now.

"Now, now!" Burke objected, severely. "We can't take a confession like that."

Garson shook his head—spoke with fiercer hatred.

"Because he was a skunk and a stool pigeon," he repeated. "Have you got it?" And then, as the stenographer nodded assent, he went on, less violently: "I croaked him just as he was going to call the bulls with a police whistle. I used a gun with smokeless powder. It had a Maxim silencer on it, so that it didn't make any noise."

Garson paused, and the set despair of his features lightened a little. Into his voice came a tone of exultation indescribably ghastly. It was born of the eternal egotism of the criminal, fattening vanity in gloating over his ingenuity for evil. He stared at Burke with a quizzical grin crooking his lips.

"Say," he exclaimed, "I'll bet it's the first time a guy was ever croaked with one of them things! Ain't it?"

The inspector nodded affirmation.

"Some class to that, eh?" Garson demanded, still with that grewsome air of boasting. "I got the gun and the Maxim silencer thing off a fence in Boston," he explained. "Say, that thing cost me $60, and it's worth every cent of the money. Why, they'll remember me as the first to spring one of them things, won't they?"

"They sure will, Joe!" the inspector conceded.

"Nobody knew I had it," Garson continued, dropping his braggart manner abruptly.

At the words, Mary started, and her lips moved as if she were about to speak.

"Nobody knew I had it—nobody in the world," he declared. "And nobody had anything to do with the killing but me."

"Was there any bad feeling between you and Eddie Griggs?"

"Never till that very minute. Then I learned the truth about what he'd framed up with you." The speaker's voice reverted to its former fierceness in recollection of the treachery of one whom he had trusted.

"He was a stool pigeon, and I hated him! That's all, and it's enough. And it's all true, so help me God!"

The inspector nodded dismissal to the stenographer, with an air of relief.

"That's all, Williams," he said heavily. "He'll sign it as soon as you've transcribed the notes."

Then as the stenographer left the room Burke turned his gaze on the woman, who stood there in a posture of complete dejection, her white, anguished face downcast. There was triumph in the inspector's voice as he addressed her, for his professional pride was full fed by this victory over his foes.

"Young woman," Burke said briskly, "it's just like I told you. You can't beat the law. Garson thought he could—and now"— He broke off, with a wave of his hand toward the man who had just sentenced himself to death in the electric chair.

"That's right," Garson agreed, with somber intensity. His eyes were grown clouded again now, and his voice dragged leaden. "That's right, Mary," he repeated dully, after a little pause. "You can't beat the law!" He hesitated a little, then went on, with a certain curious embarrassment. "And this same old law says a woman must stick to her man."

The girl's eyes met his with passionate sorrow in their misty deeps. Garson gave a significant glance toward Dick Gilder, then his gaze returned to her. There was a smoldering despair in that look. There were, as well, an entreaty and a command.

"So," he went on, "you must go along with him, Mary. Won't you? It's the best thing to do."

The girl could not answer. There was a clutch on her throat just then, which would not relax at the call of her will.

Of a sudden, an inspiration came to him, a means to snap the tension, to create a diversion wholly efficacious. He would turn to his boasting again, would call upon his vanity, which he knew well as his chief foible, and make it serve as the foil against his love.

"You want to cut out worrying about me," he counseled, bravely. "Why, I ain't worrying any, myself—not a little bit! You see, it's something new I've pulled off. Nobody ever put over anything like it before."

He faced Burke with a grin of gloating again.

"I'll bet there'll be a lot of stuff in the newspapers about this, and my picture, too, in most of 'em! What?"

The man's manner imposed on Burke, though Mary felt the torment that his vainglorying was meant to mask.

"Say," Garson continued to the inspector, "if the reporters want any pictures of me could I have some new ones taken? The one you've got of me in the gallery is over ten years old. I've taken off my beard since then. Can I have a new one?"

"Sure you can, Joe. I'll send you up to the gallery right now."

"Immense!" Garson cried boisterously. He moved toward Dick Gilder, walking with a faint suggestion of swagger to cover the nervous tremor that had seized him.

"So long, young fellow," he exclaimed and held out his hand. "You've been on the square, and I guess you always will be."

Dick had no scruple in clasping that extended hand very warmly in his own.

"We'll do what we can for you," he said simply.

"That's all right," Garson replied, with such carelessness of manner as he could contrive. Then at last he turned to Mary. This parting must be bitter, and he braced himself with all the vigors of his will to combat the weakness that leaped from his soul.

As he came near the girl could hold herself in leash no longer. She threw herself on his breast. Her arms wreathed about his neck. Great sobs racked her.

"Oh, Joe, Joe!" The gasping cry was of utter despair.

Garson's trembling hand patted the girl's shoulder very softly, a caress of infinite tenderness.

"That's all right," he murmured huskily. "That's all right, Mary." There was a short silence, and then he went on speaking more firmly. "You know, he'll look after you."

He looked up over the girl's shoulder and beckoned with his head to Dick, who came forward.

"Take good care of her, won't you?"

He disengaged himself gently from the girl's embrace and set her within the arms of her husband, where she rested quietly, as if unable to fight longer against fate's decree.

"That's all right. That's all right, Mary."

"Well, so long!"

He dared not utter another word, but turned blindly, and went, stumbling a little, toward the doorman, who had appeared in answer to the inspector's call.

"To the gallery," Burke ordered curtly.

Garson went on without ever a glance back.

There was a long silence in the room after Garson's passing. It was broken at last by the inspector, who got up from his chair and advanced toward the husband and wife. In his hand he carried a sheet of paper, roughly scrawled. As he stopped before the two and cleared his throat, Mary withdrew herself from Dick's arms and regarded the official with brooding eyes from out her white face.

Burke extended the sheet of paper to the husband.

"There's a document," he said gruffly. "It's a letter from one Helen Morris, in which she sets forth the interesting fact that she pulled off a theft in the Emporium, for which your Mrs. Gilder here did time. You know, your father got your Mrs. Gilder sent up for three years for that same job—which she didn't do. That's why she had such a grudge against your father and against the law too!"

Burke chuckled, as the young man took the paper, wonderingly.

"I don't know that I blame her much for that grudge, when all's said and done. You give that document to your father. It sets her right. He's a just man according to his lights, your father. He'll do all he can to make things right for her, now he knows. Now, you two listen. I've got to go out a minute. When I get back, I don't want to find anybody here—not anybody! Do you get me?"

* * * * * * *

When the official was gone, the two stood staring mutely each at the other through long seconds. What she read in the man's eyes set the woman's heart to beating with a new delight. What he read in her eyes set the husband's pulses to bounding. He opened his arms in an appeal that was a command. Mary went forward slowly, without hesitation, in a bliss that forgot every sorrow for that blessed moment, and cast herself on his breast.

Texas Town Flooded.

BELTON, Texas, Dec. 3.—Ten persons were reported to have perished in a thirty-foot wave which came without warning down Nolan Creek before daybreak. The creek runs through the centre of this city.

Fifty houses along the creek's banks in Belton were swept away. In the heart of the town Mrs. W. C. Polk and her four children were caught in their home and drowned. Polk, carrying the fifth child, an infant, escaped to high ground.

May Limit Skyscrapers.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—Eighteen storeys may be the limit for skyscrapers to be erected in New York in future. The committee on building height restrictions, which reported to Borough President McAneny yesterday, recommended that no building be higher, and that they should not have towers.

The erection of tall buildings causes a decrease in rent values in adjoining structures, the committee contends.

U. S. Boomsters Quit West.

One of the advantages of a period of commercial hush is that it drives back to "God's country" a good many people the west is better without, says The Saskatoon Phoenix. There is no doubt that here, as well as in Vancouver and all western cities, we have had a large floating population from the United States—city dwellers entirely—who are of no use to the country. They follow "booms" as the thimble-riggers and shell men follow a circus; and when they have exhausted one city, flee to another. They are responsible for much of the worst of the real estate and mining wild-catting. Having no permanent stake in the country, they are not attempting to do business in a way they can afford to look back on without shame in the future. They do not calculate on being here in the future, so are utterly regardless of the manner in which they conduct their operations. This floating population, which is so large in the west, is a curse to every business conducted along permanent lines. The border is not far away, and it is easy to skip across to God's country.

Needless to say, there are vast numbers of Americans here who are of the country's best. Probably no other nationality has contributed more, both in capital and enterprise, to the development of the west, but God's country to them is the country where they have settled.

Time may be money, but it's a poor substitute for a bank account.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1913, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,367 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 427 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Dec. 3.—At the C. P. R. Stock Yards this morning the offerings for sale were 1200 cattle, 700 sheep and lambs, 1250 hogs and 150 calves.

There were no new developments in the market for cattle, prices being firm under a good demand and smaller supplies, and an active trade was done for both domestic and outside account. Shipments to the United States amounted to 10 car loads, and in addition to this twenty car loads were forwarded to the middle west and some to the Toronto yards. A feature of the market was the continued scarcity of choice steers, there being none on the market. In consequence the top price realized for the best steers was $7, while the lower grades sold from that down to $4.50, and butchers' cows brought from $3.50 to $6.25 per cwt. There were some very choice bulls on the market, which sold as high as $7, but the bulk of the trading was done in stock ranging from $4 to $6.50 per cwt.

The trade in small meats was active, there being a keen demand for the small supplies offered, and prices in consequence were firmly maintained, with sales of western lambs at $8 to $8.25, and eastern at $7.50 to $7.75, while sheep brought $5 to $5.50 per cwt. The demand for calves, which were rather scarce, was good, at prices ranging from $3 to $15 each as to size and quality.

The tone of the market for hogs was stronger and prices were 25c per cwt. higher than on Monday, with a good demand from packers and sales of selected lots were made at $9.30 to $9.50, and straight lots at $9 to $9.25 per cwt., weighed off cars.

Better Inspection Planned.

Inquiries from Australia and New Zealand for British Columbia apples have exceeded all past records this year, and as a result shipments to these colonies will aggregate into the high figures. The fruit inspection system of British Columbia has now been thoroughly reorganized and instead of one inspector for the entire province deputy inspectors are stationed at all leading shipping points, in some instances the local customs officers having undertaken to act as inspectors.

The present season has brought substantial prosperity to apple growers throughout the boundary district of British Columbia. Fruit ranches are being planted and cultivated according to the latest and best approved methods, and farmers who give the necessary study and attention to the business are getting results.

READING MAN CRUSHED TO DEATH

Was Working at Elevator When Accident Occurred

WAS KNOWN HERE

Natives of Reading, England, residing in the city are shocked at the news of the fatal accident to Charles Cox, at Toronto yesterday. The victim came from Reading two years ago and recently he secured work with the Robert Simpson Co. and he was working near an elevator early yesterday morning when he met his death.

Cox had raised the elevator some distance on the floor to polish the brass on the flooring. After he got through it is thought he must have reached up to pull the lever to lower the elevator. Apparently he pulled it the wrong way and the elevator shot up. He was caught against the gate and terribly crushed. He fell out of the elevator to the floor, while the car shot to the top of the building.

Although there were several men at work no person saw what really happened. He was found by his mates when they heard the thud of his falling body. Dr. Lusk was called immediately, but there was nothing for him to do as the man was dead when he arrived. The chief coroner was notified and the police removed the body to the morgue.

Cox was a married man. He leaves a widow and one son in Reading, Eng., and a daughter in Toronto.

The Defence of Wm. Hill Charged With Theft

Was Prominent Figure in Shooting Case Some Years Ago

Wm. Hill of Dummer, charged with stealing a fur coat, valued at $16, from Thos. McGowan, at the Munro House, a week ago Saturday, was arrested by Constable Meagher last evening and as a result, appeared in Police Court this morning. He was remanded after his plea of not guilty.

Hill is a brother of the two men who were acquitted last summer on the charge of arson. He also figured in a shooting case which stirred the county some years ago, when a younger brother was shot. Chas Gow admitted that he had fired the shot while driving along the road. As yet Hill has not engaged counsel.

The prisoner claims that he took the coat in mistake from the hook on the wall at the hotel.

NORMALITE'S IMPRESSIONS

Of the Lecture Given Recently by Mrs. Jean Blewett

A student at the Normal School writing to the Bowmanville Statesman has the following to say of the lecture, given by Mrs. Jean Blewett:

I have just came in from a perfect evening. Jean Blewett was delightful. Mrs. J. H. Renwick, formerly of Port Hope, and Gwyn accompanied me. The large assembly room was well filled. Principal Walker of the Normal School introduced Mrs. Blewett in a happy way. She was gowned in a very pale pink satin with overdress of some gauzy material with trimmings of velvet and dark fur and low neck. She looked younger than when I last met her at Mrs. Galbraith's in Bowmanville. At the close she greeted us very graciously and reference was made to her visit in the Rubber Town.

Mrs. Blewett's subject in addressing the Normalites was "The Women Writers of Canada." She explained that Canada has no literature. She spoke of women in the professions and told of the first woman to be admitted as a student to a Canadian University. She was thought to be bold and forward then and when she went to the head man of the university to ask him when she could be admitted the professor said: "Never, never in my time, I hope." That woman persisted, finally secured admission, took the course and graduated and is now on the Senate of Toronto University. (Was it not Dr. Augusta Stowe Gullen?)

This interesting lady spoke of different professions to which women have secured entrance since, of the nobility of labor, and emphasized especially the nobility of teaching the children of this land and fitting them to become useful and worthy citizens of this great Canada of ours. What nobler service than to direct and instruct those who are to fill the places of the present generation by assisting them to prepare for their life work and for the best enjoyment of life themselves? Many women are giving their youth and energy in this important calling. She said the real and natural destiny of woman is home-making and to every woman the sweetest tune is the lullaby and her proper vocation is to make a happy home for "mere" man. At this point she recited nicely that familiar poem, "She just keeps house for me."

Passing on to writing, Mrs. Blewett traced women writers of Canada and gave brief sketches of the life and works of several. The first was Mrs. Brooks, wife of an army officer. Mrs. Lawson wrote historical tales of early time when "the wolf howled in the forest and the Indian lurked at the edge of the clearing." She mentioned and sometimes quoted from writings of Isabella Valancy Crawford, Marjorie Pickthall, Ethelwyn Wetherald, Verna Sheard, Isabel Ecclestone Mackay, Katharine Hale, Miss Coleman, L. M. Montgomery, Nellie McClung and others. She spoke very favorably of Press Women of Canada, speaking of the splendid work of Marjorie MacMurchy, Jean Graham, "Kit" and several others.

Her address was given almost entirely without notes. Her speech and manner captivated her audience and that sweet motherly smile was a benediction. To me, she seemed to almost talk in poetry and has such poetical ideas, and her metaphors woven in with bits of real poetry, her talk was like one long poem in blank verse. Later in the program she gave three selections from her own compositions, commanding perfect attention. She was presented with a huge bouquet of shaggy yellow 'mums mixed with greenery—yellow and green being our school colors.

VITAL STATISTICS FOR THE COUNTY AND CITY

Death Rate From Consumption Has Slowly Decreased Since 1909--Fifteen Twins in County

Some rather interesting facts are given in the annual report relating to the vital statistics for the year of 1912. The total number of death registrations for the year was 32,760, while the number of marriages for the year in the province was 20,845. The births were 58,870.

TUBERCULOSIS IN PETERBORO.

The report gives the total number of deaths from tuberculosis for the county of Peterborough for the past ten years as 435. The biggest year was 1904 when 54 people died from consumption. During the past four years, however, the death rate from tuberculosis has decreased and last year only 36 deaths were reported from consumption. Commencing with the year 1903, the rate per year was 44, 54, 42, 51, 44, 41, 47, 39, 37, 36.

The heaviest death rate was between the age of 20 and 30 years. Over 80 per cent. of deaths from tuberculosis occurred between the ages of 20 and 29. Over 40 per cent. occurred between the ages of 29 and 30. The laboring men constituted the greater part of the death rate there being a total of nearly two thousand laborers in the province who passed away from tuberculosis.

The statistics compiled in the report for the city of Peterborough, gives a total of 224 births, 251 marriages and 462 births.

The number of deaths reported for the county is 470, while the birth rate is 977 and the marriage registrations 377.

The total number of births registered for the county for the past ten years was 8,953.

In the year 1908 there were 986 births, while in 1903 only 688 births were registered. Last year the rate was 977 the second best year in the last ten.

THE GORDIAN KNOT.

The number of marriages registered in the county for the past ten years is 3,271. Last year leads the list with a total of 377, while the smallest number of marriages registered was in 1908, when only 294 brides were led to the altar.

The total number of deaths in the county for the ten years was 5,306. The year of 1911 contributed 606.

FIFTEEN TWINS.

Last year there were only 170 making a decided decrease. The month of March saw the greatest number of births when the population of the county was increased by 93 for the month. The total birth rate for the year is 977. Only 66 births were registered in November. The number of twins born in the county is 15, and five of these belong to the city. The number of illegitimate births is 9, of these 5 belong to the city. The number of males born in the county was 494 while 483 females were born.

In the city the months of May and June led the birth rate with 47 births each. November was the smallest month when only 28 births were registered. The total number for the city being 462 and 228 of this number were males.

The county weddings total 377. As usual June is first with 52 brides. The smallest month was May when only 18 weddings were solemnized.

The city marriages were greatly increased and total 251, of which 89 took place in June.

TWO YOUNG BRIDES.

It is very interesting to note the disparity in the ages. Two brides were married at the age of 15. The popular marrying age was between the ages of 20 and 30 for both sexes. Nearly twenty per cent. were married between the age of 20 and 25. In noting the difference in ages, a bride was married at the age of 55 while the groom was 60.

Sixty Years a Chorister.

Unique even among old land records, and doubly so for Canada, is the choral career of Alfred Joseph Bacon Smith, at present one of the main supports of the tenor line in St. George's Cathedral, Kingston, Ont.

For more than sixty years, "Jab," as they dub him affectionately, transposing his initials, has been called a chorister, and not once in all those years has he missed a Christmas or an Easter service. A Newfoundlander by birth, he comes of English stock, Dartmouth, in Devonshire, being his father's home, though his mother was Newfoundland born. He began his choral career in Quebec in 1853. After his removal to Kingston, Mr. Smith sang in three of that city's choirs, but joined the surpliced choir of the cathedral when it was organized under the late Dean Smith.

YOU get no comfort from heat that goes up the chimney. It is wasted. Ab-so-lutely.

A Hecla Furnace saves it. The patented fire-pot with its ribs of thin steel radiates the heat quickly—so quickly that the fire-pot itself never becomes red hot. None of the costly heat goes up the chimney. The smoke flue is always cool.

By careful tests the steel-ribbed fire-pot has shown a saving of at least one ton of coal in seven. Many a Hecla owner claims it saves more. This fire-pot is guaranteed not to burn out.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Don't Sleep After Meals.

It is good to sleep any time of the day or night except after a substantial meal, and then it is sheer madness. Rest after dinner is a physical necessity, particularly if you are over thirty. But even violent exercise is better than a nap.

In sleep every organ is at its lowest state of activity. And, though the stomach works automatically, it needs nervous energy. This energy is supplied from the sympathetic system at the direction of the brain during our waking moments, but when the brain becomes somnolent the stomach becomes less active, the meal is not properly digested, and all manner of injurious gases and acids are developed.

Be lazy after a meal. It is good for you, but don't sleep. Even elderly people would do well to postpone their beloved "forty winks" for a couple of hours.

When people of nervous temperament retire for the night and cannot sleep it is usually because their brains are still active and refuse to part with the blood which should properly travel elsewhere.

general mental and physical care of the child.

Parents will say that we are infringing upon personal liberty, but every law interferes with personal liberty. Some parents will absolutely refuse to do anything for a child who is going blind for want of proper attention to the eyes. The parents are directly responsible for the death of a child whom they have neglected to put under proper treatment and they should be made to attend to their child's health in time. A man has not the right to be "lord and master" of his own house who is not capable and has not the knowledge how to rule.

A knowledge of the body means everything to a person if he is to keep it in health. A good many people get their knowledge of how to look after their bodies from advertisements of quack medicines in the newspapers.

Motherhood.

Motherhood does not confer on any woman the knowledge of how to train a child. Some young mothers know no more how to rear a baby than they know how to rear a polar bear. If they know how to care for a child it should not get ill.

The human machine is a very complex one. Health is a product of moderation, excess always results in disaster. The laws of the body are God-given laws and if we obeyed these laws there would not be so much suffering in the world.

Parental authority is only exercised spasmodically. Fathers sometimes say "I want my child to have a good time, I had not a good time in my young days," and this often means indulgence which leads to laziness. The children get a knowledge of the streets which is detrimental to the proper development of their character. To make a true and efficient citizen we must see to it that parents do their duty to their offsprings.

Nose Blowing.

Pictures were then thrown upon the screen demonstrating the methods of carrying out medical inspection of schools in London, England, and in Toronto. Dr. Struthers said that every school should have a playground of at least five or six acres, and that open air classes should be held as often as possible.

A number of striking photographs were shown of deficient children and the lecturer said that every such child should be under the care of the state and not the parents.

One picture was of a scene in a Toronto school where the scholars were having a lesson on "How to Blow the Nose." Many cases of catarrh, said the Doctor, were due to ignorance in this gentle art.

He also said there should be a closer relation between the school and the home, and the medical inspector often visited the homes of the children in a tactful way to enquire about the condition in which they were being brought up.

There were a good number present and many doctors and school officers were in the audience. Miss Palmer contributed violin solos during the evening.

EXPENDITURES COUNCIL MADE IN FOUR YEARS

Some Figures to be Considered by the Ratepayer

Below will be found a statement showing how expenditures of the people's money have been made during the four years from 1908 to 1912. Recently a letter was written, charging the City Council with being extravagant, but this statement is not borne out when the question is carefully sifted and investigated.

From the figures given it will be seen that the net debt increased from $1,063,520.32 at December 31, 1908, to $1,562,968.34 at December 31, 1912, or a net increase of $499,449.02. Of this increase $275,000, or considerably over one-half the amount is represented by two items, as follows:

Waterworks System	$160,000
Public Schools	115,000
Total	$275,000

In the four years from 1908 to 1912 a total of $90,599.44 has been added for local improvements which includes sewers and sidewalks. Other large items are:

Smith Street Bridge	$32,500
Street Extension in 1909 ..	21,500
Romaine Street Sewer	30,000
De Laval Co.	19,500

With the exception of the amounts for Isolation Hospital, Protestant Home and Local Improvements, all expenditures made by the Council have been voted upon and approved by the ratepayers and while the expenditures for Local Improvements are not voted upon, yet these improvements are demanded and petitioned for by the people.

GET YOUR SUPPLY OF STAMPS NOW

Act Before the Crowds Gather at Stamp Vendor's Office

How about getting a supply of stamps now, to do you over the Christmas season?

Do you remember how rude people trod on your pet corns as you struggled through a crowd around the stamp vendor's office?

You vowed that next year you would buy a million stamps but you have not kept your vow.

The proper step to take is to act now and secure a supply of stamps. This is a suggestion that appears worthy of consideration.

The Sweater.

A smart way to embellish a plain white, mode or tan worsted sweater is to knit for it a collar, cuffs, pocket flaps and belt in Roman stripe pattern, using chiefly the dark colors, but occasionally breaking them with a very vivid stripe in yellow, green, blue or red.

When the plain hued sweater is of single breasted coat shape, the collar, turning over widely from the neck, should roll from the throat in short, broad revers, whose points extend half way to the arm eyes. The points of the deep cuffs at the center and the inch wide belt have pointed ends that cross below the front of the waist line.

INCREASED BUSINESS IS RECORDED AT POST OFFICE

Receipts in Stamp Sale Are Over $3000 in Advance for First Nine Months

That the local post office is solidly prosperous is demonstrated by a survey of the post office earnings from the sale of stamps for the first eleven months of this year. The sale of stamps shows a big increase over the same period of last year.

The total earnings derived from the sale of stamps up to the end of November was $42,980.78, with the rest of the season to receive from. The latter part of the year is generally the heaviest and therefore the total will show a big increase for the year. The earnings last year amounted to $40,582.60.

Postmaster Edgar commenting on the figures was of the opinion that there would be a considerable increase also this year in the sale of stamps around the end of the year.

The following returns in stamps are compiled from the post office books for the first eleven months of this year:

January	$4,098 00
February	3,328 31

Points for Mothers

Your Boy's Room.

If you have two rooms to turn over to the boys I think they will prefer a den and a bedroom, the latter furnished with twin beds, two dressers or high shaving stands and one big chiffonier, said an interior decorator recently. The den should contain a broad couch without back, a large table with the shelving beneath partitioned off for reading matter, two large easy chairs—boys like morris chairs better than rockers—a bookcase, preferably the sectional style, a splendid reading lamp and if possible an open fireplace.

As to color schemes, on the north walls use either a golden yellow and rich yellow brown combination—the yellow in the bedroom, brown in the living room—or a red combination. Brown makes a splendid background for college trophies, pennants, banners, etc., and sporting prints, while yellow for the bedroom gives a good reflection for shaving, dressing, etc.

If you use red select a warm geranium pink for the bedroom and for the den a rich, deep red, which will be simply a deepening of the geranium pink, or dry pinkish terra cotta for the bedroom and a very deep, warm terra cotta for the den. And always have a plain cartridge paper when you can get it in the right shades or a fine satin stripe paper which is in a soft two tone effect.

If you use a border select for either the brown or terra cotta wall covering of the den a hunting or riding or skating design.

For rugs use as many skins as you can muster or the imitation rag carpet rugs, which clean and shake splendidly. Have plain Marseilles or honey comb counterpanes and no shams. For bureau scarfs have plain hemmed strips of linen. Boys hate lace furbelows and ribbon bows.

I hear some mother of slender purse say that this is all right for the woman who can furnish a suit, but when you have only an attic room for the laddie—what then?

And again I say consult the boy. You'll be surprised at his resourcefulness. Here is what a mother and her boy living in a small town have done: She told the laddie of fifteen just how much money she could spend on his room when they moved into the new house. The attic was not plastered and the boy bought plain tan colored building paper to cover ceiling and wall and make the room warmer.

This made a stunning background for his squirrel skins, high school banners, fishing outfit and all other boyish treasures that would "hang."

He built a cozy corner of old boxes and burlap bags which his mother helped him to rip and dye a warm red. He painted his own floor, and he and his mother braided rugs at night. The girls gave him pillows for his cosy corner, and after he had repaired and painted a huge porch chair they made more pillows for that.

That room is beloved by every boy on the laddie's list of friends, and a certain club of boys and girls meets there once a week, thus saving maternal parlors.

On his bed be has Great Grandmother Burrell's counterpane, crocheted in red and blue. He repainted the bureau and made a tie rack to hang on one side and a whisk broom holder on the other from burnt wood. He has a homemade bookcase, and he and his chum are now building some real mission furniture to finish off the room.

Children's Luncheon Dainty.

A favorite luncheon sweet for small children with dainty appetites is made from a box of animal crackers, one of saltines and a cupful of pure maple sirup. Boil in the sirup until it forms a soft ball when dropped in ice water. Then put a little on each saltine and press an animal into this in a standing position. Cream cheese and marmalade with saltines is also a good combination.

RHEUMA

"I suffered from Rheumatism for six years; tried different doctors, with no relief. I saw your advertisement and decided to try RHEUMA. I have taken three bottles and am entirely free from the disease. I was so bad I could not sleep nights, now I sleep well, and my kidneys work perfectly."—P. W. Miller, Catawissa, Pa.

"For 14 months I was so badly afflicted with Rheumatism that much of the time I was obliged to use a cane. I used one bottle of RHEUMA and THE CANE IS IN THE CORNER NOW. No one could be happier to be rid of the pain, swollen knees and badly swollen ankles. I certainly believe there is no remedy for the disease like RHEUMA."—Mrs. Daniel S. Knox, Severance, N.Y., Aug. 8, 1912.

MAYBE the new dancing steps are responsible, maybe it is the unsubstantial, filmy materials used to make fashionable creations, perhaps it is only the eternal search for something new that gives that delightful zest in the acquisition of a new gown. In any case there is noticeable, both in Paris and New York fashions, an amusing tendency toward new style lines. The smartest new street suits are ridiculously short—one sees the upper of the high shoe or the slim silken ribbon laced ankle, the skirt is so short. To go the daytime décolleté one better, the necks of the daytime dresses, blouses and wraps are cut out in a décolleté curve in the back, the dinner and simple dancing gowns also. On the tailored coats and wraps this is especially amusing, for half the time it looks as if it were the result of an unsuccessful piece of dressmaking and the collar had refused to fit the neck at the back, falling away because cut out too much. When it comes to the waist line indication, if all traces of a waist line are not ruthlessly obliterated, as in many dresses, wide sashes are tied in a halfhearted way around the waist, not even drawn in the snug way one expects of a girdle finish. The one thing that seems natural and that one can cling to with any degree of familiarity is the tunic in some form, for the minaret and its relatives are always the direct descendants of the first garment fashioned by the original home dressmaker.

Hats have threatened to balance atop the head for many seasons. That is all that has come of it till now. A new shape with a brim dashingly turned up at one side is having immense popularity with ultra smart folk. This shape perches on top of the modish coiffure often cocked jauntily on one side. The higher side of the brim turns back at an audacious angle that is continued by the high aigrette or paradise ornaments. The distance from the chin to the top of one of these ornaments is unbelievable even in headgear. None of these ultra and rather bizarre fashions has yet been vulgarized or even popularized. That is always simply a matter of time. An attractive fashion always becomes popular when it takes on conservative lines and colors. In the process, unfortunately, it also becomes vulgarized until every line proportion and color out of harmony makes of it a sorry caricature.

Very charming examples of these new lines are shown here. One of these worn coquettishly, shown in both a front and back view, contains nearly all these new features. Two views, Nos. 1 and 2, a front and side view, show the curtailed skirt, the waist with its peculiar décolleté back and the "poster" style of the hat with its absurdly high ornament. The illusion of a dress and a hat a size too small, judged by our present popular style standard—therein lies the fashion. The material is pale rose satin, the little skirt tunic of silver lace showing a sparkling ribbon-like lamé thread accentuating the design. The corsage of the pink satin, is V'd in front to the waist and with the new scooped out décolleté back is outlined by a line of sable fur. A soft veiling of illusion replaces a tucker. Sable fur outlines the tunic edge and a supple satin sash ribbon, wrinkled into soft folds and twisted loops, indicates a very high waist line.

Perched atop of the rather close casque coiffure a black velvet hat tilts in true "Watteau" fashion over one side of the head, and the large black paradise ornament, posed high on the upper brim edge, continues the upward line of the sharply turned back brim.

Outlined by a wire tulle frill, the curiously cut out neck back of the dancing gown in Nos. 3 and 4 has the same novel movement as in the previous model. The filmy double ruffle, however, seems to accentuate it even more than in the simpler frock. The gown has a white satin foundation; the tunic is of white tulle. This tunic is pointed on the sides, weighted with two crystal bead tassels, and the ruffle is beaded by a narrow band of sable like the tunic. It is charmingly sashed with brown tulle, to carry the color of the fur, tying in one of the spread butterfly bows in the back pinned to the gown, with long floating ends; the sleeve ruffle is caught back on the inside of the arm. The satin foundation skirt is draped up in a crossed hidden slash. There is a crystal bead fringe on the petticoat that shows a bit at times through the slash.

An ermine coat, draped into panniers on the sides, has this same revealing line at the back of the neck. The seal collar stole that follows the outline rolls over into a little collar, and the coat seems to be pulled down a bit to accentuate this movement. Two hats are on very much the same idea as that worn in Nos. 1 and 2. One is of velvet, one of plush, and both are black. One is heightened with a fountain aigrette, the other by two paradise ornaments.

What the French Writers Say About Fashions

FRIVOLINE, in L'Art de la Mode, writes of the modern figure. "I do not know," she says, "if you are as much amused as I am in passing an hour at the great dressmakers, but I can assure you that my diversion is mixed with envy before all the exquisite eccentricities that file before me.

"In the first place, the throwing forward of the abdomen which the dressmakers' models exaggerate is disconcerting and unexpected......Quick, let us pose before the mirror, and just till we have acquired it practise and practise this effect till accomplished. That day we will appear in this pose and will surely produce an effect, perhaps at some five o'clock tea, perhaps in some drawing room.

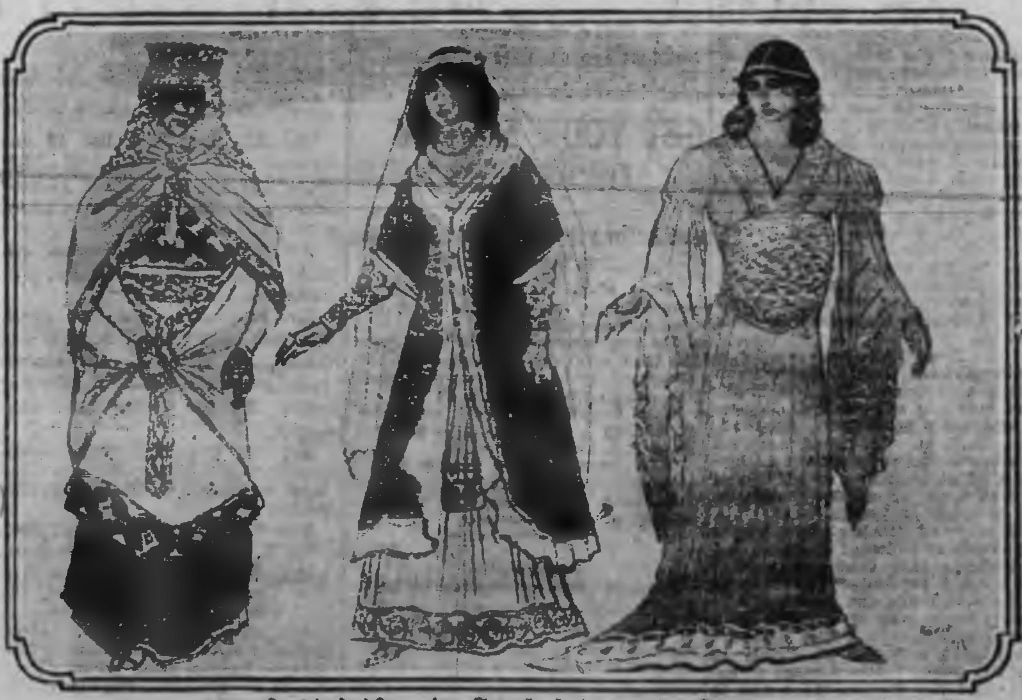
"While awaiting this here are some models which will aid toward this silhouette. First, a robe made of bias bands superposed and rather large, raised in the front as if one wished to cross a stream, which multiplies the pleatings into the belt—very large, by the way. A corsage made of two large bands of sombre blue and white striped silk simulates a front 'à la vierge' bordered with a line of sable.

"A robe, all of one color, of velours de laine, had a skirt without ornamentation, but the long coat was an unusual novelty."

Camille Duguet, in Chiffons, says in her "Visions Elegantes": "Evening clothes seem to be almost discarded. Oh! the evenings at 'Magic City!' Sleeves have disappeared, the arms display their whiteness without any veiling, and one wonders how corsages stay on the shoulders. They are no longer corsages, in fact, but a trifle—mere nothings—of mousseline or a tulle of such fineness as to be impalpable and almost invisible. The tango danced by a woman so dressed and guided by a professional teacher becomes something unspeakably lovely. The gowns of the tango dancers seem to add a special seduction, one, for example, called 'Nuit Rose' which seems to evoke the poetic and voluptuous silhouettes of the heroines of D'Annunzio. It is in rose crêpe de Chine, with silver lamé threads and an indescribable blue that is both harmonious and violent at the same time. The corsage of rose pink mousseline de soie, transparent over the skin, is enlivened in front by blue stones mounted in a silver setting after the fashion of ancient buttons.

"Another robe, 'Vision Argentée,' merits also some mention. Salammbo must have been so dressed on the terraces of the palace of Carthage. This one is of white satin, veiled with silver lace forming a tunic. The silver lace makes the corsage, but what is noticeable in this gown and which gives it its style of charming novelty is the narrow bands of silver ribbon posed loosely on the tunic, which they encircle like the straps that hold them on the skirt. At the waist an enormous motif of strass and emeralds help to achieve the resemblance to the marvellous costumes of the beautiful Carthaginian."

Fashion Hints by Leon Bakst, Russian Designer and Costumer



Court Ladies' Gowns from Pisanella, Costumed by Leon Bakst.
Copyright by the Berlin Photographic Co.

BRIGHT as is the coloring of the Leon Bakst costume sketches now on [illegible] at the galleries of the Berlin Photographic Company, in New York city, they paled before some of the fashionable gowns worn at the opening private view. One Florentine gown, designed by Fortuny, it is said, of gold, green and brown, fairly shimmered and glowed with its rich coloring.

Not but that the designs of Mr. Bakst are all that could be desired by those who have a developed color sense. They are veritable orchestrations of color. In fact, it is only just to credit this versatile artist painter with having given the first impulse to the mode of wonderful and rich coloring of to-day's fashions. For it was his costume designs for the Russian ballet which first set Paris agog and thus influenced French gown designers toward brilliant hues.

Since Mme. Paquin, several seasons ago, lent Mr. Bakst her workrooms and staff that he might carry out some ideas he had in modern dress, fashion has been interested in Bakst ideas in coloring, in interior decoration and dress, whether on the stage or in private life. Last winter those who saw the Russian opera "Boris Godounow" at the Metropolitan Opera House gained a very good idea of this wonderful color sense, for these costumes were copies of originals that he had designed for its first production abroad.

It is in the "Pisanelle" drawings, the play by d'Annunzio that took Paris by storm last season, that one can trace most clearly this unusual and original dramatic color sense. He has made a certain color a theme—a motif that runs through the scenery and costumes of the last act, as does a leitmotif in music. A certain color red, a powerful shade of red-violet, at the first of the act shows here and there lightly in bits—in the cap of a slave, the skirt or tunic of a court lady or in the decorative background garden scenery. This color gains in mass, till at the end and the climax, the heroine, sentenced to death, is stifled under an avalanche of roses of this color.

The reproduction of a Bakst drawing of three of the court ladies' costumes shows this tone of red in the skirt of the first, in the pobunals tunic of the second and in the third in the skirt, that is combined with a brilliant blue top. The same color idea is carried out in most fascinating manner in other plays, such as "Thamar" and "Le Dieu Bleu."

The costuming of the athletic ballet of "Le Jeux" is amusing because modern athletic clothes are idealized and gently caricatured for the scene, a reversal of the usual order.

This Bakst idea of a color theme in costume has a germ of what may prove a future idea in fashionable woman's garb and is therefore important to all those interested in fashion. Whether [illegible]

CANADIAN LEAGUE MEETS AT TORONTO TO-MORROW

The Peterborough Baseball Club will be represented at the annual meeting of the Canadian Baseball League to be held at Toronto, to-morrow.

The outcome of the discussion relative to a change in the circuit will be awaited with interest but it will not be a very big surprise to learn that despite all that has been said, that the clubs now holding franchises will do battle again next season

Several applications have been made for the position of manager of the White Caps, and local fans have learned with considerable satisfaction that Harry Bemis, backstop of the Toronto Baseball Club is one of the men who would like to land the job.

The meeting for shareholders will be called in the near future.

SITUATION AT ST. THOMAS.

Owing to the present uncertainty of the composition of the league next year, the St. Thomas directors have been lying low with regard to the appointment of next season's manager. In case an arrangement were entered into whereby St. Thomas would be forced into a Class "D" organization the local men feel that they would have to economize, and for that reason no action has been taken re securing the 1914 pilot.

It is understood that there are three or four applications for the berth.

FORMER COLT MANAGING TEAM AT HAMILTON

Bobby Parker Will Look After the Intermediate Seven

The Hamilton Hockey Club has selected Robert Parker, proprietor of Parker's Dye Works, as manager of the intermediate team. Parker has played the game with the old Peterborough Colts, and is well versed in every angle of it.

The president of the O.H.A has notified the Intermediate Hockey Club of Berlin that they must choose other officers than Dr. Kalbfleisch and Wm. Witt, president and vice-president, respectively, as these gentlemen are considered professionals, having been connected with the Berlin Canadian League ball team as officers.

Ice is expected at the Toronto Arena by next Monday.

Frank Heffernan is said to be making a hit as referee in the Detroit-Cleveland series.

The Guelph Victorias will enter two teams, intermediate and junior, in the O.H.A The junior team appears to be very strong, and is expected to do even better than last season

The officers of the Peterborough Hockey Club are receiving the "glad hand" in their quest for financial assistance.

Walter Miller is expected to show up well with the Wanderers this season.

Representatives of junior hockey clubs are asked to be on hand for the organization meeting at the Boston Cafe to-night.

It is likely that a game between the intermediates and the Old Boys will be put on between Christmas and New Year's Day.

Tommy Moffatt says he has had enough of Trent Valley League hockey and is finished for good.

GEORGE MULLIN IS NOW A CLERK

George Mullin, the famous old Detroit pitcher, is now an entry clerk in County Treasurer E. F. Stein's office, Detroit. Mullin, who was released to Washington by Detroit last season and who later went to Montreal, took the position in the county office for the winter months, and now that he is there he is not at all certain but that he will give his future attention to the commercial side of life. Mullin, after pitching a few games with the Montreal Royals, "jumped" the International League and went into independent baseball. He was with Tom Stephen's Otsego nine during a part of the last season and later he worked with the barn-storming Tigers.

C. be represented by four players, making 28 in all.

LODGING HOUSE BURNS

Twenty-Seven Men Perish in Holocaust in Boston.

Cheap Hotel For Men Is Swept by Fire and Transients Sleeping In Bunks and Tiny Rooms — Some Hurt Jumping From Windows — Some Escape by Walking Plank to Adjoining Building.

BOSTON, Dec. 4. — Twenty-seven men were killed in a fire which swept through the upper floors of the Arcadia Hotel, a cheap men's lodging house in the south end, early yesterday. Others are missing and scores were taken to hospitals suffering from burns and injuries received in jumping from windows.

Nearly all of the bodies were terribly burned and mutilated, making identification almost impossible. The victims were men in poor circumstances. Many were negroes. Caught in the crowded bunks on the top floor of the five-storey brick building and in the small rooms on the fourth floor, they were helpless. When they were aroused the stairways were in flames and there was a mad rush for the fire escapes at the rear. Practically all the men were naked.

Many were rescued by the firemen and police. Others escaped by walking a shaky plank stretched to an adjoining building or jumping across a five-foot alley to neighboring roofs.

The property loss is estimated at $25,000.

The Arcadia was located at the corner of Washington and Laconia streets. The lower floors were occupied by stores. The fire apparently started, no one knows how, in the hallway closet on the street floor. The flames swept up the wooden stairways and burned through the roof. According to William Walsh, the night clerk, there were 178 lodgers in the building when the fire was discovered by a passing newsboy. After turning in an alarm he rushed into the building awakening the men with his shouts.

The top floor was one large room, filled with cots and bunks. On the fourth floor, where the loss of life was heaviest, there were 30 tiny rooms, like cells, with two cots in each. A hallway ran through the centre. Nearly all those occupying rooms on the front of the building perished.

But, Oh, the Difference!

He took the maiden's hand in his
And kissed the dainty thing,
And when she met her friends next day
It made her happy to display
A splendid diamond ring.

That happened when the year was young,
When April's breezes blew.
They quarreled later in the spring,
But still she gladly wears his ring.
Which is as good as new.

GETTING A LINE ON HIM.

For All That, Robert Had His Dad Worried at First.

The president of a large manufacturing concern decided a little while ago to start his son in the business, letting him begin at the bottom. After the boy's first day in the factory his father asked:

"Well, Robert, what did you learn today?"

"Oh, there's nothing much to learn in that place," the young man airily replied.

The father looked worried, but he refrained from giving expression to his disappointment.

After Robert's second day at the works the father asked:

"Well, what did you learn today?"

"Oh, I learned a good many things," the young man answered.

At the end of the third day the father again asked:

"Well, Robert, what did you learn today?"

"Gee, dad," the boy replied, "I never can learn that business!"

Then the delighted father clapped a hand upon his son's shoulder and said:

"Robert, you're all right. I guess you'll be able to take hold of things when I have to let go, but you had me worried at the start."—Chicago Record-Herald.

His Regret.

They were going along the public highway at a leisurely rate of forty miles per hour when a decrepit hen and rooster started to do the chicken specialty—cross the road.

The front and hind wheels on the right side struck the poor, old, stiff jointed rooster amidships, and with one squawk he succumbed.

Immediately the man at the steering wheel started to slow down and to look about for a place to turn.

His solicitous wife turned to her seat mate and said:

"Isn't that just like his tender heart? He won't be satisfied unless he goes back and settles for that rooster. He just can't bear to feel he has injured any one or anything."

Then, louder, to her husband she said:

"George, remember that appointment. We haven't any time to go back for anything."

Glancing at the clock near his feet and at the speedometer near by, he sighed and said:

"You're right, Jennie, but I just know if I had turned back I could have killed that old hen just as easy as I did the rooster!"—Fun.

Too Much For the Shark.

Brown—Have you heard of the adventure of old Skinnem, the money lender?

Green—No. What was that?

Brown—Why, he went out to bathe one day this summer and encountered a huge shark. Their eyes met for an instant; then the shark blushed and swam away.—Philadelphia Record.

He Changed It.

"Has your order been taken, sir?" inquired the head waiter.

"Yes," replied the patient diner—"fifteen minutes ago. If it isn't too late, though, I'd like to change it."

"To change your order, sir?"

"Yes. If you don't mind I'll change it to an entreaty."—Boston Transcript.

Poor Pa!

"Willie!" said his father crossly. "I never used to ask so many questions when I was young."

"I'm awful sorry, papa," Willie thoughtfully replied, "cause if you had maybe you'd be able to answer more of mine now."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

NEW ARCS TO BE LIGHTED BY 15th OF THIS MONTH

Great White Way to Greet Home-comers for Christmas

Ald W. J. Johnston, chairman of the Power Committee of the Council, states that every effort is being made to have the magnetite arc lamps lighted by the 15th of this month.

There is some work to be completed besides making the circuits, but all being well, the great white way will start business in time to greet the first home-comers for Christmas.

The members of the committee are eager to "deliver the goods" and incidentally give the people something for their money. They are quite optimistic that the ratepayers will not be disappointed.

KINGSTON LIKES "THE GLAD EYE"

Company Appears Here Next Tuesday Dec. 9

"The Glad Eye," an English adaptation of a French farce, is full of novel situations and pleased a good house at the Grand last night. It contains much clever nonsense and is sprightly and effervescent with humor.

The theme concerns the adventures of two young married men who, to deceive their wives, pretend that they are taking aerial trips with a certain French Count, a well known aviator, when all the time they are having a riotous time in Paris together. The wife of one, suspecting her flighty husband, engages a detective to pose as the aviator Count; with the result that humorous complications and embarrassing situations arise, all of which afford ample opportunities for farcical display of the most amusing type.

In such a well-drilled and evenly-balanced cast it is invidious to select, but Miss Mary Marlowe as Lucienne, the sly and knowing wife, and Miss Katie Yates as Kiki, were very pleasing. Douglas Greet was an acceptable Bocard, in the true Lawrence Grossmith manner, and the other male characters were in capable hands. Augustus Wheatman as the elderly crank was very comical, no less so than his assistant, the scheming Chausette. The staging was handsome, and the scene of the second act with the balcony was an extremely clever device, in an age where farces usually are laid in a room with seven doors and thirteen windows. The ladies wore stunning gowns, especially Lucienne's orange and black confection. —Kingston Whig, Dec. 2nd.

THE LIGHT ETERNAL

Is Now in Its Sixth Successful Season

Local theatre-goers should have no trouble in reasoning out for themselves the business motives that bring about the bookings of "The Light Eternal," at the Grand on Saturday next, Dec. 6th. Were the attraction of any but the highest order it would be financial suicide for the management to book it for a return engagement, and the mere fact that this engagement will mark the second presentation of the play in this city is in itself a guarantee of merit. The Light Eternal is now in its sixth successful season, the last two of which have been devoted to the plan of booking now in vogue. In several instances, towns of from 25,000 to 50,000 have been played two and three engagements of three nights and a matinee each, making in all from eight to twelve performances of the play in these communities within less than two years.

Miss Louise Dunbar and John Milton will again be seen in the leading roles.

WEDDING—PERSONALS

FISHER—LUNNEY.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. Isaac Lunney, Campbellford, on Wednesday, November 26th at 6.30 o'clock when his younger sister, Sara, was united in marriage to Mr. Douglas Fisher of Bailieboro.

The bride entered the drawing room, leaning on the arm of her brother, to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march played by Mrs. W. C. Allen. Her gown was of white satin with pearl trimmings and she carried a bouquet of white roses and lily of the valley. The ceremony was performed by Canon Allen of Millbrook, under an arch of evergreens banked with ferns and white 'mums. After the wedding dejeuner the bride and groom departed, midst showers of confetti, for their home, followed by the good wishes of their many friends.

Mrs. A. Franklin Lane, 422 Rubidge Street, will receive Friday afternoon, from 4 to 6 o'clock.

Mr. Wm. Armstrong, of Campbellford, was in the city yesterday attending the Dawson—Armstrong nuptials.

Mr. T. W. Wilson, formerly of the C.G.E. Company of this city, has been in town for the past few days renewing old acquaintances. Mr. Wilson now holds a position with a large drug firm in Toronto.

Mrs. H. J. Keith is progressing favorably at Nicholls Hospital and is resting well.

Mrs. Robinson, Port Hope, announces the engagement of her only daughter, Harriet, to Mr. William Williams, Port Hope. The marriage will take place towards the end of December.

BUFFALO CAPITALISTS AFTER CORDOVA GOLD MINE

Havelock, Dec. 4.—During the past week a large party of Buffalo capitalists visited the Cordova gold mine, with a view to purchasing a controlling interest in the same. The party, who are said to have been most favorably impressed with the property, were under the guidance of Mr. Kirkegaard, of Toronto, one of the present owners of the mine. The price of the deal, if it goes through, is said to be $250,000. At present there is mortgage of $40,000, a second mortgage of $20,000, and other claims including $5,000 for wages, to the total of $70,000, against the property. It is said that if the Buffalo people buy, that work will be resumed on a far bigger scale than heretofore.

NO ASHES IN INCINERATOR

Contractor Objects to Ashes Being Used for Test

The incinerator contractor is now ready to show the Council what the incinerator will do but he insists that ashes be not used in the test.

This puts a new complexion on things and Sanitary Inspector Spence said to-day that the ashes would have to be kept separate from other garbage as is now the rule, but all kinds of garbage could be placed in one receptacle.

This brings about a situation that will need the attention of the Property Committee.

Mr. Spence said he understood that ashes would be included in the garbage to be incinerated.

RESTRICTIONS IN BUILDING WHERE THE CITY IS BOOMING

Property With Restrictions Makes a Better Showing —Suggestion for Real Estate Agents

The question as to where, in what direction and how much Peterboro will boom next year has no doubt crossed the minds of many citizens. The last two years are generally recognized as Peterboro's banner years but if all signs prove true they will be paralleled if not surpassed by the coming twelve months. The south end of the city, the suburbs Claraday and Brownton have come to the front in lengthy steps, and it is very probable that all extensive operations along the lines of a boom will be centered in these localities. The factories that are springing up at regular intervals and locating in the south ward, help to draw the newcomers. Schools are very convenient, there being three, (Sacred Heart, King Edward and May's New School), within a radius of a mile, and churches are by no means a minus quantity, for three sects have places of worship, namely: Church of the Sacred Heart, St. James' Methodist and St. George's Anglican. All these, particularly the schools, draw the working man and his family and it is the working man who builds up the cities.

Perhaps the city is not doing justice to this cause of booming, although several good factories have been secured. When a house is being built, every convenience, such as a good sewerage system, water, gas, etc., should be at the disposal of the builder. It cannot be denied that it would in the majority of cases, cause the builder to erect an up-to-date and thoroughly modern house which is not always found in the booming district of the average Canadian city. In Toronto and other cities one can see miles and miles of pavement, gas, water and sewer mains, along which there is not a single house, yet when houses are built these conveniences will influence the builder and the result will be as stated above. One thing the city did do, and which appeared at the time to be an asset to the south end, was the buying and improving of what is known as King Edward Park. Has it been a success or has it been cared for? Nothing of the sort; it has been a farce from beginning to end. The trees are not looked after, neither is the grass, and on the whole, it is in a very dilapidated condition.

Make Restrictions.

With all due respect for the system of selling land held by the real estate men who are operating in the south-west part of the city, a little line about the selling of lots with a restriction on them, would not be out of place. The city has purchased the block of land of some ten acres which lies directly south of the Henry Hope factory. This, in all probabilities, was done in order to have a site for any factory which proposes to locate. It is therefore practically certain that the boom will be out in that direction. As in all other booms, houses of any description or dimensions are erected, but this should not be the case.

One Illustration.

Princess Street is a new street and yet one walking down it is forced to express his admiration of the extra fine class of houses because they are not surpassed even in the older districts. This is due to the efforts and good business principles of the real estate men working on this street. One man in particular deserves mention. He is Mr. J. O. Fife. Through the agency of Mr. Fife some $34,000 have changed hands on property on this street, yet he always sold his lots with a restriction on them. He, at times sold lots and thought it not necessary to assure a good dwelling. He had to rebuy the property at a loss because the buyer was about to erect an inferior class of house. He sold two lots to one man and was more than surprised to find the purchaser starting to build three houses on the two lots. For the sake of the street and the other property on it he reclaimed these lots and sold them with restrictions. The lots on Prince Street which is the next street south, were sold with the only restriction—a $700 house—and the result can be seen by viewing the two streets. On the latter street, houses of all descriptions are erected.

Make Restrictions.

It might be both a benefit to the city and to the south end if the real estate men who will operate in the south-west section of the city will put a $1,500 or $2,000 restriction on this property. That means that when a man buys a lot he signs a contract agreeing to erect a house the value of which is not less than the amount named, which, in no case should be less than $1,500. Some may think that such restrictions would bear hard on the working man. This however would not be the case. There is a company operating in this city which assist this class of citizens. If a man owns a lot, he can obtain money from this company and erect his house. This money is paid back in monthly payments and as ample time is given, the payments are in most cases less than rent. One case in mind is that of a man who owned a lot and obtained money in this manner. The amount cannot just be recalled, but at all events he erected a very fine and up-to-date dwelling and his payments amount to $11.00 per month, and at the end of a few years after paying what is practically a cheap rent, he will own his home.

SENATOR DEPUY MAY SUCCEED PREMIER BARTHOU

PARIS, Dec. 5.—After taking all night to consider, Senator Ribot twice premier, declined this morning the task of constructing a new cabinet and President Poincare thereupon asked Senator Dupuy to succeed Premier Barthou, who resigned.

Senator Dupuy consented, subject to the approval of his friends whom he is consulting.

HOLDS UP FARMER.

Bogus Farm Hand Suddenly Turns On Would-Be Employer.

BERLIN, Ont., Dec. 5.—A hold-up in typical western fashion was perpetrated on the Petersburg road, a couple of miles from here, when Anton Waurish was relieved of $25 and some change. While Waurish was about town he met a young man who claimed to be a farm hand and he offered him a job on his farm. The stranger accepted, and Waurish and he took the former's rig and drove away. When they had gone about two miles, the would-be farm hand demanded the valuables of Waurish. A fight resulted and the stranger drew a revolver to emphasize his demands. After securing the money with revolver drawn the modern Dick Turpin turned the horse around, and drove to Berlin. The victim chanced a ride, and upon reaching the city notified the police. In the morning a warrant was issued for the arrest of a young man whom the police suspect.

SITE IS UPHELD.

Methodist Committee Passes On Book Room Dispute.

TORONTO, Dec. 5.—A statement of the findings in connection with the inquiry into the circumstances of the purchase of the Beverley House property and its suitability as a new site for the book and publishing house was issued last evening by the Book Committee of the Methodist Church after an all-day session.

The committee finds that the steward and his assistant sought to buy the property solely on its merits; that the Book Committee was ignorant of the ownership of the site; that the action of the vendors in taking a profit of $32,500 on the land was a legitimate business transaction, and, finally, that no other site is as suitable for the purposes of the Book Room.

Dead as Result of Fall.

WELLAND, Dec. 5. — Bias Vicilli died in the County Hospital Wednesday night as the result of a broken back. When a number of G.T.R. men became intoxicated he fell or was pushed from a hand-car at the depot here. Dr. Colbeck, coroner, opened an investigation yesterday afternoon, the case being placed before the coroner's jury and an adjourned meeting will be held Wednesday next.

Will Not Give Up Arms.

BELFAST, Ireland, Dec. 5.—Prominent Unionists here say that any attempt to deprive the Ulster volunteers of their weapons will mean an uprising in the northern Irish province.

At the Ulster Union headquarters it is said the importations of arms into Ireland will be stopped by a revival of the Irish Crimes Act, which has been in abeyance for several years owing to the absence of the home rule agitation.

This act of Parliament forbids the carrying of arms and gives to the authorities powers of search and confiscation.

Milk Strike Called.

BERLIN, Ont., Dec. 5.—Mayor Euler notified the general public that Saturday morning, Dec. 6, has been fixed for the beginning of a milk strike for the purpose of bringing about a reduction in price from eight to seven cents. Quite a number of citizens have already stopped their supply of milk, the mayor being one of the first to be reported to the milkmen.

Liquor by Post Barred.

OTTAWA, Dec. 5.—It is understood that Hon. L. P. Pelletier has issued an order prohibiting the carriage of liquor by parcel post. Parcel post will be in operation early in the New Year, and much interest has been shown as to what attitude the Postmaster-General would assume in this regard.

DENIES REVERSES.

Huerta Says Stories of Rebel Victories Are Untrue.

PARIS, Dec. 5.—The Matin has received a cablegram from Victoriano Huerta, in which the Mexican President says:

"The reports of the alleged successes of the rebels at Cullacan, Cuidad, Victoria and Juarez must be considered untrue. These places were evacuated in accordance with the plan of campaign being carried out by the Government forces."

Alive After Execution.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 5.—Col. Exiquito Barbosa, a federal officer who was left for dead with a bullet through his chest after facing a firing squad of rebels at Torreon, arrived in the capital yesterday.

Barbosa is the only one to escape death of the 19 officers captured by Gen. Villa on that occasion. He crawled away from the spot and managed to reach a ranch in the vicinity where he was given help. Some time later he got away and reached a mining camp, where a doctor dressed his wounds.

CANADA'S REMARKABLE SHOWING AT CHICAGO; HAS TWENTY AWARDS

Saskatchewan Shows Twenty Horses and Carries Home Twenty Prizes in Competition With Thoroughbreds of U.S. Millionaire Breeders.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—At the International Live Stock Show yesterday, the judging of all the horse classes in which Saskatchewan was interested was completed, and the western horses have a phenomenal record of wins to their credit. Twenty horses were shown, and there are twenty prizes to carry home. In only one class did they show and not get in the money. The exact number and character of the wins is as follows: Three first prizes, six second prizes, three third prizes, two fourth prizes, three fifth prizes, two sixth prizes and one seventh prize.

Championships and strings of twos and threes were decided yesterday. The senior champion Clydesdale stallion was Fyvie Baron, who was first in the aged class. He is owned by Conham Bros., of Wilkesbarre, Pa.

The senior champion mare was Harviestoun Baroness, owned by the Fairholm Farm of Newmarket, N.J. These two were afterwards granted champions of the breed.

The junior champion stallion was Glencaple of the Conham Stud. The junior champion mare was Rodie Pride, from the same stud.

In the class of three animals, the get of one sire, R. H. Taber of Condie, Sask., got third place with the get of the Bruce, and the Colony Farm, British Columbia, was second with the get of Baroness Pride.

W. H. Bryce has refused all offers for Doune Lodge Romeo, and the University of Saskatchewan has refused several excellent offers for Lady Bruce of Lumsden and Craigie Meral.

The cattle car lot exhibits were sold yesterday. The champion car lot sold for $13.25 per cwt. and the reserve champion car lot, which were two-year-olds, at $11.80. The interest in stock breeding is emphasized by the high averages made at the sales of pure bred stock. The Aberdeen Angus Society sold 52 head at an average of $274 each, nearly $100 over the average of last year.

The highest priced bull brought $2,005. He is only a calf yet, J. D. McGregor bought a couple of very handsome cows for his herd, and was a heavy buyer for a personal friend in the States, who is starting a herd.

Champion Steer To Be at Guelph.

TORONTO, Dec. 5.—By the special request of Hon. J. S. Duff, Glencarnock Victor II., the magnificent fat steer which carried off the grand championship at the International Live Stock Show at Chicago a few days ago and brought the tribute of the breeders of the continent to Canadian cattlemen, will be on exhibition at the Ontario Winter Fair, which opens in Guelph next week. This arrangement is counted by the Department to be one of the most interesting features of several years of exhibits.

TWO FEET OF SNOW

Canadian Press Despatch.

DENVER, Dec. 5.—There are two feet of snow on the ground here and it is still falling. Railroad traffic is suspended. Shopkeepers and workers stayed down town last night walking being too difficult and there are also a few shoppers.

Similar conditions are reported from other points in the State and it is one of the worst snow storms recorded.

Treasurer Accused of Stealing $40

MONTREAL, Dec. 5.—H. Wright secretary-treasurer of Montreal South, appeared in the arraignment court yesterday to face a charge of stealing $400, money which had been entrusted to him in his capacity as an officer of the corporation. The charge is laid in the name of the municipality, the money having been funds of the town.

No evidence was taken yesterday, the prisoner being remanded to December 10.

Exonerated Fellow Student.

KINGSTON, Dec. 5.—Rather than allow John Youngs, a freshman science student, to be found guilty of pulling down a Princess street store sign, R. K. Carnochan, another student, came forward yesterday and told the police magistrate that he was the guilty party, and paid a fine of five dollars and costs.

Tug Engineer Goes Insane.

SARNIA, Dec. 5. — Late Wednesday Galvin Robinson, engineer on the Reid tug Diver, went insane and caused much excitement on board the craft until he was taken from the boat when she arrived at this port. He kept running about the boat believing that some one was chasing him to kill him.

CHANCELLOR VOTED DOWN.

German Reichstag Overwhelmingly Sides With Alsatians.

BERLIN, Dec. 5.—A vote of lack of confidence in the Imperial Chancellor, in connection with his attitude in regard to the troubles between the military and the civilians at Zabern Alsace, was adopted in the Imperial Parliament yesterday by 293 against 54. If Germany had a Parliamentary system instead of a semi-autocratic regime Bethmann-Hollweg and the Cabinet would now be a thing of the past. One blank paper was handed in, while 49 members were not present.

Last night the Chancellor, Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg, was on his way to Donaueschingen in response to a peremptory summons from the Kaiser, who is staying there with friends of Prince Max Egon Zu Furstenberg.

The two men who are responsible respectively for the civil and military government of Alsace-Lorraine are Count Von Wedel, viceroy of the conquered province, and Gen. Von Diemling, commander of the 15th Army Corps, who is also hastening to Donaueschingen at the Emperor's behest. Wedel is said to be traveling to Donaueschingen with his resignation in his pocket. It is learned from a well-informed political quarter that late last evening Bethmann-Hollweg went to Donaueschingen to place his portfolio at the Kaiser's disposal.

POLICE CAPTURE MRS. PANKHURST AND MILITANT LEADER IS IN PRISON AGAIN

Is Taken From Liner in a Tug and Landed at Devonport Dockyard From Which Public Are Excluded—Militant Organ Calls Arrest a Scandal.

EXETER, Eng., Dec. 5. — Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant suffragette leader, was lodged yesterday in Exeter Jail. After the police landed her from the tug at a dock on the Tamar river, they started off in the direction of London, but afterwards, changed their route and made direct for this city.

The Women's Social and Political Union in London, the militant suffragette organization, issued the following announcement yesterday afternoon:

"The union views with great indignation the Government's action in arresting Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst on her return from her triumphant tour in the United States. It denounces as a public scandal this act of injustice on the part of the Government, while Sir Edward Carson, Andrew Bonar Law and other men lawbreakers remain free. It demands her instant release."

Police Used Wily Ruse.

PLYMOUTH, Eng., Dec. 5.—Contrary, to expectations, there was no disturbance when Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant suffragette leader, was arrested on board the steamship Majestic on her arrival from New York yesterday.

Mrs. Pankhurst was transferred to a tug which had been chartered by the police and was taken to Devonport dockyard.

The police officers boarded the Majestic as soon as the liner anchored shortly after noon.

The police tug with the prisoner and the officers on board steamed off directly for Devonport. Everybody except officials was excluded from the Government dockyard and Mrs. Pankhurst landed without incident.

CABINET DECIDES ON NEXT SESSION

Between the Laurier Platforms of a Canadian Navy and Lower Cost of Living by Reducing Revenue, Federal Legislators Have a Lively Session in Prospect.

OTTAWA, Dec. 5. — The date of the opening of Parliament is Jan. 15. This was decided upon at a meeting of the Cabinet yesterday. It is anticipated that the session will be a lively one. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's "free food" speech in Hamilton is taken here to mean that this is the first announcement of a general campaign against the tariff. However, a clear pronouncement is expected at the Fielding banquet in Montreal next week.

The naval question and the highways will again take up considerable time, although not so much as last year. The Government will send these measures to the Senate as early as possible. An important matter will be the revision of the Railway Act, which has been in the hands of counsel for two years. Much interest will be centred in the Government's redistribution bill, which will be brought down.

The opinion was expressed yesterday that the Government will make a strong effort to get through by May 24.

Mr. Rowell In Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Dec. 5.—N. W. Rowell, leader of the Ontario Opposition, was in conference with Sir Wilfrid Laurier yesterday morning. It is understood tariff issues were under discussion, and that an important announcement of policy will be made at the Fielding banquet in Montreal on Tuesday night.

CONVICT WAS "HOSED."

Kingston Prisoner Says Punishment Affected His Health.

KINGSTON, Dec. 5.—Further evidence on "hosing" convicts was given at the afternoon session of the prison enquiry.

Convict F 294, aged 21, and serving a second term, said he had been hosed twice in June and July last year for misconduct. On one occasion he had thrown a hammer at a guard. He complained of having ill-health since, as the result of cold, and had suffered from buzzing in his ears.

Convict F 357 declared that convicts secured money in some "mysterious" way, as he put it, and with the money purchased tobacco from the guards.

Convict F 360, an inmate of the isolation ward, declared he had been given hose treatment with his clothes on, and that they were almost washed off. He was rendered unconscious on four different occasions while water was played on him. The convict, who is one of a western gang sent here over a year ago, swore he suffered pains around the heart, and that he had a scar on his left arm from treatment he received.

Dr. Phelan, prison surgeon, stated that the scar referred to by the convict was an old one.

When the prison reform committee resumed its session yesterday morning, Dr. Edwards, M.P., exploded the expected sensation by stating that since the last session one of the convicts, Ross, who gave evidence against Guard Frederic Ingledew, had confessed that his statement was untrue and that what he had said was "a frame up" between him and Overseer Wilson of the hospital. It was announced that this matter would be enquired into later and the committee then resumed its sessions enquiring into the conduct of Deputy Warden O'Leary.

BIG PROFITS IN FOOD.

Middlemen Get 39 Cents Out of Every Dollar Say Experts.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—It costs 39 cents to distribute one dollar's worth of food in this city. The bureau of food supply of the New York association for improving the condition of the poor has been conducting a cost of living enquiry and made public a report yesterday showing that 61 cents represents the cost of the food on its arrival at the terminal markets here, while the rest of the consumer's dollar is divided between wholesaler and retailer in the process of getting the food to the consumer's kitchen.

The remedy, the report asserts, is a reorganization of the food distribution system based on the result of careful experiments with the economic efficiency of various methods of retail distribution.

Standard Oil To Enter China.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—The Daily Telegraph's Pekin correspondent says that semi-official newspapers now announce what has privately been known for some time, namely, that the Standard Oil Co. is seeking comprehensive oil concessions around Jehol, in Northern Chihli, where borings are said to have already disclosed very rich petroleum deposits.

WILL ERECT MONUMENT.

U. S. Peace Committee Completes Plans For Centenary.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 5. — The American Committee having in charge the preparation of a program for the celebration next year of one hundred years of peace among English-speaking peoples concluded its work here yesterday after full discussion of the features which are to be of world-wide interest. The erection of an international monument around which Great Britain and the United States will pledge themselves to keep eternal peace was urged in a resolution adopted unanimously by the conference. The civic organizations, patriotic societies, schools, the nation and individuals were requested to co-operate in the proper observance of the centennial.

The following message, written by Oscar S. Straus of New York, was cabled to the British Committee:

"The American Committee for the Celebration of the One Hundred Years of Peace Among the English-speaking Peoples, now assembled at a national conference in Richmond, send greetings to their colleagues, the British Committee, and beg the Duke of Teck to convey to them and to the Committee of the Anglo-American Exhibition the assurance of our fullest co-operation in fittingly celebrating an event which shall at the same time betoken undying peace between our two nations and be a hopeful harbinger for the peace of the world."

Made Princely Gifts.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—John C. Schildnecht, the $19-a-week bookkeeper, who recently pleaded guilty to stealing more than $50,000 from the Washburn-Crosby Flour Co., his employers, was sentenced yesterday to Sing-Sing Prison for not less than two and one-half years or more than four years and eight months.

Schildnecht admitted on the witness stand that the greater portion of the money he stole was spent on young women, to whom he had given among other valuable presents, an automobile and $15,000 worth of jewelry.

Ten-Mile Tunnel Contract Is Let to Denver Firm.

DENVER, Col., Dec. 5.—A railroad contract for $8,000,000 has been let to the tunnel-driving firm of James A. McIlwee & Sons of Denver. They have agreed to drive ten miles of tunnel for the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia. Work will start Jan. 1, and must be completed within three years. A double-track bore five miles long will be driven under the Rogers' Pass, the pass at the summit of the Selkirks.

A smaller and parallel tunnel will be driven with crosscuts to the main survey at every 500 feet, and stations will be established from which headings will be run in either direction. In this manner the tunnel proper will shortly be driven from a dozen different directions.

The contract is said to be the largest tunnel job ever let in America. Construction camps costing $50,000 are now being erected at either portal.

PANIC POLITICS.

Liberal journals are, just now, "death on food taxes," which they say are the reason for the high cost of living. It is true that if you tax an article that article will cost more to the buyer than if it was not taxed. For that reason food is dearer (nominally) in Canada than it is in England. This is not a new situation, it has always been so, even under the divine Laurier dispensation. Furthermore, food at the present time is, comparatively, cheaper in Canada than in Great Britain.

We need not remind Liberal editors that the price of food is regulated by the wage of the worker, and the wage of the worker is regulated by the price of food. The present labor struggle in Great Britain is the direct result of the increase in the cost of living in the British Isles. Food, clothing and house-rental have all gone up, the wages of the worker have remained at practically the same rate as they were under early free-trade conditions when food and material were very cheap. This is not a normal state of things and until the masters increase the wages, or the cost of living is reduced, there will be no peace in the labor market of Great Britain.

The Toronto Star says: "The cheapness of food in Great Britain is a marvel." The Star does not know what it is talking about. The price of bread, according to an English-woman who was buying that necessary commodity in London a few weeks ago, is higher in London at present than it is in Peterborough, Ont. We are open to correction upon this point and if the Toronto Star can supply us with more authentic information we are anxious to be exact.

The prices of other commodities have been increasing for the last six years or more in England. Bacon, which was sold at twelve cents per pound only a few years ago, cannot be bought to-day in English cities for less than twenty cents. Pure butter is a luxury which the average British workingman and his family very rarely indulge in, margarine and dripping is what the wife of the worker spreads on bread. Meat is very little, if any, cheaper in England than it is in Peterborough.

Clothing is certainly very high in Canada and also house-rent. These two latter things are the chief factors in the high cost of living in Canada. Real estate men are taking advantage of the scarcity of houses in our growing cities, whenever a house goes empty, up goes the rent and the new-comer is only too glad to get under cover that he will take it at any price. This is not good business, even from the owners point of view, for while there are some who will deprive their stomachs to live in a good house, there are others who will let off parts of the house in order to divide the rent, with the result that the house and the neighborhood is often deteriorated.

This is one phase of the cost of living problem in Canada, which is overlooked. Food is not the only thing that is taxed, and the Government are not the only taxers. To make a thorough investigation of this subject it will need more than a mere party cry of "free food" that is mad political panic.

THE HINDU ON THE MOVE.

The present problem of Hindu immigration in British Columbia opens up a great vista of Imperial politics and gives a very distinct answer to certain Liberal journals, who a short time ago wanted to know what Canada had to do with India. It looks as if we were going to have a great deal to do with India and the Hindu, and it is to be greatly feared that we will have to consult with that terrible "Downing Street" on the matter.

The voluntary emigration of the inhabitants of India is an interesting development of the human race. If the Hindu wants to migrate, who is going to stop him? India is a vast country, but it has a vast population and the periodical famines which carry away mulitudes, are beginning to make the more westernized Hindu a little uneasy. Why greater objection should be raised against these people than against Chinese, who are at present very numerous in Canada, it is difficult to understand. Hindus are British subjects, Chinese are not. Hindus are a far more refined race of people than the Chinese, they are by no means to be classed with the negro or the American Indian.

South Africa has of late had some trouble with its Hindu immigrants, that warm climate is more suitable to the Oriental than North America, but the South Africans do not seem to have fallen in love with the despised Hindu. Nevertheless, the Hindu is on the move and he must go somewhere.

MEDICAL INSPECTION AND PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

There is a great deal to be said in favor of the adoption of a system of medical inspection of school children as explained and advocated by Dr. Struthers at the Collegiate hall on Wednesday evening. And while we do no believe the doctor must ever supplant the parent in the care and supervision of children, even in health matters, yet there is much that every parent can learn with the aid of medical science, and it is right that they should profit by the advantages of progress in this direction. But there is always danger in relieving a parent of responsibility, and it is to be feared that many of these modern "systems" have a tendency in that direction. Dr. Struthers himself told of a German inspector in Toronto who used to say: "My dear parents, I wish I could abolish you." This indicates the tendency of this movement and it is not a step in the right direction. To remove parental responsibility is to make irresponsible parents, and by their own precious law of eugenics these doctors are thus breeding a race of irresponsible children. The dogmatists of science are becomng as narrow and purblind and as tyrannical as any of those whom science has condemned in the church of the dark past.

Medical science can do a great deal, but if its object is to "abolish the parent," it is false to its own theories. It is striking at the very roots of the mental and physical calibre of future generations.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Westminster Gazette, the London Liberal journal, which throughout the Ulster controversy, has always advocated moderation and has urged a settlement by consent, has now come out boldly and is urging the Liberal Government to take action against Sir Edward Carson. It says:—"We cannot expect the situation to improve if the Government simply does nothing."

There is one consolation about the great enterprize of the Germans in building Dreadnoughts. If they continue building these expensive engines of destruction, simply for the fun of the thing, they will destroy themselves with the expenditure. But there is the possibility that they will have to attack somebody to recoup themselves for their excessive spending.

The Toronto Star has begun to illustrate its news items. It has a sketch of Mrs. Devlin disappearing down a man-hole in the act of pushing a baby carriage. This is an interesting innovation in reporting, reporters will now need the sketch-book or the kodak.

The Brooklyn Times says:—And now comes forward Dr. Allyn Gordon, of Park Slope, with the recommendation that persons addicted to the use of tobacco be forbidden by law to marry. Now, then, why should persons with bunions, bleached hair, or warts be allowed to marry? Why should bridge fiends or the bearer of neck whiskers be permitted to perpetuate their folly in their children? Why should incurable golf players be encouraged to bring forth offsprings to spread the disease through the length and breadth of the land? There can be only one answer. They should not. Who should be permitted to marry, did you ask? The question is entirely out of order.

(Yes, you can tell whether those girls with the debutante slouch are going or coming!?

PLUMS FROM THE PAPERS

CHARLES KINGSLEY'S PIPE

London Chronicle

Charles Kingsley was an enthusiastic devotee of the clay pipe and he was in the habit of keeping a supply of pipes concealed in the most unlikely places. A. C. Benson recalls a characteristic story. "My father," he writes, "used to tell how once he was walking with Kingsley round about Eversley, when Kingsley suddenly stopped and said: "It is no use; I know you detest tobacco, Benson but I must have a smoke and he had accordingly gone to a big furze bush and put his arm in a hole, and after some groping about, produced a big churchwarden pipe, which he filled and smoked with great satisfaction, afterwards putting it into a hollow tree, and telling my father, with a chuckle, that he had concealed pipes all over the parish, to meet the exigencies of a sudden desire to smoke."

DESERTED SCOTLAND.

Everyman, London.

The tide of emigration continues unabated. Thousands every week continue to leave London, Liverpool and Glasgow, for Canada and Australia. There is every indication that the year 1913 will beat every record in the recent history of emigration, and that before December 300,000 will have left these shores. And what is even more ominous than the quantity of the emigration is its quality. It is the young men, the enterprising and the energetic, that are leaving. It is the old men, the women and children that are left behind. Some of the most beautiful districts of Scotland are being depleted. Whole cities, like the old country town of Jedburgh, are left desolate, and houses are crumbling even in the main streets.

THE GUINEA STAMP

Mail and Empire.

Autograph letters by Robert Burns sold for more than letters from the Duke of Marlborough to George III. It was something like this that Burns had in mind when he spoke about "the rank is but the guinea's stamp."

A FIRELIGHT VISION.

An open grate, a friendly fire,
A book untouch'd, a silent lyre,
A woman, eyes a well of tears.
Hair softly silvered by the years.
A box of dry, long-withered flowers,
Recalling love and youthful hours.
She sees again his arms unfold,
To clasp her as in days of old.
She sees again the same rare smile,
That made her earth a Heaven the while.
The dying embers crackle low—
She rises, to his arms she'd go,
An open grate, a fading fire,
A book untouch'd, a silent lyre;
A woman's face, a tear-drop's stain,
On withered flowers alone remain.

—M. Aileen Ward.

WHAT OTHERS SAY

HINDU IMMIGRANTS.

(Montreal Gazette.)

The London Times, commenting on the troubles caused by the Hindu immigrants in South Africa, lays it down as a principle that in the dominions "every community has the right to select the material upon which its future depends, and Indians who claim free admission to all parts of the Empire in the name of British citizenship only prove their total lack of understanding of the principles on which that citizenship is based." This will be pleasing to the exclusionists, but it lowers the ethical value of British citizenship. The half-naturalized foreigner will have a fellow-feeling for the half recognized British born subject.

A CONTRIBUTION AND MORE!

(Vancouver News Advertiser.)

Premier McBride looked with every confidence for the next few months to disclose not only a substantial contribution, but also a further amount, which would show the world at large that Canada was prepared to go to the fullest extent; that she was part parcel of the Empire; and meant to stay with the Homeland for all time to come. His conviction was that the right and large plan for nationhood in Canada was to make her part and parcel of an Empire that the Dominion could soon be responsible for in fact. (Cheers.)

Still Smoking Him Out.

BINGHAM, Utah, Dec. 5.—It was decided by Sheriff Andrews Smith yesterday morning to continue for another 24 hours the smudges which were ignited in the Minnie mine on Monday in hope of driving Ralph Lopez from his hiding place as it has been learned several tunnels have not been reached by the poisonous gases. Lopez has now been a fugitive for two weeks and in that time has killed six men.

"OLD GLORY" SMITH

A Story of a Mexican Raid

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Never!" declared Ellen Bradley, with emphasis.

Mark Smith frowned impatiently. "But, Ellen, listen for a moment," he said.

"Never!" repeated Miss Bradley implacably.

"Then it's all off. You won't marry me, after all?" Mark moved toward the door of the adobe house.

"Never unless you get rid of that ridiculous nickname."

"How can I help it if my neighbors call me 'Old Glory' Smith?" demanded Mark heatedly. "It might be worse."

"Of course you can stop it," she retorted. "Just cease waving the stars and stripes every time you open your lips. I believe in being patriotic. You know I am proud of being an American and a Texan, but no one ever called my father by such a name, and you are a jest all along the border. Every Mexican"—

"That's enough, Ellen," interrupted Mark hoarsely. "I thought you understood the reason why, but I am mistaken. Perhaps you are right in sending me away. Goodby."

He disappeared down the path, and a moment later came the thudding sound of horse's hoofs as he rode away.

Ellen's father stirred from his seat on the veranda and spoke through the open window.

"I s'pose you know what you're about, Ellen, sending Mark off that way?"

"Of course I do, father," returned Ellen in a strained voice. "He is so sensational about his patriotism that if I married him every one would be calling me Mrs. 'Old Glory' Smith."

"Well, I reckon there's more dishonorable appellations than that. I suppose even your female brain has a glimmer of the reason why Mark has whooped up the stars and stripes all along the border, eh?"

"I don't see any special reason why he should make himself ridiculous in that manner. I'm patriotic, father, but"—

"Humph!" interrupted Mr. Bradley. "A lot you wimmen know about the meaning of such words. There's Smith. He's patriotic and democratic and politic, and when the varmints will let him he's pacific; but, above all, he's patriotic, and he advertises it loud and long, so that every greaser along the border will understand that there's one little settlement that won't stand for cattle stealing and incendiarism, and that's the little town of Yeager, U. S. A."

Mr. Bradley's chair came down with a thump, and Ellen heard the scratch of a match as her father relighted his pipe.

Within the cool dimness of the living room Ellen stood with lifted chin and stormy eyes.

That was always the way, she thought—her father invariably took sides with Mark Smith in the younger man's campaign of blazing enthusiasm, but now for the first time Ellen began to realize that there might be a reason for her lover's attitude.

But it was too late for repentance. Mark had gone for good.

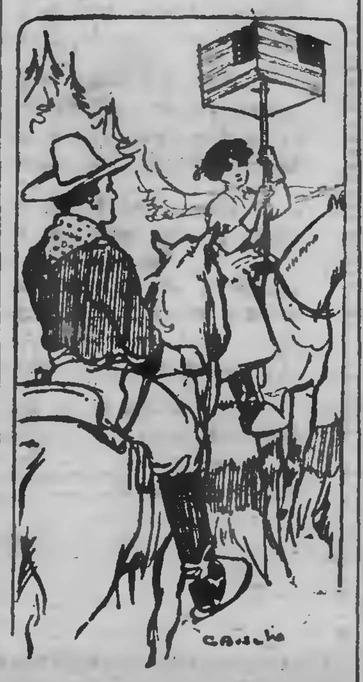
Out on the edge of the settlement Mark Smith stood in the doorway of his adobe ranch house and talked rapidly with the travel stained half breed who had tumbled wearily off his horse a moment before.

"You are sure, Manuel?" questioned Smith sharply.

"Sure, senor. I heard Vados himself—he was drunk with pulque—boasting that he would burn Yeager flat to the earth and bring back Senor Smith a prisoner to the Hacienda Vados before another day."

"They will not dare," laughed "Old Glory" Smith.

"No, senor; they would not dare if they were not wild with drink. Now they will dare anything."



SMITH RODE UP TO THE MOTIONLESS WHITE FIGURE.

"True, true," returned the American thoughtfully. "Get you to the kitchen, Manuel, and tell cook to give you something to eat and drink, and then you must go and rest. After you have eaten I will settle with you. You have earned your reward."

Manuel grinned appreciatively and led his tired horse around to the corral, while Mark Smith paced up and down the hard baked path before the door.

He had staved it off for months, but now it had come. Vados, the outlaw, had held his men with an iron hand, and not once had he permitted drunkenness to spoil his wild raids upon the peaceful settlements over the border. They came and went in the night like shadows. Vados knew his half savage followers, and he had not dared allow them liquor.

But now he had broken loose himself, and his men were quick to follow their leader.

What chance had law and order, even the emblem of a great government, in the face of madness? And these were nothing better now that they had had a taste of the pulque.

While Mark Smith acknowledged this, he set his jaw tight and, mounting his horse, rode from one to another of the outlying ranches, giving warning of the coming raid. He advised his neighbors to gather at his place.

His line was drawn closer as he neared the town, and at last there remained only one house, that of James Bradley.

Ellen's father was at the gate when Mark rode up.

"I've heard all about it. What's your plan, Mark?" he asked.

"Gather all the women and children at my place with an armed guard. I want the men to go with me to meet Vados and try to wipe him out before he does any damage. I've sent a couple of messengers to Arko to telegraph for assistance from El Paso."

"Good. I'll hitch up and bring my folks over. I hope you'll let me be on the skirmish line," added the old man wistfully.

"Suit yourself, but we need a steady head to hold the fort, you know," smiled Mark wearily.

Just at sunset the last of the fugitives rode through the gate of Mark Smith's ranch. It was a very martial sight that met their eyes, and it renewed courage in many a timid heart.

From every peak of the roof there was a standard from which waved the stars and stripes. Every window had its pole with fluttering flag, and even the stables were breaking out in patriotic colors. On either side of the gate was a tall pole, where two large flags waved protectingly over the refugees.

James Bradley and his wife had come over in a buckboard with some of their most precious belongings.

"Where is Ellen?" asked Smith as he assisted Mrs. Bradley to the ground.

Ellen's parents cast startled glances around.

"Why, isn't she here? She started off on her horse and said she would get here first."

"I'll fetch her," gritted Mark savagely, and, throwing himself on a horse, he tore away toward the town.

But in the deserted town there was no trace of Ellen Bradley. Mark found himself riding frantically in pursuit of the girl who had flouted him for a whim. At last he dashed toward the river and followed a fresh trail along the bank. Possibly Ellen was taking the longer way, but she must know it was a dangerous way today. Vados might be lying in ambush, waiting for the friendly night to cover his movements.

It was dark when he reached the river. Here a strange sight met his startled eyes.

This was the narrowest part, and it was here that the outlaws would cross if they were to reach Smith's ranch that night, as they had threatened. A narrow wooden bridge spanned the river.

A dark bulk of shadow resolved into a stationary horse and white clad rider. Above the rider there appeared to float in midair a large transparency with the stars and stripes painted vividly on four sides. Within the transparency there burned a light that threw the flags into strong relief.

Mark Smith had carried that transparency in the last political campaign. That was not all.

There was an ominous crackling, with the smell of burning wood. Suddenly the bridge burst into flames and disclosed on the opposite bank a paralyzed group of ruffians, Vados and his band. They stared at the motionless figure garbed in white upholding the glowing transparency, then at the burning bridge, and with one accord they turned and fled in drunken terror toward the hills. Another day would find their heads clearer and their courage renewed and they might return to Yeager, but by that time the troops would have arrived.

Now Smith rode up to the motionless white figure on the horse and found it to be Ellen Bradley.

She was crying with terror even while she bravely upheld the emblem of an indomitable country.

"My girl—my own girl!" cried Mark as he lifted her from the horse and held her, together with the pole of the transparency, tightly in his arms. The transparency waved triumphantly over them as he kissed her again and again.

"I wanted to be worthy of you and the name," sobbed Ellen on his shoulder. "If they must call me Mrs. 'Old Glory' Smith I want to be worthy of the name." She laughed weakly.

"They will think you brave enough to be called another Molly Pitcher," cried her lover warmly.

But the Yeagerites compromised by dubbing her "Miss Star Spangled Banner" until she actually became Mrs. "Old Glory" Smith.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Care of Children.

The baby's nourishment is the most important factor of its earlier life. Mother's milk is the ideal food for the child. We should go back to nature as much as possible and try not to use prepared food. Too many mothers follow the printed formulas for sicknesses of children. A physician should be consulted for the children's ills. Each case requires a different treatment.

The best children are those brought up in a happy frame of mind. The children should be taught to love their parents and not to fear them. The proper clothing of babies at night is a great factor in a child's life. A cold contracted during the early part of the life oftentimes develops into more serious disease when the child reaches its maturity.

All Settled.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1913, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,367 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 427 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto

RIBOT MAY ACCEPT.

French Ex-Premier Urged To Assume Power Again.

PARIS, Dec. 5. — The Ministerial crisis is a step nearer settlement today. President Poincare, after lengthy consultation yesterday with M. Caillaux, leader of the Radicals, Emile Almond, president of the finance committee of the Senate, and others, principally of the financial aspect of the situation, requested ex-Premier Felix Ribot to undertake the task of forming a composite Ministry acceptable to all groups of Republicans.

M. Ribot at first declined, pleading ill-health, but finally consented to consider the matter and give his answer to-day after he had consulted with his friends. Parliamentary circles, however, doubt that he will accept. In the event that he declines, it is probable that M. Doumergne, ex-Minister of Commerce, will be asked, as he is generally considered the most capable of forming the required type of Cabinet.

Help Salmon Over Falls.

An ingenious device which bids fair to be of immense value to the fishing industries of this country has been perfected by Prof. E. E. Prince, commissioner of Canadian fisheries. Its purpose is to bring salmon up the rivers to spawn by assisting them over otherwise insurmountable falls and power dams.

The device is in the form of a series of baskets or cradles which lift the fish from the end of a lead, which is built in the bed of the river and up which the fish come, and place them in the waters above the falls or dams. The natural water-power is used to work the cradles after the method of an old-fashioned mill. The device was used successfully last year on the St. Croix river, New Brunswick, and will be installed next year on a number of rivers throughout the country.

Performers Made Big Hit With Capacity Audience at Y.M.C.A. Gym

Over 450 people thronged the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium last evening for the annual Hayseed Carnival, held under the auspices of the Physical Department.

The various stunts and unique characters with their clever makeups, made Barnum & Bailey's circus look like a side show.

The arrival of the notable characters of Pumpkin Centre and Squash Meadow viz: Mutt and Jeff, the Suffragettes, Hiram, the cop, and Wm. Last was a side splitter.

Frank Pidgeon as Mutt and Everest Heath as Jeff, were the hit of the evening, and Jeff pulled off some of the real stuff. One of the features of the evening's program was the work on the bars of Mr. Hans, late of Sweden, who is a new arrival in the city. His work was spectacular and drew continued applause from the audience. Fun on the rafters was also one of the amusing performances. The senior leaders' corps pulled off some exceptionally good work on the fence rails.

Considerable talent was brought to light in the debut of the Pumpkin Centre Mandolin Club. The club is composed of Messrs. Guy Quartermaine, C. Cranfield, H. Cranfield, W. Irwin, J. Foster, and C. Bartlett.

Every attention was given to the boxers in the two round bout between Jeff and George Washington White, better known as Manley Peever. The round started with Father Hayseed Thompson holding the can, when suddenly the lights went out, and a crash brought the gathering to their feet as a six foot form toppled to the floor and lay still while the referee counted nine. The victorious Jeff was carried from the ring while his opponent was dragged out.

The horizontal bar work by the boys was very clever. The carnival will be repeated tonight.

HANNA IS BACKED BY GOVERNMENT

He is the Regularly Nominated Candidate for the Election

OTTAWA, Dec. 5.—The somewhat confused state of the political pool in South Lanark, where two Conservative candidates are running against each other, has been somewhat clarified by the announcement last night that the Government will stand behind Dr. Hanna, the convention candidate, who was in Ottawa to-day in consultation.

No formal statement to this effect has been made, but it was given out to-day that Hon. W. T. White and Col. Sam Hughes, Ministers of Finance and of Militia respectively, will address meetings in Dr. Hanna's favor, which places the mantle of Governmental approval upon that candidate's shoulders.

The first gathering the Ministers will address will be one at Smith's Falls on Monday evening next, the first after nominations on Saturday. They will speak at another meeting to be held later in Perth, while other members of the Cabinet will also take the field in Dr. Hanna's favor.

The Government is supporting Dr. Hanna as the regularly nominated candidate of the convention. No intervention was attempted until now, as it was desired to let South Lanark settle its own domestic troubles if possible, but as the breach is still open it was decided to take a hand. The election is to be held on the 13th. Dr. Hanna's opponent is Col. Balderson, of Perth.

WILL NOT TAKE ON BOURASSA

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 4.—Right Rev. Bishop Fallon, head of the Roman Catholic diocese of London, refuses to enter into any controversy with Henri Bourassa, the Nationalist leader of Quebec, over the widely divergent doctrine as to Canada's future that were preached by them at the annual St. Andrew's Society banquet last Friday night. This morning he refused to discuss the editorial of Mr. Bourassa in Tuesday's edition of Le Devoir, the Nationalist editor therein sharply criticizing Father Fallon for his speech. Bishop Fallon admitted reading the editorial but declined absolutely to say anything concerning it. "I have nothing to say whatever," was the statement to the Canadian Press correspondent.

THIS YOUTHFUL HUNTER BEARS CHARMED LIFE

WOODSTOCK, Dec. 4.—While out shooting with a friend, Louis McCurdy, a farmer's son, got in front of his friend's shot gun which went off.

The shots all lodged in the game bag on his back and he was unscathed.

This is his third escape of the kind.

Fire Statistics

The fire statistics for the month of November gives 11 fires with a total loss of $1400. There were many chimney fires. The damage was very low with the exception of the fire at Akey's livery.

In the same month last year the city was visited by 12 fires and the damage amounted to $1,240.

GILLESPIE
FOR MAYOR

To the Electors of the City of Peterboro

Ladies and Gentlemen— At the urgent solicitation of many of my business and personal friends, I have consented to become a candidate for the position of Mayor of your City, and respectfully solicit your votes and influence.

As in the past, I shall not make any rash promises to gain the vote of any elector, but, if elected, my attitude on every question will be to stand firm for the best interests of our Progressive City.

Having been interested in Peterborough all my life, and one of your aldermen for five years, I may fairly claim to be in close touch with every section and every interest of the municipality, and familiar with its needs and ambitions.

I believe that in all respects the will of the people should prevail; that a vigorous but economical administration is the best administration, and that if your Chief Magistrate is able to devote a fair proportion of his time to his civic duties, it will not be to your disadvantage if he brings with him the experience and energy he displays in the conduct of a large and successful business of his own.

If my success in the Council during the past five years has in the main met with your approval, I shall esteem it an honour to have your further approval and support in the coming contest.

Yours respectfully,

G. A. GILLESPIE

Cheap Hotels Should Go.

BOSTON, Dec. 5.—"Every one of those places should be closed in their entirety," declared Mayor Fitzgerald after he had completed early yesterday a tour of several hours among the cheap lodging houses in various sections of the city conducted along the lines of the Arcadia, where 28 men were killed in Wednesday morning's fire.

"The conditions," continued the mayor, "are shameful. It is the duty of society to care for these unfortunates who are forced to seek such places for their lodging."

Kaiser Favors Moustache.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—A cable from Berlin to The American says: "Every real man wears a moustache," is said to be the Kaiser's remark on a subject of the newest fad of Germans, both officers and civilians, to shave their faces smooth.

ENTERTAINED AT THE SOUTH HOUSE

The "Loyalty Club" and the young ladies of the South Y.W.C.A. were the guests of Mrs. R. R. Hall last evening, at the "South House," which was decorated for the occasion. About twenty-five young ladies were present and spent a most delightful evening in playing games of different kinds, for which very pretty prizes were given. Among the winners were Miss Nellie Ashton, Miss Mary Fortune, Miss Ella Green and Miss Alice Wright.

A delicious supper was served later, after which the girls very unwillingly wended their way home, voting Mrs. Hall a royal hostess and that never had they spent such an enjoyable evening. Mrs. Hall was ably assisted by Mrs. Goodwill and the Secretaries of the Y.W.C.A.

Money talks but there's no use to being deaf to everything else.

IS CHARGED WITH RECEIVING

Davis A. Hill, a brother of Wm. Hill, who was arrested on Wednesday night on the charge of theft of a fur coat, the property of Howard McGowan, was arrested yesterday afternoon on the charge of receiving stolen goods. He appeared in court this morning and was remanded for a week.

Yesterday afternoon High County Constable Cochrane, Constable Meagher and Detective Newhall went out to the prisoners' home and found two coats. One of the coats found, it is said, was the coat belonging to McGowan.

LIBRARY BOARD

The Public Library Board met in regular session last evening with Chairman W. G. Morrow, presiding, and Messrs. E.H.D. Hall, A. Mowat, F. Sollitt, J. Corkery, H. Ritchie, H. R. H. Kenner and Dr. McNulty present.

Mr. Ritchie, chairman of the Library Committee, reported that since the last meeting about $100 worth of books had been purchased, the most important being the musical dictionary.

The report of Mr. Hall of the Finance Committee recommending the payment of a number of accounts, was adopted.

FORMAL OPENING NEW DEPARTMENTS

The citizens of Peterboro made a very hearty response to the invitation of the Cressman Company Limited, to visit the formal opening of the furniture and fancy goods' departments.

The big store was appropriately decorated for the occasion. The Grand Opera House orchestra under Mr. Howarth, supplied music, and altogether the evening was made both interesting and pleasant to hundreds of people.

There was a very large exhibit of furniture on the third and fourth floors and the many and varied suites were much admired and inspected. The prices are strictly department store prices.

On the first floor, Miss Shirley Wesley was at home in the fancy goods' department, and much attention was given by callers to the displays. It might be added that in connection with this department, Miss Wesley gives free lessons in working fancy articles.

THREE SCOTS MUST KEEP TRAVELLING

Three men claiming Port McNicol as last place of abode, appeared in Police Court this morning on the charge of vagrancy. They gave their names as Roderick McLeod, seven years out from Scotland, Sam Campbell, six years out from Belfast, and Patrick Cologne also of Scotland. They pleaded not guilty. The men admitted coming from Port McNicol in the passenger train but denied stealing a ride.

"Well, we want men in this country to marry and settle down and populate the country instead of running around like these men," remarked Magistrate Dumble. "There are thousands of people who have come to Canada and made good on a dollar a day, while these men cannot live on double pay," continued His Worship, on learning that the men had made good money.

They were told to get out of the city, with the well known saying of the Magistrate that if they ever appeared here again he would send them to Central for six months.

WHY THE HEBREWS REMAINED FORTY YEARS IN WILDERNESS

Mr. Frank Merrett Gives an Interesting Address to the Oddfellows

The first of the series of open meetings held by the Oddfellows last evening was greeted by a very large attendance. The usual accommodation was taken up and in an effort to seat the many visitors it was found necessary to place seats in the aisles and at the rear.

The meeting opened by an address by the chairman, Mr. E. Dormer, and it centred on explaining Frank Merritt, a delightful musical are to be held every month and they will be marked by an address by one of the members on the art of public speaking.

MR. MERRITT'S ADDRESS.

The subject for our consideration tonight, said Mr. Merrett, is "why did the Hebrews wander to and fro in the wilderness for forty years instead of marching directly across it to the land of promise." It could easily have been crossed in a month or so.

The study of this subject impresses upon us the great truth that human nature is and always has been the same the world over, and also that it is moved by the same hopes and fears at all times under similar circumstances.

Before entering into the question, let us for a moment or two look into the surroundings. You will remember the residence of the Hebrews in Egypt began with the sale of Joseph by his brethren. Joseph experienced a little trouble at first, but he soon won the favor of King Osirtesen the Second. Joseph was made prime minister of Egypt and it was during his time that the great famine occurred. Joseph, warned by the Lord, stored away great quantities of grain. This he did year by year until he had enough on hand with which to feed the whole nation for years. The famine came and the wisdom of Joseph's course under Divine guidance became apparent. Joseph, while feeding the people, took advantage of this occasion to greatly strengthen the government. "You will remember at the time," said the speaker "that the Egyptian people largely owned their own farms, growing on the delta their grain and produce. Just how the famine was caused we have no means of knowing. The land was chiefly watered then, and is still watered now, simply by the river Nile overflowing it's banks. So regularly do the waters of the Nile overflow, that the time of the year can be accurately told simply by measuring the height of the water in the river.

The Crops Failed.

When the crops of the Egyptians failed, the people came to the government for food. At this time Joseph put in force the plan he had been maturing. When the people's money became exhausted, he compelled them to exchange their lands for food and when the famine had ended the King not only reigned over the land, but also the titles of their property were vested in himself.

Thereafter the people rented the land from the government as arranged by Joseph. When Joseph's brethren came to Egypt they were kindly treated and made much of, for Joseph, their brother, was high in command. This happy condition of affairs continued for quite a long time. But a change came. As the Bible very poetically expresses it, "there arose another pharaoh who knew not Joseph." The meaning of this saying is there has been a war in Egypt. The Hebrews very naturally had fought on the side of the government that had cared for them so well. The tide of war went against them and the dark cloud of despair enshrouded them in its somber hues.

Hebrews Became Slaves.

The Hebrews instead of being the favored guests of an indulgent government, became the slaves of a haughty king. Even at this early period the influence began to be felt that was to detain them in the wilderness for forty years, instead of for four weeks. The Hebrews soqourned in Egypt for a period exceeding 400 years and during the greater part of that time, they endured slavery of increasing hardship, the slavery that melted their manhood from generation to generation. Their fear of their oppressors steadily grew stronger as their moral fibre grew weaker, until their manlines and hope had almost sank to the vanishing point. In all that nation of slaves, there was not a man in whose soul the fires of independence and high enterprise dwelt. Their spirits were quenched in hopeles drudgery.

The Lord cannot do anything with a spineless man. There must be activity and action. The man who is neither hot or cold can only be cast aside as dross. Just at this time when all seemed to be lost, when despair seemed to have darkened all hope, a man arose—a man who had never felt that benumbing influence of slavery, who had been educated in the learning of that age, had been trained to command, and had been associated with the leaders of men, a man who had led the armies of Egypt to victory against a hitherto victorious foe. Such was Moses, but he had a very discouraging task before him. He was the leader of an inert people—a nation of men who had become child-like in their ideas, all clinging to him for guidance, support and management. Amenophis Nanetho, was king of Egypt at this time. At the time of which we speak, at the north of the Red Sea, there were wide shallow lakes of water. It is the opinion that the Hebrews crossed at this point.

Wanted to Return.

In due time Moses led all his people through Egypt. The Hebrews were pursued by the Egyptians. They found themselves with deep water in front of them. The mountains around them and the Egyptians in command of the passes. Like the cowed slaves that they were there was no thought of dying at their posts in defence of their liberty. Fearful of the encounter with their enemies, they cringingly cried out "O let us go back to the yoke of our masters, lest they harm us."

It is only a miracle that can save cowardly people, while a nation of noble souls can accomplish miracles. The Lord has a high place for the descendants of these people. But even the Lord himself will not do anything with a spiritless nation. The Hebrews so long under the lash of their taskmasters, had become impossible as a self-sustaining and a conquering nation.

The Lord fed them, protected them and led them hither and thither throughout the wilderness. By the might of his power he protected these people who were almost afraid of their own shadows and were unable to care for themselves. They were not fit and capable people to fight for and possess the Land of Promise. The men who came out of Egypt died in the wilderness. The children of these men had a dim memory of their bondage and to a certain extent had inherited some of their dependant nature. These were also allowed to grow to old ag ein the wilderness. The next generation knew nought of slavery.

A New Generation.

In their minds, there was not the slightest trace of subserviency. They had been disciplined in the stern school of the desert. But these people were fierce and intractable, overbearing too, at times, but they were real men—men whose souls were manned with high resolve. They were men whom the Lord could use and whom He did use to accomplish many wonderful things. These were men of action. They were men of fearless thought. They crossed the river Jordan under the leadership of Joshua. It cannot be said of these people that they ever waited to count the number of their enemies.

When their general gave the order to advance, so impetuous was their charge, their enemies sought to flee before them. For these lion-hearted men the ordinary day was all too short. They prayed not for darkness to hide them, not for any to help them. But they did pray to the Lord that the light of the day would be maintained until they had completed the overthrow of the enemies of the Lord.

The mainspring of successful effort is found in the combination of knowledge, energy and courage. The lack of these kept the Hebrews out of their inheritance for forty years. Motion and force moves the universe and if each of us cultivates these attributes, our lodge will surely accomplish wonderful things.

In addition to the address by Mr. Frank Merrett, a delightful musical program was given, the participants being: Grand Opera House Orchestra, Mrs. E. Dormer, pianist; Mr. W. F. Skitch, vocalist; Mr. W. H. Barrie, pianist, and Mr. W. McLaren, who favored the gathering with two recitations. All the numbers were heartily applauded and at the close of the meeting all who took part were tendered a vote of thanks, which was moved by Mr. D. H. Moore, and seconded by Mr. D. Young.

The speaker at the January meeting will be Mr. W. H. Barrie, and his subject "Architecture."

JUVENILE COURT AND REPORTERS

Montreal Court Banishes the Scribes From Trails of Youthful Offenders

Montreal, Dec. 5.—No longer will the subtle reporter be allowed to stretch his form on one of the chairs in Juvenile Court and drink in the tales of childish horror confided to the judge by sorrowing parents and relatives.

After retiring from the bench to one of the inner catacombs of the children's court house for a few minutes yesterday, Judge Choquet returned and informed the scribes that he had been in conference with provincial inspectors. Hereafter he declared the court would follow the system in vogue in American courts for the children. The reporters would not be allowed to listen while cases were going on, but might call around afterwards and learn from the clerk or from the judge anything that was thought by the court to be worth publishing.'

With that, the journalistic representatives were banished and the little court room was closed to the public.

One case of children who were told by their parents to go out and take coal off the railroad tracks was heard by the judge. The parents in this case were severely censured for teaching their youngsters to steal. children themselves were remanded until next Wednesday.

HINDU STUDENTS IN ENGLAND

Over Seven Hundred at British Colleges

In view of the Hindu troubles in Natal the annual report of the Indian Students' Department just issued in London is of rather special interest. Few people are cognizant of the fact that a special government exists charged with helping Indian students coming to England for their education. It is estimated that there are between 1600 and 1700 such students in the United Kingdom, of whom 700 are members of the Inns of Court, 100 divided among the University of King's College, the City Guilds, and Central Technical College; 48 in the London Medical schools, 183 at Oxford and Cambridge, 300 at Edinburgh, 40 at Manchester, 12 at Birmingham, and 13 at Leeds. It is stated that the majority of these students do credit to their training and are convinced that similar educational facilities as they receive should be obtainable in India. Signs of race and color prejudice have not been shown anywhere except among the Edinborough students, and there it is discouraged by the authorities.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

At the Spelling School

Three Simple Words About Which He Needed Prompting.

By CAROLINE SPENCER.

Burt Seymour, son of Farmer Seymour, had given a "sugaring off" party in the sap bush, and his invited guests numbered a dozen of the young men and girls of the neighborhood. Such parties are always given with the last run of maple sap and are simple affairs. The guests all gather at the sugar bush, where the sweet sap has already been boiled down to thick sirup, and seat themselves on a log while the sirup is boiled a little more and then served around on clean maple chips. There is snow yet left in the woods, and a dab of sirup dropped on the snow produces maple wax. There is a general stickiness, a general state of hilarity, and the girls go home with wet feet and the young men with wax on their chins.

In one sense this party referred to was a great success. In another it was a calamity. A sewing machine agent had been stopping at Farmer Haliday's for the last two weeks while he beat up the country. He happened to be a young man and a taking fellow, but there was no earthly reason for Burt Seymour to be jealous of him. Eunice Haliday and Burt had been engaged for three or four months, and while she was naturally flattered at the compliments paid to her by the agent, whose name was French, they didn't turn her head by any means. She saw from the first that Burt was inclined to be jealous, and she was therefore more circumspect, but Burt's jealousy still rankled. He took good care that the stranger shouldn't be invited to the sugar party, to which Eunice was duly escorted by the host, but cheek is a part of the stock in trade of agents of all sorts, and no one was greatly surprised when Mr. French showed up as cool as a snow bank and took the biggest chip in the collection.

As old Aunt Martha used to say, all girls that amount to anything have a spice of deviltry in their nature. Be they ever so sweet and nice, there are times when they like to hector. When Eunice saw, with all the others, that the coming of the agent annoyed her lover and that Mr. French was inclined to put himself out in another and more agreeable way to make things a success she came as near flirting with him as she could and miss it. The harder Burt scowled and the more he showed his vexation the more reckless she became. She didn't intend to go too far, but just far enough to punish him. He would be sullen and sulky going home, but she would make up with him before they reached the gate—that is, she thought it would be that way, but she was mistaken. Burt referred to the agent as a "snide" and several other things, and, although she only defended mildly, it was sufficient to keep his temper hot. He announced that he had been disappointed in her; that there was no such thing as loyalty known to her sex; that a few compliments from a "masher" were valued by her more than his enduring love, and when the gate was reached she announced that she wouldn't submit to be browbeaten, and he flourished his arm in reply and exclaimed:

"Farewell, false girl! I have loved you as no man ever loved before, but you have let a fool part us. I may die of a broken heart or commit suicide, but 'twill not matter to you. You will have simply broken one more human heart—shattered the faith of another man in woman's integrity."

Of course Eunice went into the house prepared to brave it out, but it wasn't fifteen minutes before her mother suspected that something had transpired and whisked her into the family bedroom to say:

"Now, then, has that Hattie Jones been saying mean things about you again?"

"No, ma," replied the daughter as she burst into sobs.

By and by all the details were in the mother's possession. The girl did not deny that she had flirted a bit, but she had not really meant anything serious. She was deeply in love with Burt Seymour and as she thought of his dying of sunstroke and going to his grave believing she cared for any other man, no matter how many sewing machines he could sell in a week, it almost broke her heart.

"Well, now, stop crying while I talk to you," said the mother. "You should not have flirted, and Burt should not have made a fool of himself. He's gone away to chew the rag, as your cousin Ben puts it. He thinks he'll get a letter from you in a day or two asking his forgiveness. Then he'll take a week before coming around and condescending to make up. First and foremost, you are not to write him a line. Second and hindmost, he's got to come to you if there is any coming about it. Your father was just another such idiot when he was running after me, and I made him crawl. That's why I have always had the whip hand of him."

"But you know how set Burt is in his ways," pleaded Eunice.

"But you can be just as set in yours."

"But suppose he's found dead with my photo on his broken heart."

"Suppose our old dog should bark his tail off! You are going to do just as I say, and that ends it. I'm your mother, and I know something about men, and if I don't help you to bring that smart young man back within two weeks I'll never darn another pair of socks for your father."

One event invariably follows the other in the country. After the sugar party, about two weeks after, comes the last day of the district school, or the close of the term. Word goes out for ten miles around, and the 200 young and old who attend manage somehow to get into the schoolhouse. Then two persons choose sides, and the whole crowd lines up, and the schoolmaster pronounces the words. The spelling school for the Seymour district was announced for a date two weeks subsequent to the sugar party and the lovers' quarrel. No Burt called at the Holiday farmhouse to make up. The days passed, and poor Eunice went about with tears in her eyes. Even her father noticed that the daughter was looking red eyed and pale faced and asked the wife if a doctor had not better be consulted.

"Don't you worry, Joseph," was all the reply he got, and about all he expected, but to the daughter the mother said:

"Eunice, when the spelling school comes off I am going to bring that young man to the mark. He is one of the best spellers around here, isn't he?"

"Yes, ma."

"Well, so are you. Some folks say you are better than he is. If you are on one side and he on the other, you are going to beat him."

"But suppose I can't."

"I'm just going to pray that you will."

"Then he'll be madder yet. Maybe he'll go right home and commit suicide."

"And maybe he'll go right home and get some sense in his head. I'm running this show, and I want you to do just as I tell you."

There was the usual big turnout when the evening came. The sewing machine agent had departed for other fields, and Eunice arrived at the schoolhouse in the company of her father and mother. Almost immediately she heard that Burt Seymour had come alone with his horse and buggy. She also heard that their misunderstanding was being gossiped about. The schoolmaster was well known to the Halidays, and a few whispered words from Mrs. Haliday perfected her plans. It was announced that Mr. Burt Seymour and Miss Eunice Haliday would choose sides, and they found themselves at once the center of interest. Each sought to decline, but each was pushed forward. Each line when filled numbered eighty, and then the spelling began. The first five minutes did the business for twenty.

In a quarter of an hour there were only ten spellers on their feet. Five minutes later Eunice and Burt alone were left. They stood facing each other, though not looking into each other's eyes. Burt looked obstinate, and the girl had her chin in the air. It was called the greatest contest of the decade. For twenty minutes the teacher hunted out the hard words, but could trip neither. Then Burt was caught and went down, and the victory was awarded the girl amid cheers. Five minutes later the crowd broke up, and Eunice was hunting for her wraps when a hand was laid on her arm and a voice whispered:

"Euny, how do you spell 'idiot,' 'forgive' and 'love'?"

"The simplest way," she replied as she turned to Burt.

"Then ride home with me. I brought my buggy on purpose."

"Of course it worked," said Mrs. Haliday that night to herself after making a cackling noise in her throat. "If it had been left to Eunice, now—but it wasn't. When a smart young man thinks he's smarter than an old married woman it's time he was spelled down a few and made to take a back seat."

I don't see why the fashion books print styles for middle-aged women, for any female we know who confesses to such years has renounced the fashion.

TEST YOUR BAROMETER.

Air or Moisture in the Tube Will Render It Unreliable.

Don't expect a barometer to tell you the truth about the weather until you have tested it thoroughly. Two common causes for unreliability are air and water mixed with the mercury in the tube. These can be expelled by boiling the mercury.

In order to test a barometer let it hang for a time in the proper position; then gently and with care incline it so that the mercury may strike against the glass tube. If there is no air with in you will hear a sharp metallic click, but if the sound is dull and muffled it indicates the presence of both air and moisture. The presence of air alone is shown by minute bubbles.

If at any time the mercury seems to adhere to the tube, even in the slightest degree, and the convex surface assumes a more flattened form it is safe to conclude that either air or moisture is present. In any of these cases the instrument should be put into expert hands for rectification.

There are several kinds of barometers. The ordinary "weather glass" in common use is more or less unreliable and is easily made more so by careless handling. In fact, any barometer must be treated with great respect in order to retain its usefulness.

"BACK TO THE FARM."

What's the message he's penning with might and with main?
Ah, the slogan is, "Back to the Farm!"
And he writes of the orchard and leaf laden lane
In language with magic and charm.
"Oh, the life that is simple all ailments will cure,
Far away from the asphalt's alarm,
Where the air is like incense and water is pure!"
Runs the ballad of "Back to the Farm."

And the scribe is well versed on his pet apothegm,
For he first saw the light on the farm,
And many's the morn at four-thirty a. m.
That he hopped from a bed that was warm.
So his heart's in his song (though it savors of salve),
For he hopes he may sell it for pelf
To buy him a meal check, so he will not have
To go back to the farm himself.

—John W. Carey in Judge.

Patience.

Success is not a thing to be Attained by idle wishing.
The largest fishes in the sea
Are caught by patient fishing.

The greatest books were only done
By years of patient writing.
The greatest battles ever won
Were won by patient fighting.

And so, whatever hill you'd climb
Or what ideal you're hugging,
Remember you must wait your time
And patiently keep plugging.

Views of both sides of the million bushel C.P.R. Concrete Grain Elevator at Transcona, Man., which recently settled on its foundations and now stands intact at an angle of 30 degrees.

Concrete Withstands The Severest Tests—

IN the San Francisco earthquake and the Ohio floods, concrete structures withstood the terrific tests of fire, water and vibration without damage.

Now, right in our very midst, comes a striking illustration of concrete's enormous power of resistance and durability.

This great concrete structure, built only to resist the pressure of grain from the inside, while filled almost to capacity with 55,000,000 pounds, or 27,500 tons of grain, has settled to an angle of 30 degrees from its original perpendicular position.

In the settling the walls were subjected not only to the terrific twisting strain of their own weight, but to the weight of thousands of tons of grain as well.

This structure still stands intact and examinations have failed to discover the slightest evidence of collapse.

Not One Dollar of Loss To Owners of Grain

THIS illustration of the ability of concrete to withstand the severest test, contains an important lesson not only for the farmer, but for business men, contractors, engineers and architects.

Think of the irreparable loss to the owners of the grain, had this elevator been built of some destructible material—a material that would have collapsed almost as soon as the settling commenced, and which would have entailed not only the loss of the building, but almost a total loss of its contents.

We have published a number of books which contain the most complete information and beautiful illustrations of almost every use of Concrete (City and Farm Buildings, Roads and Pavements) for the farmer, builder, businessman, manufacturer and everyone interested in a material of such permanence and economy.

These books are free and you may have a copy for the asking—simply state what object you are interested in, on a post card, and send to

TERRIBLE SHAG'S SPECIALTY IS TURNING OUT CHAMPS

Something About the Man Who Growled at Riverside Park

Who is this fellow Shaughnessy that we read so much about these days? Its Shaughnessy says this and Shag says that. The denizens of sportdom in this city know him as a grouch on the diamond. His players say he is a fine fellow. He won the pennant for the Capital city after starting away like an also ran. Then he took a breathing spell, bought a ticket to take him to the next important stopping place and proceeded to win another championship, this time on the gridiron.

Frank Shaughnessy, better known as "Shag," for the past two years coach of the McGill senior football team, has had a rather eventful life. He holds degrees in law and pharmacy and has practised both these professions in the United States, but prefers athletics to either. He owns a large share of the Ottawa Baseball Club, of which he is manager and coach. The Ottawa baseball team have been champions of the Canadian League for the past two years. He played football at Notre Dame University in the Southern States for four years. He started coaching shortly after leaving Clemson College, South Carolina, and coached the team there for two years. Following this, he coached Washington and Lee University, in Lexington, Virginia. He dropped coaching after two years at the latter institution, and a year later came to McGill. This was in 1912. Shaughnessy played baseball on the Washington and Philadelphia American League teams, on the San Francisco team in the Pacific Coast League, Montgomery in the Southern League, and Reading in the States. He managed the last four years at Roanoke, Virginia; Fort Weyne, Indiana; and Ottawa, and has won four pennants for the teams he coached.

LIKE THE IDEA OF POST SERIES WITH LOCAL TEAM

Lindsay, Dec. 5.— The idea of a post series with the winner of the Peterborough City League (say three games out of five) was favorably received at the meeting of the Town Hockey League, and will be fully discussed at the meeting December 11th. Last year the first Town League game was played January 30th, but a much earlier start is looked for this season.

The election of officers resulted as follows:—A. M. Paton, President; D. G. Mitchell, Treasurer; Ford W. Moynes, Secretary.

Mr Leclare, proprietor of the Federal Hotel, Ottawa, has offered a solid silver trophy of $300 value to be awarded next season to the best all round player in the Canadian League.

SEVEN TEAMS REPRESENTED AT HOCKEY LEAGUE MEETING

The call for a meeting in the interests of a Junior City Hockey League was responded to by representatives from the following teams; Alerts, Arrows, Exploits, Reserves, Y.M.C.A., Collegiate and Wanderers. The meeting was held in the Boston Cafe.

Owing to the uncertainty as to the rates for the use of the rink the meeting could make very little progress. A committee comprising a member from every team will wait upon the rink management tonight and enquire as to cost of rink, etc. This committee will report at the next meeting which will be held next week.

The only resolution passed was naming the age limit. All players must be under twenty years of age on January 1.

MATTHEWS-LAING DONATE CUP FOR LINDSAY BONSPIEL

Curlers in Lindsay and outside points will be interested in knowing that still another cup has been received for the big bonspiel to be held in Lindsay on January 13th, the Matthews-Laing, of Peterboro, having generously stated their wish to help along the big event. The offer was accepted at a meeting of the Club yesterday afternoon, and will go as a trophy in the consolation event.

President F. J. Carew has also donated a handsome cup for the 'Spiel, to be known as the Carew Cup. It will be placed as a trophy in the Grand Aggregate event, and although always remaining the property of the Lindsay Curling Club, will be held by the winner until challenged by some other club.

SPORTING NOTES

Roy Schuyler, the elongated twirler with Guelph last season, is anxious for a trial with Ottawa and claims with a real ball club he can rank in the first flight of pitchers in the Canadian League. Shaughnessy believes "Rube" is pretty good mound timber and has written terms.

Shortstop Al Teach, now under contract with Ottawa, writes from Jersey City he will be on hand at spring training.

MONTREAL, Dec. 5.—The city of Montreal made a profit of more than $12,000 when lots recently expropriated were put up at auction. The land was needed for street extensions, and for it the city paid $99,026. The property needed for the streets was retained, and the city sold the rest yesterday for $112,116.

BOWSER IS SAD.

Tells His Spouse That Things Are Not Homelike.

BUYS A PIG FOR COMPANY.

But the Animal Is Lonely, and His Evident Sorrow Is Apparent In Grunts and Squeals — Experiment Ends Quickly.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.]

INSTEAD of reading the evening paper and smoking his cigar when he came up from dinner Mr. Bowser began walking around like a caged wolf, and the longer he walked the sadder grew his expression. Mrs. Bowser knew that there was a kick coming, but she waited for it instead of hurrying it up. When Mr. Bowser realized that she wasn't going to sympathetically ask him if she should telephone for the family doctor he sat down with a great bang and exclaimed:

"Well, by thunder!"

"Is it worse?" asked Mrs. Bowser.

"Worse? Is what worse?"

"Your rheumatism."

"Rheumatism be hanged! I haven't had a touch of it in ten years!"

"Come to look at you, I think I see a lonesome expression around your mouth."

"You bet you do! I'm a lonesome man from head to heels."

"Then why don't you go off to a club this evening?"

"Club be hanged!"

"Or we will go to a theater."

"Theater be hanged!"

Cause For Lonesomeness.

"There must be a cause for your lonesome feeling."

"There is, and I'm going to state it. Mrs. Bowser, do you claim that this is a home?"

"Most certainly," she replied.

"Well, I don't. It's a sort of stopping place."

"You talk very funny for the man who has made the home what it is."

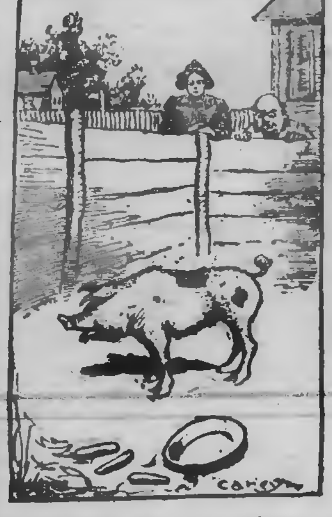
"I'm not blaming you in the least. It has been my fault."

"But what is the fault?" asked Mrs. Bowser.

"I have neglected to surround us with the homelike things of a home."

"You mean—mean"—

"Look at that old yaller cat! Durn her hide, she's the only homelike thing around here, and I want to kill her every few days."



"THE TROUBLE WITH THAT PIG IS LONESOMENESS."

"Oh, I see. You think we ought to have a parrot, a canary, a dog, a cricket on the hearth, a cow and those things?"

"Not all of 'em."

"Do you want a rooster that will crow all night to assure you that you've got a home?"

"Of course not."

"Or a cow that will give you a kick every day or two?"

"No."

"Or a goat that will eat up the Monday wash?"

He Feared Objection.

Mr. Bowser didn't answer for a long time. Then he said:

"Just what I want you'll object to."

"I don't think so. What is it?"

"A pig in the pen. I want to feed him. I want to see him grow. I want to scratch his back. I want to hear him grunt. With a pig in a pen in the back yard this house will be a home to me."

"Then for heaven's sake bring on your pig."

Bowser built the pen next day.

On the day after the pig appeared.

The pig seemed to have lived on old fruit cans all winter and topped off with whatever he could pick up round a country meeting house in the spring. He was long, lank and thin. He was sharp eared and wild eyed. He was squealing when driven into the yard and continued to do so after Mr. Bowser had fed him enough to satisfy a hungry elephant.

"What breed do you call him?" asked Mrs. Bowser as they stood looking into the pen.

"He's what they call a Seek No Further," promptly replied Mr. Bowser. "The trouble with that pig is lonesomeness. He's probably had the society of a dozen other pigs, and the separation touches his heartstrings. As soon as he gets used to the place he'll shed his coat, lose that look of mental agony and will be a pig to be proud of. Doesn't that sound homelike, though?"

Mrs. B. Expresses Doubt.

"I don't believe you'll ever make anything of that pig," said Mrs. Bowser as she held her hands over her ears.

"Don't you? Well, I've seen 10,000 pigs worse looking than he turn right around and become positively beautiful. I think I'll start in right now and cure him of his loneliness. If he's come to this pen under the idea that he can run things to suit himself, the sooner he finds out his mistake the better. Hear that squeal, will you?"

"What are you going to do?" asked Mrs. Bowser as Mr. Bowser pulled a picket off the fence and broke it in two under his feet.

"Get up a new feeling in his soul if he has one! No pig can come here and whoop it up in that fashion. No matter what he's left behind him, I'll make him stop that noise or break his back!"

And Mr. Bowser climbed into the pen and gave the pig a whack which would have knocked a cow off her feet but which merely started the squealing afresh in the case of the victim.

Piggy Makes Attack.

Contrary to the protests of Mrs. Bowser, he used the broken picket again and again, and he was doing nobly when the pig suddenly rushed at him with open mouth and knocked him down and jumped on him. He might have done far worse if Mr. Bowser hadn't let go of his weapon and scrambled out, so surprised and upset that he couldn't say a word for a minute. When he could get his breath he danced around and yelled:

"Durn his hide, but I'll have his hoggish old life for that! No pig can throw me down and live for ten minutes after!"

He ran for more pickets, but Mrs. Bowser protested and argued and finally prevailed upon him to desist.

"Well, blast his eyes," exclaimed Mr. Bowser as he cooled off a little, "he can live on for a few days, but I'll have my eye on him! If he wants to settle down and behave himself like a respectable, law abiding pig it will be all right, but he mustn't try any gum games on me. I'm not the man to be thrown down and walked on by any such looking critter as he is!"

"You said he was lonesome."

"And I say it yet, but he can't pitch into me in any such style as that, lonesome or no. He'll come to it, however. He's getting over his lonesomeness already."

The pig had ceased squealing for a time, but no sooner had they moved away than he recommenced his doleful noise and except at rare intervals he kept it up all day long. Mr. Bowser carried out swill and got corn and pulled weeds and grass, but the lonely Seek No Further seemed to be seeking a good deal further. He would eat and squeal, and when the family went to bed he was still at it. At midnight, when the noise had prevented any sleep, Mr. Bowser got out of bed and began to dress.

Bowser Plans Vengeance.

"What are you going to do, dear?" queried Mrs. Bowser, who had expected such a move for the last hour.

"Kill that infernal pig or make him shut up," he replied.

"But you said he was lonesome."

"So he is, but he won't be after I have interviewed him for about three minutes!"

"I'll go out with you."

"No, you won't! You just stay right where you are and I'll attend to this little business. Have you seen a sledgehammer or a crowbar around?"

"Please don't. How would you feel to be taken away from your family and carried off to a strange pen?"

"How would I feel?" he shouted. "Am I a blamed old squealing pig that you should make such comparisons? You stay right here!"

What happened at that pigpen Mrs. Bowser may never know. She heard the breaking of boards, dull thuds as of blows, squeals and grunts and cusswords, and half an hour later Mr. Bowser came limping in. He had evidently been rolled in the grass and doubled up, and as he stood over her he hoarsely exclaimed:

"Woman, your pig is miles away and still going, and if you even look at the empty pen after this you and I will separate forever! This is the limit! Don't drive me beyond it!"

HAPPY TIME AT GRACE HALL XMAS CONCERT LAST EVENING

Songs, Recitation, Sketches, Drills etc. By the Young People—A Camp-fire Scene Which Could not be Seen—Crowded Attendance

The Grace Sunday School held their Christmas concert last evening the hall being packed beyond its capacity, many people having to stand in the vestibule. Mr. Hartley, the superintendent of the school, presided, Rev. R. G. Peever gave a brief address.

An excellent programme was provided by the children and young people. Solos, sketches, recitations, dialogues, choruses and drills. All of which showed that the Grace girls and boys can do things. One novel item in the programme was a "camping scene," in which the youths of the Sunday school took part. The lights were turned out, and a red lamp representing campfire, was placed on the platform, while the boys arranged themselves around "the blaze" and sang songs of home, played mouth-organs, and gave recitations; this was a very amusing turn; one boy sang about a wonderful kicking donkey. The scene would have been more picturesque, if two-thirds of the audience could have seen it, most of those present had to use their imagination as the platform was low and all the boys were lying down. The "unexpected entertainment" was a well-acted sketch and caused much amusement at the expense of a maiden aunt. The "Hoop Drill" was very pretty, as was also the "Sailor drill." The following is the programme:—

Chairman's Address.
Piano solo—I. Baird.
Sketch—"An Unexpected Entertainment.
Primary chorus.
Vocal solo—May Greaves.
Recitation—Addie Wright.
Girls' Hoop Drill.
Vocal solo—Miss Nellie Wright.
Camping scene.
Piano duet—Misses McClennan and Greaves.
Dialogue—W. Simpson and H. Henry.
Recitation—Miss Beatty.
Sailor drill, soloist—Arthur Milligan.
Parasol drill.
Supper.

At the close of the entertainment refreshments were served and a happy evening was brought to a close at 10.15.

The proceeds of the evening go to the building fund, for Grace Sunday school is progressive and has dreams of building a church which is very much needed in the north end.

AN UNLUCKY RUN

One of the Fire Horses Met With Injury

A chimney fire at 217 Euclid avenue, caused the fire brigade a long run yesterday afternoon. No damage resulted from the fire, but the run was very disastrous to the briade, inasmuch as their best horse "Fred," sprained his shoulder. A "vet" was called but the extent of the injury could not then be ascertained. "Fred" is a fine animal and was purchased at Hastings three years ago.

Daughters of the Empire

The regular monthly meeting of the Daughters of the Empire was held yesterday afternoon in the Armouries. Regent (Col.) Clegg presided. The various reports presented were found satisfactory. It was decided to hold the next meeting the last Thursday of January, when the election of officers will take place. Tea was served at the close of the meeting.

An excellent program has been arranged for the recital to-morrow (Saturday) at 3.30 p.m. in the Greene Music Co's. Parlors. You are cordially invited.

COL. WARD AS COUNTY JUDGE

New County Judges About to be Chosen

OTTAWA, Dec. 5.—Rumor associates the names of two former members of Parliament with the coming appointments to the County Court bench of Ontario. Under the new law a number of county judges who have reached the age limit will vacate their positions. Among them are Judge Morgan, of York, and Judge Benson of Durnham-Northumberland. In connection with the York County appointment the name of Mr. Emerson Coatsworth, who sat for East Toronto prior to 1896, is being mentioned, and there is a general feeling that Col. Harry Ward former member for Durham, will succeed his Honor Judge Benson.

GRADUATE NURSES

Dr. McPherson Gave Address Before Association

The regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Graduate Nurses' Association met yesterday afternoon in the lecture hall of the Public Library. Miss Bertha Mowry presided.

A very interesting and instructive address was read by Dr. McPherson on "What a nurse can do in regards to public health."

The usual reports were presented and proved to be satisfactory.

OBITUARY

MRS. DAVID S. ARMSTRONG.

After an illness extending over four years, a widely known resident passed away on Sunday last in the person of Ann Jane Atkins, wife of David S. Armstrong of Cavan. Her illness was exceptionally sad on account of Mr. Armstrong also being ill and unable to give her that attention which he would have liked to give her.

Born in Canada, nearly her whole life was spent in Cavan and Millbrook, and a devoted one it was in rearing a large and respectable family who mourn her as their guiding and guarding angel from infancy up. Besides three sisters and three brothers there are a family of four daughters, Mrs. Cann, Peterborough, Mrs. Brock, Cavan; Mrs. Thorndyke, town, and Mrs. Fee, Manitoba; and seven sons, Arthur, David and William of Cavan; Alex. in Peterborough; John in South Monaghan; James and Stanley in the West.

The family were all here for the funeral except James, and on Tuesday her remains were followed by a very large concourse of sympathizing friends to the Presbyterian Cemetery, Rev. Wm. Johnston conducting the funeral ceremonies.—Millbrook Reporter.

GOOD PLAY LIKE "THE GLAD EYE"

Art Editor Made a Fortune in a Night

Mr. Louis Meyer, a young man of thirth-four years of age and a journalist, made a fortune practically in a night. Mr. Meyer, be it said, is art editor of the smart little journal, London Opinion, and part owner thereof. He had brought to him a little play called "The Glad Eye," adapted from the French of Armand and Nancey, a little script that had made the round of the London managers, and been rejected as no good. By some whimsical fate, and despite the fact that the men who were supposed to know, warned him, Meyer purchased it for a ridiculously small sum, and put it on in a small town for a week to try it out. It created a furore, and Meyer immediately took the big jump, and engaged a London West End Theatre. The result is history at least theatrical history. Meyer made a million in a year and a half, the play running for fifteen months in the West End of London, in addition to there being four companies on the road with it. There is now a company in Australia, one in South Africa, and now one in Canada.

For his Canadian tour, Mr. Meyer has expended a little fortune in order to bring the production up to the standard of that in London.

He carries evrytning with the merry little play, even to the beautiful draperies, cushions and the beautiful ladies' dresses.

The company has been sent over specially, rehearsed under the personal eye of our energetic Louis, and, opening in Montreal last week, and playing to the capacity of the theatre nightly, the critics have described the play and company as the best ever sent over from the other side.

NOTHING TO DO BUT SIT AROUND

Coal Dealer Says He's Going to Start Painting

The rather extraordinary weather we are having these days has its effect on the local businessmen some for the better and others for the worse. A Review man, this morning called on several places of business. The worst story of "hard luck" came from the coal and wood dealers. "How's business?" was asked the comfortably seated, idle manager. "Pretty poor, and the probs for to-morrow say just the same temperature." If things don't change I'm going to sell out and go into painting. Everybody is getting their house renovated with the money they usually spend on coal at this time of the year. Nothing to do but sit in the office and smoke."

The clothiers and fur dealers have nearly as sad a tale to relate. They want snow, and lots of it, within a week. The "beautiful" makes a big difference with them. The farmers have not begun to buy yet and its the farmers' trade these merchants rely on at this time of the year.

The departmental store managers and jewellers are very optimistic. Business is better than last year and the afternoons are very busy. In their business the weather doesn't make much difference.

The grocer says that business is fair with a slight chance of improvement. They would like to see a little snow on the ground, but groceries isn't a luxury, it's a necessity, and therefore the trade is a certainty.

KING GEORGE AND QUEEN MARY PUBLIC SCHOOLS FORMALLY OPENED BY DR. MERCHANT

City Now Has School Buildings Valued at $375,000. And Play Grounds of 22 Acres

62 TEACHERS

Enrollment of Pupils at 2,359---A Description of the New Buildings

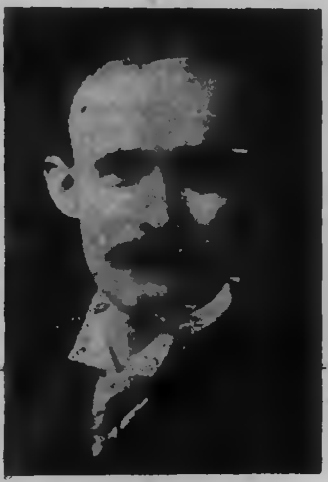
The formal opening of the Queen Mary and the King George Public Schools took place yesterday afternoon and with the completion of these buildings, the city of Peterborough is not surpassed for school accommodation by any city of its size in the Province of Ontario.

The location of these buildings on the extreme westerly and easterly limits of the city, was chosen by the Board of Education after careful thought as being the best available sites for the purpose. The grounds are four and six acres in extent respectively, and of high altitude where an abundance of pure air is always obtainable. The grounds are being graded and are ample in extent and the walks are carefully laid out.

Imposing Buildings.

The buildings are imposing in appearance and well adopted for the health and comfort of the pupils. Each building is 90 feet by 110 feet and is constructed to the ground line of concrete; above this point of brick, faced with Hamilton pressed brick and belt sill courses and trimmings of Indiana lime stone with cornices and balustrading of roof of galvanized iron.

There are three principal entrances to each of the buildings besides separate entrances to the boys' playroom, to the boiler room, and to the kindergarten room. The entrances at the ends are the most imposing as these are used by the pupils.



DR. M. A. MORRISON
Chairman of the Board of Education.

Twelve Class Rooms.

Above the basement there are twelve standard class rooms, each capable of accommodating from 45 to 48 pupils and with each class room there is a cloak room. In addition to these rooms there is provided a Principal's room, a storeroom, a Janitor's room, a lady teachers' private room, and a library room.

In the basement of each school there are three large class rooms to be devoted to kindergarten, house hold science and manual training classes. In addition to these there are a boys' playroom, and a girls' playroom with lavatories adjoining, and a boiler and fuel room. The corridors in the basement are well lighted and divided at the centre of the building into boys' and girls' divisions.

In Case of Fire

The corridors above the basement are wide and well lighted. The stairs are placed at the extreme ends of the corridors and are sufficiently wide to admit four pupils to march out abreast, so that in case of fire the building can be cleared within the space of a minute.

The above accommodation has been obtained at a cost for both schools of a sum not exceeding $90,000.00, exclusive of sites. A single eight roomed school recently built in Berlin cost $75,000.00.

In the plumbing of the schools individual automatic water closets have been installed. There has been provided sanitary drinking fountains on all floors, sinks with hot and cold water in the Janitor's room and also in the Household Science room. Lavatories and water closets are provided in the teachers' rooms, also a separate lavatory in connection with the kindergarten room.

Heating and Ventilating

The heating and ventilating system is known as "The Standard System" of steam heating and ventil-

ASK FOR RENEWAL OF FRANCHISE

Otonabee Power Company Make Application to the City Council

The following letter has been sent to the City Council:

Peterborough, Dec. 3, 1913.

To the Mayor and
The Corporation of the City of Peterborough,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sirs:

The Otonabee Power Company, Limited, beg to apply to your Council for a renewal of their Franchise, which expires in January, 1914. We would like a renewal for a term of ten years, the same as the original franchise, and would be willing to take it on the same terms as set forth in the franchise or with such modifications as your Council and our Company may agree upon. We are serving a very considerable number of customers in the City of Peterborough with light on a flat rate basis and we find that there are a number of people in the city who desire to buy their electricity on this basis in preference to the meter system. We have, as you know, a very considerable indebtedness in the Power Plant and Distribution System and we do not presume you will refuse our request for renewal.

In addition to this I may say that our largest number of shareholders reside in Peterborough and the immediate vicinity, and they are extremely anxious that this renewal should be obtained. We would ask that you call a special meeting of your Council to consider this matter, so that the by-law can be advertised and voted upon at the January elections.

Yours truly,
Otonabee Power Co., Ltd.,
William G. Ferguson,
President.

Mr. Ferguson's Statement

Mr. W. G. Ferguson, President of the Otonabee Power Company Limited, says that the Company's application is a most reasonable one and makes the statement that the shareholders of his Company have good grounds to anticipate that their application will be favorably considered, owing to the fact that his Company did more to reduce the cost of lighting to the ordinary consumer and place electric light within the reach, than any other influence that has ever been at work in the city and the Company has always pursued the policy of selling its power and light on the flat rate basis and without a meter. It costs a great deal of money to put in a meter and it costs a great deal of money to take the readings of the meter from month to month and that of course adds to the cost that the consumer must pay for his light. Any person who has tried both the flat rate and the meter rate are only too glad to get back on to the flat rate.

TWENTY-FIVE LADIES JOIN SODALITY

Monday is the Feast of the Immaculate Conception. In the evening at the Church of the Sacred Heart there will be a reception into the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, some twenty-five young ladies joining. His Lordship Bishop O'Brien will officiate while an appropriate sermon will be delivered by Rev. M. J. McGuire of Douro.

Next Sunday, December 14th there will be a reception of new members into the Sodality in connection with St. Peter's Cathedral.

Asked this morning regarding the report that he would be a candidate for the Board of Water Commissioner, Mr. J. B. McWilliams, gave an affirmative answer to The Review.

GREETED BY SNAKES FROGS AND LIZARDS

Recently while digging on the roadside in the vicinity of his farm, Mr. H. Matthews of Douro unearthed a nest of snakes.

The nest contained thirty-five snakes, half of which measured about eight inches long, and were of the copper variety, the balance being green snakes measuring from two to two and a half feet in length. Four frogs and four lizards were also in the nest.

DEGENERACY IS DENIED

Hastings County Council Resents Strictures on District

BELLEVILLE, Dec. 6.—At yesterday morning's sessions of Hastings County Council a resolution, replying to recent statements about the county, was unanimously adopted:

"The County Council of Hastings having had its attention drawn to a report purporting to have originated from Dr. Fernow, professor of forestry, Toronto, that extreme poverty and a state of physical and mental degeneracy quite unique are general over the large districts in the County of Hastings and other counties, hereby begs formally to express its regret that such absurd and untruthful rumors have received general circulation in the provincial press. While there are isolated instances in Hastings and in all the counties of the province of poverty and mental weakness, the county council begs most emphatically to deny that the number of such cases is at all alarming in Hastings county."

"There are of course some deserted farms in a few districts of Hastings that should never have been opened for settlement, but the great body of the settlers in even the most remote districts of Hastings are in a thrifty and comfortable condition, and quite the equal in mental strength and character to settlers anywhere.

"Knowing the situation thoroughly, this council has no hesitation in expressing its faith in the future of the parts of this county dealt with in the articles with which we have felt called upon to deal."

TEST AT THE INCINERATOR IS HIGHLY SATISFACTORY

Natural Draft Brings About an Intense Heat And There is no Odor

Mr. A. H. Reid of the Reid Incinerator Company, Toronto, pulled the string yesterday afternoon and the demonstration proved all that he had claimed the plant would do. Members of the City Council and other interested spectators expressed their satisfaction at the result of the test.

Nine tons of all kinds of garbage were dumped into the incinerator. There were tin cans, pies that mother made, but which the family would not eat; cats and dogs and the remaining portions of other animals. And there wasn't the semblance of a murmur; neither was there any odor. It was simply a case of the contract or delivering the goods, all wool and a yard wide.

Natural Draft.

One of the exclusive features of the incinerator is natural draft. The action of the blast tubes disposes of the use of engines, motors, boilers, fans, etc., as used in all other types of incinerators to produce the forced draft. And yet one would almost think that a powerfully driven fan was at work so great is the action and roar of the inrushing air. Yesterday the heat was terrific and almost of incadescent hue.

Can Be Regulated

The incinerator can be regulated to handle any quantity of garbage up to twenty tons. Should the supply of garbage run short, the incinerator is regulated so that the fire will not go out. When the City's garbage goes over the twenty-ton mark, a unit can be added.

His Own Invention

This type of incinerator was perfected by Mr. Reid, who has given much of his time to the construction end of the local plant, of which Mr. D. A. MacGregor was superintendent. As has been previously stated, Mr. Reid sought out the Electric City as a favorable place to locate, as it is within easy reach of deputations who come to Toronto to investigate the merits of a twenty-ton plant for which the demand is large. Such a plant is worth $25,000.

An important point about the incinerator is that 125 h.p. can be harnessed and used to advantage.

Some of the interested spectators were: Mayor Bradburn, Ald. Duncan, chairman of the Property Committee, Ald. Langford, Duffus, Gillespie and Gordon; City Engineer R. H. Parsons, Sanitary Inspector Spence. A union jack fluttered at the top of the 110 foot chimney and a photo was taken by Orme.

Mr. Reid is leaving one of his employees here with Mr. Elson, the temporary caretaker. He left this afternoon for the west, taking with him two other employees, John Gordon and Wm. Withers, as he has a contract to provide an incinerator near Calgary.

HORSES BURNED

BRANTFORD, Dec. 6.—Fire at Bow Park farm, owned by the Dominion Canners Ltd., at three o'clock this morning, destroyed a brick barn with thirty-three horses, six cattle and a large quantity of peas, oats, hay and straw. It is believed the fire was of incendiary origin. The loss is fifty thousand dollars and it is the second fire within a year, the loss at first being a similar amount.

HOW CANADA DEALS WITH THE FOREIGN IMMIGRANT

This Subject Will be Dealt with Before the Canadian Club

NEXT WEDNESDAY

On Wednesday evening next, Dec. 10th, the Canadian Club will have the pleasure of listening to an address concerning Canada's problem of dealing with the foreign immigrant. The speaker will be Mr. W. W. Lee, Canadian Y. M. C. A. Secretary of immigrants at Quebec. Mr. Lee has addressed a number of the Canadian Clubs very acceptably on this subject, and the papers of the cities where he has been, all speak highly of his address. At the present time, the subject is a most vital one. The influx of the foreign element into our country is enormous and the diversified character of this element makes the problem all the more difficult and the more serious to solve. All the large centres of population in Canada to-day have to face this issue of the foreign element within their gates and Peterborough is by no means free from the danger of a too diversified population, the most casual observer of our city's interests will admit this.

The Local Problem

Mr. Lee, intimately connected as he is with the department of immigration, will be able to offer some suggestions as to the best method of handling this problem of the foreign element in our city. Mr. Lee invited discussion of his subject and it is hoped that a number of the members will take advantage of his invitation. The members are assured of a pleasant and profitable evening.

CASTLE NESBITT HAD FEW LODGERS

At the first of this week, only five prisoners were incarcerated in the County jail. All the prisoners were men.

The interesting point about this statement is that not in forty years has there been so small a number of "free lodgers" at this time of the year. So says Deputy Sheriff F. J. A. Hall.

RESPONSES PLEASE THE MINISTERS

Success Reported for the Every Member Canvass

All the ministers spoken to today, reported success for the every member canvass.

Rev. Jas. Rollins of St. Andrew's said that the gain for current expenses would be $425 over last year and the gain in missions was $335. All the cards have not been returned.

Rev. H. J. Keith of Knox Church, said the returns were considered as very satisfactory. All reports had not been made.

Rev. R. B. Grobb, of All Saints' Church, said the returns were exceedingly encouraging. There would be a big increase for current expenses and much more would be given for missions.

The canvass is progressing very nicely, said Rev. F. A. Conners, of Park Street Church. The responses he said, had been better than had been hoped for and some of the people intended to adopt the tithe system.

CONCESSION TO ULSTER IS MADE BY ASQUITH

Simultaneously With Order Forbidding Importation of Arms Into Northern Ireland, Prime Minister Extends the Olive Branch

LONDON, Dec. 6.—The British Cabinet, by a royal proclamation promulgated last night, prohibiting the importation of arms and ammunition into Ireland, for the first time grasped the nettle of the revolution in Ulster, which it had hitherto ignored, although the followers of Sir Edward Carson for months had been advertising their military preparations in every possible way, and daring interference with them.

Almost simultaneously with the publication of the proclamation, Premier Asquith made the longest step towards the conciliation of the Ulsterites that the Government has taken by announcing his acceptance of the principles for a basis of agreement which Sir Edward Carson suggested in his last speech.

These principles are:

First, that the settlement must not be humiliating or degrading to Ulster.

Second, Ulster's treatment must not be different or exceptional from that meted out to the other parts of the United Kingdom.

Third, Ulster must retain full protection of the Imperial Parliament.

Fourth, the Home Rule Bill must not be such as to lead to ultimate separation of Ulster from Great Britain.

RT. HON. H. H. ASQUITH.

Thus the Government extends to the signers of the Ulster covenant the olive branch.

The proclamation prohibiting the importation of arms and ammunition

HIS ELECTION IS PROTESTED

Truax Must Answer Charges of Bribery and Corruption.

TORONTO, Dec. 6.—Based on the charges usually made in such cases, a petition to unseat Reuben E. Truax, recently elected Liberal member of the House of Commons for South Bruce, was filed at Osgoode Hall yesterday afternoon by W. H. Price of Price, Garvey & Co. As many as 150 charges of bribery and corruption are made.

The petition is signed by James T. Crawford, a farmer living within a short distance of Walkerton, and James A. Garland, also a farmer, and a councilman of the Township of Brant. They ask that the election be adjudged void, or in the alternative, that Wellington D. Campbell of the Township of Green, in the County of Bruce, one of the candidates, ought to have been and was duly elected.

When Mr. Price appeared at Osgoode Hall to file the petition he took from his inside pocket one of the ordinary envelopes of his firm and produced from it three or four bills, one of which was a Dominion of Canada $1,000 denomination, which he handed to the registrar with the minor fees. Even at Osgoode Hall $1,000 bills are a bit of a curiosity. This money is security for the payment of all costs, charges and expenses that may become payable by the petitioners pursuant to the provisions of the "Dominion Controverted Elections Act."

IS THERE A BRITISH EMPIRE?

A WRITER in John Bull has been asking the question: "Is there a British Empire?" and has been also trying to answer it. He explains that he means a "Great United British Empire such as we are led to believe exists." He thinks that we sometimes deceive ourselves. He admits that Britain has big prosperous colonies, well-governed, but is every part in perfect accord? In answer to this last point we would say that an Empire, like a home, is not always in perfect accord. Each member of a family is different in temperament, and if every separate individual insisted upon having his own way the home would soon go to pieces. It is even so with an Empire. Empires, like well regulated families, only exist by mutual toleration, understanding and compromise. It is worth while to try to understand and appreciate even the point of view of our enemies, and much more is it worth while to adjust our relations with our friends.

Speaking of Canada, this writer says:

"In Canada the Yankees are ever coming and going, and must tinge the policy of the country, and of course there is a great substratum of French."

He goes on to say:—

"But the greatest danger of all that exists in all our Colonies is one of education. I don't mean that scholastic education is neglected—that is as far advanced as at home. I mean that there is great ignorance of naval and military matters, history and geography. Do they know who were Nelson, Wellington, Collingwood, Blake, Marlborough, etc.? In their eyes Napoleon, Bismark and Von Moltke eclipse everyone.

"In Sydney a young man of 19 asked me if the marines were not the only fighting men in a man-o'-war. He was a member of a volunteer corps, and wore a striking Scotch uniform, had a college education, etc., but thought 600 sailors would work a battleship and 100 marines fight it.

"(Perhaps a good many members of our Houses of Parliament are equally ignorant!)

"Each colony wants its own navy, even if it could man one; as a matter of fact none could man a large vessel without help from Britain.

"Instances like these show that the people of the Colonies that go to make the British Empire do not realize that they are component parts of one great whole. They should be taught matters of Imperial importance, as well as those affecting their own little plots of ground—that their safety and well-being depends on the safety and well-being of each part of the whole Empire."

This article was evidently written by a naval man, or someone who has covered the Empire. Allowing for the point of view there is some good sense in it.

THE CONCEIT OF THE DIARIST.

IT WOULD appear from studying Mr. Dela Fosse's article upon famous diaries in another column, that one of the chief qualifications of a diarist is the possession of unbounded conceit. This is certainly borne out in the cases cited by our city librarian. Pepys, (Mr. Dela Fosse might have attempted to solve the problem surrounding the pronuciation of this name) this famous diarist was perhaps the most conceited humbug that was ever evolved from Mr. Darwin's ape. He looked at the world through a monacle. To him the whole panorama of life was instituted and carried on for his personal entertainment. He would step out of his bed of a morning and after paying due deference to, or rather saluting the deity, he would disguise his animal apearance with a gay suit and a wig and strutt down the Strand with the supercilious air of one who dwelt apart, yet who by turns pittied, patronized or delighted himself in the show. Then he would return and set down his imhis. appreciation or criticism of all that he had seen, heard, felt and even smelt.

This diary was written, as Pepys avowed, and as all diarists avow, for his own personal amusement or reference and "not for publication." This disavowal of any literary ambitions is merely part of the diarist's stock of conceit. Not for one moment would he have anyone think that he cared two pins for fame. Every true diarist is self-sufficient, he is both actor and audience. Other people interest him only insofar as they contribute to his own amusement or glory. Boswell with all his ostentatious love and adoration for Johnson, loved and adored himself much more. He ran after Johnson in order to share, in the lime-light that perpetually shone on that great talker and to feed his overweening vanity. Dr. Johnson seems to have been aware of this and his treatment of his biographer at times was enough to obliterate a less self-satisfied hero-worshipper.

But Pepys and Boswell are none the less interesting and lovable on account of their weakness, rather does this enhance these personalities, for unless they had been sustained and inspired by an abnormal conceit of themselves the world would have been the poorer and two of the most readable and instructive books would never have been written.

NAVAL SUFFRAGETTES—A SUGGESTION.

THE SUFFRAGETTES who assembled as a body guard to greet Mrs. Pankhurst when she landed at Plymouth and who arranged to escort her to safety were intercepted by the British Navy. The ships used were "Destroyers"—they certainly destroyed the plans of those female warriers. There is only one thing now for the women to do, they have a suffragette military service, let them now form a woman's naval service. One or two Dreadnoughts, manned, or—beg pardon—womaned by lively little girls in navy blue would put terror into the hearts of even the Germans.

If we may offer a suggestion, Mrs. Pankhurst might strike a bargain with Mr. Borden (with the permission of Sir Wilfrid) for the purchase of the Rainbow and Niobe. The pretty names of these vessels ought to appeal to the ladies.

PINK AND SCARLET.

General Alderson, the author of "Pink and Scarlet," a handsome illustrated book which Hodder and Stoughton publish, will be well known to many Canadian mounted troops in his Mounted Infantry Brigade during the late South African war, Strathcona's Horse belonged to the brigade on paper, though prevented by circumstances from joining it, while the 1st Canadian Mounted Rifles (Colonel Lessard) and the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles (Colonel Evans) were with it during the greater part of the time they were in the country. When the Canadian Rifles returned to Canada a considerable number of officers and men volunteered to remain on active service. General Alderson formed these into a unit under the well-known "Gat" Howard, and christened them "The Canadian Scouts." Under their gallant leader, who had become as well known in South Africa as he was in Canada, the Scouts did splendid service, and there was much competition among the commanders of columns to have them attached to their commands. To the sincere and deep regret of all who knew him (and particularly, we are sure, did General Alderson regret the loss of a friend and gallant soldier) "Gat" Howard was killed in the Eastern Transvaal, and shortly afterwards the Scouts were re-organised, many returning to Canada. The book has an introduction by Lord Minto, the late Governor-General of Canada.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"PRESIDENT WILSON, who is suffering from a cold, remained abed to-day. His physician, Dr. Grayson, U. S. N., thought it probable the President would have to keep his room to-morrow, as well, so engagements were cancelled. It was said at the White House that the cold was in the President's head and throat, and Dr. Grayson thought best to guard against exposure." It is Huerta's turn to do the waiting. It would doubtless rejoice his heart to hear that his American tormentor was also "nearing the end."

IT IS REPORTED that Mr. Winston Churchill goes to Germany at Christmas to boar shooting with the Kaiser. This is said to be the first time he has planned to be absent from the Blenheim family circle at Christmas since the days of the South African war. So that his invitation to Germany to go on holiday has not been void of results. Perhaps he was only fishing for an invitation after all.

"CAN AN ALTERNATIVE explanation be that terror of Peterborough's Chief Constable is not confined to the members of his force?" Chief Thompson need not feel alarmed at this question, which we have taken from an English paper, it refers to the other Peterborough across the sea and to another chief.

THE TORONTO STAR in quoting the Montreal Mail, puts "Conservative" in brackets. This is very stupid of the Star, has it so soon forgotten the Mail's protestations of innocence of any party bias? We would remind our Toronto contemporary that the Mail is an "Independent Journal." But it might have been worse—had the Star called the Mail Liberal.

VERY LITTLE is heard in these days, even in England, of Mr. Stopford Brooke, who celebrated his eighty-first year on November 14th, having been born at Letterkenny, Ireland, in 1832. After passing through Trinity College, Dublin, with honors, Mr. Brooke was ordained a clergyman in 1857, filled curacies at Marylebone and Kensington, served as chaplain to the then Princess Royal at Berlin from 1863 to 1865, and was minister of St. James' Chapel, York street, from 1866 to 1875, and of Bedford Chapel from 1876 to 1894. It was during the latter period—in 1880—that he seceded from the Church of England in consequence of his orthodox views on miracles. Mr. Brooke is the author of many books among his best known perhaps being his "Primer of English Literature" and his "Life and Letters" of Robertson of Brighton.

BOYS ARRESTED in Berlin for robberies say they were led by reading five-cent novels. If these boys had only made a raid upon the property or the person of the man or woman who wrote the five-cent novel they might have been forgiven or even commended for their logical descernment.

WE HAVE NOT remarked in these notes what a mild, kind winter we are having, lest we remind the weatherman that he is two months behind time. He seems to be under the impression that it is only October. May he long remain in such delightful ignorance!

PLUMS FROM THE PAPERS

CHATEAUGUAY.
Gazette.

A counter petition, it is announced, has been lodged against the Liberal candidate in the recent parliamentary election in Chateauguay. The charges are grave and numerous, as numerous and as grave, indeed, as those set out in the original petition against the Conservative candidate. Those newspaper judges who unseated Mr. Morris on the strength of what Mr. Fisher's petition alleged against him may yet have occasion to revise their judgment.

THE RACE QUESTION.
Toronto Star.

The race question is one of immense importance. It is probably the most difficult question to be faced in an Empire three-fourths of whose people are East Indians. In South Africa, the black races are by far the largest element of the population. Australia says that the white races must predominate. British Columbia say the same. Yet British Columbia and South Africa are within the Empire, and any discrimination against East Indians, comprising three-fourths of the Empire, will undoubtdly create a difficult situation.

WINTER IN ALGONQUIN PARK

The Algonquin Provincial Park is situated in the eastern part of the Province of Ontario about 200 miles north of Toronto and 169 miles west of Ottawa, and has become the objective point for a large number of visitors who delight in winter sports. The altitude of this territory is nearly 2,000 feet above sea and offers unrivalled opportunities for healthful sport where an invigorating atmosphere may be enjoyed. The Highland Inn, a well-run and comfortable hotel, owned and operated by the Grand Trunk Railway, offers splendid accommodation at reasonable rates. For those desiring a rest or enjoyment there is no more attractive sport than this comfortable caravanserie.

Swedish Vessel Wrecked.

STOCKHOLM, Dec. 6.—Forty-six lives were lost yesterday by the founde ing of the Swedish steamer Malmberget, off Bodo, Norway. The steamer left Narvik, Norway, Nov. 27, for Rotterdam. The Malmberget was of 3,093 tons.

Dupuy May Form Cabinet.

PARIS, Dec. 6.—M. Dupuy called on President Poincare last night and reported progress. He will give the President a definite answer to-day as to whether or not he will form a Cabinet.

MEREDITH GOVERNOR?

Ottawa Rumor Names Him as Successor to Sir John

OTTAWA, Dec. 6.—The next Lieutenant-Governor (or Governor) of Ontario will be Sir William Ralph Meredith, now Chief Justice of the province in the Appeal Division, according to a persistent rumor which is going the rounds at the capital. It is also reported that the next Chief Justice will be Hon. Richard M. Meredith, now Justice of the Ontario Court of Appeal, and to succeed the latter on the Appeal Bench there will be another of the Meredith brothers, namely, Mr. T. G. Meredith, K.C., of London.

It is understood that Premier Borden and Hon. C. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice, have privately assented to the arrangement.

The appointment of Sir William Meredith to success Sir John Gibson as Lieutenant-Governor would not take place, it is said, until the expiry of the latter's extended term of office next September, but that the appointment is already arranged for is believed in Ministerial circles here. Sir William will meanwhile be superannuated from the Bench on full superannuation allowance, having completed the required number of years' service.

It will be remembered that the provincial Premiers at their last conference went on record as favoring the title "Governor" instead of the present designation, "Lieutenant-Governor."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WHY IS IT?

Sir,—It is not the fault of the ministers that such a large proporation of the places of worship of various denominations have ceased to be the centres of religious life. It is the fault of those who think that they can improve the churches by deserting them and who think that movements organized outside the churches by church members and adherents are a sign of the strength of the churches. Surely the fallacy of supplementing or rather supplanting churches in religious work is a serious mistake unless we recognize as the fact that the day of churches is "done" except as adjuncts of something greater, viz., lay movements. Already the clergy are beginning to dwarf by comparison. Their mantle of leadership in spiritual things is falling upon other shoulders. Is this desirable? Is it right? Can it last? Or shall we find when too late that business may be business but it is not religion. It is not the worship of God. His Kingdom is not of this world? Or do we know better than God? That reminds me of what a Sunday School superintendent said to me once. He was a very practical, business-like man. It was apropos of Hell and the difficulties of interpreting Scripture. "Well," he remarked, "all I can say is that if I had had the writing of the Bible I could have made a better job of it." And he meant it! But he was only a little ahead of his time. The grace of God unto Salvation is given to those who want it not to those who can buy it or be bribed or managed or led into taking it. The missionaries preach Love and Human Kindness. They will all tell you that to preach doctrinal differences and theology would be to destroy all chances of impressing the foreigner. The Oriental mind is the hair-splitting mind, the mystic mind par excellence. They want no more of what we are cultivating in that respect. They want Love and results of love, not technicalities. Stick to the churches, Abandon them and Protestantism will be out in the street. Go back to the churches and like the prodical repent of your misspent and wayward life. The training of the young is best done under the influence of the church. When the young know better than that they are lost. And do the results not show it in all these respects? Or is your heart as hard as your head and you will continue the fatal folly? We do well to ask Lord Topnoddy to be the patron of our shows. It would hardly do to ask Christ. That would be too much like mocking Him—Why?

Yours truly,
"READER."

Pensions Are Urged.

OTTAWA, Dec. 6.—A deputation representing the Civil Service Federation waited on Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, yesterday and urged the adoption of a system of superannuation for members of the civil service. They asked that 2 1-2 per cent. be deducted each year from their salaries; with the Government to add the same amount. They asked that in case of death of a civil servant, one-half of the pension be continued to the widow, and on her death one-quarter to the children until they attain the age of 18.

May Delay Parcels Post.

OTTAWA, Dec. 6.—No agreement has yet been reached between the Postoffice Department and the railways with regard to the payment which the Department will make for the carriage of parcels post. At present the railways receive two millions for carrying the mails. They want six millions to cover the loss to express which parcels post will occasion.

As a result of the deadlock it is now improbable that parcels post will be in operation before February.

Arnold, manager of the Plum Coulee branch of the Bank of Montreal, became keen when provincial detectives traced the fugitive to within 12 miles of the city. RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

Louis Meyer Sends His Own Company of Select Players With Production Complete for an All-Canadian Tour, Montreal to Vancouver.

A RECORD TRIP OF THE MERRY FARCE COMPANY

THE GLAD EYE.

During its lengthy run in London, The Glad Eye had a number of experiences, but none more exciting than one in connection with the special flying Matinee. This was arranged to be given at the Theatre Royal Birmingham on April 1st, 1912, and a few days before the date for the performance the whole of the railway service throughout Britain was suspended on account of the Coal Strike. Not to be outdone, Mr. Meyer chartered a fleet of motor cars and on April 1st the Company assembled in the early morning at the stage door of the Apollo, and a procession of fine cars left for Birmingham. The management travelling in the last, or observation car, and hoping such things as tyre bursts or breaks down would not spoil their chances. To do the journey in time, the speed limit had to be ignored, and the auto society placed scouts all along the route to keep the enterprise free of snares or police traps. Birmingham was reached thirty minutes before curtain rising time. The performance over, the company left about five o'clock and helter-skelter back to London, which they reached just in time for the evening performance at the Apollo. A very exciting time, and no mishaps, and a record in the realms of theatrical enterprise.

The Glad Eye had a great reception in Montreal last week on the occasion of its Canadian production and played to the capacity of the theatre nightly. After Peterboro, Tuesday, Dec. 9th, and one or two other of the larger one nights, The Glad Eye goes to the Royal Alexandra Theatre, Toronto, and thence to Winnipeg.

From The Montreal Herald, Friday, No. 21.

The forthcoming tour of "The Glad Eye" through Canada is more than a tour; it is an idea long cherished in the brain of one man—Louis Meyer. It has been a little soiled by a few undertakings making the leap in the dark, without preparation, and without the sinews of war, but it cannot be spoiled. As Canada grows, as she still continues to do, so will the idea of an Imperial Theatre grow with her. This idea, so conceived by Mr. Meyer is "Can the English-speaking races, as a field, support theatrical fare direct from the producing centre—London?" Mr. Meyer, in order to try to prove that they can, has started tours for Australia and South Africa in conjunction with the best managements in both countries.

To Canadians the question is "Can tours of Canada alone be made without recourse to the other side of the border?" Meyer and his advisers think they can. From Montreal to Vancouver the distance is great, and such an organisation and production as "The Glad Eye" is limited to the biggest towns for big money but they aver it can be done, and the success of this tour is pregnant with possibilities.

Here is a man with a theatre of his own in London, the Strand; another theatre, The Garrick, he three-parts owns; and has interests in others. He is at the front of the producing centre, where the best of the plays come from, and it only requires a little encouragement to make of Meyer and his best productions an annual Canadian event, with not one company, but several.

The fact that he is willing to take the big risk to prove his point is emphasized by the fact that he has laid out about $15,000 on the tour of "The Glad Eye" before it leaves England.

"The Glad Eye" whatever its title may suggest to the country, is a clean play, of funny situations, a daring idea, and good stage literature. Its authors are Armand and Nancy, two of the best farceurs in Paris, where farce has to be good to be of any account. The patron who comes expecting to find a risque comedy of double entendre will be disappointed. The Frenchmen have evolved a clean play, which has been cleanly adapted.

Mr. Meyer has provided a production, independent of anything here, even to a carpet or a box of matches. His stage people know where to put hands on every property, and they are, therefore, given that ease which comes through playing in a familiar scene, and with familiar surroundings. The production is an exact replica of that in London.

Company One of Best Possible to Obtain.

As to the company, the best has been done possible. Douglas Greet plays "Bocard," and Mr. Meyer was at some pains to get him released by a well known London manager. He has a high opinion of Greet's abilities. His personality is just that required for the part created by Grossmith. His recent performances of Bocard, in England, were not behind the original.

Fred Meads is no stranger to Canada. He was here with Maxine Elliott and with Fred Terry. He played Polignac with the first tour out of "The Glad Eye," and is the best yet in the part.

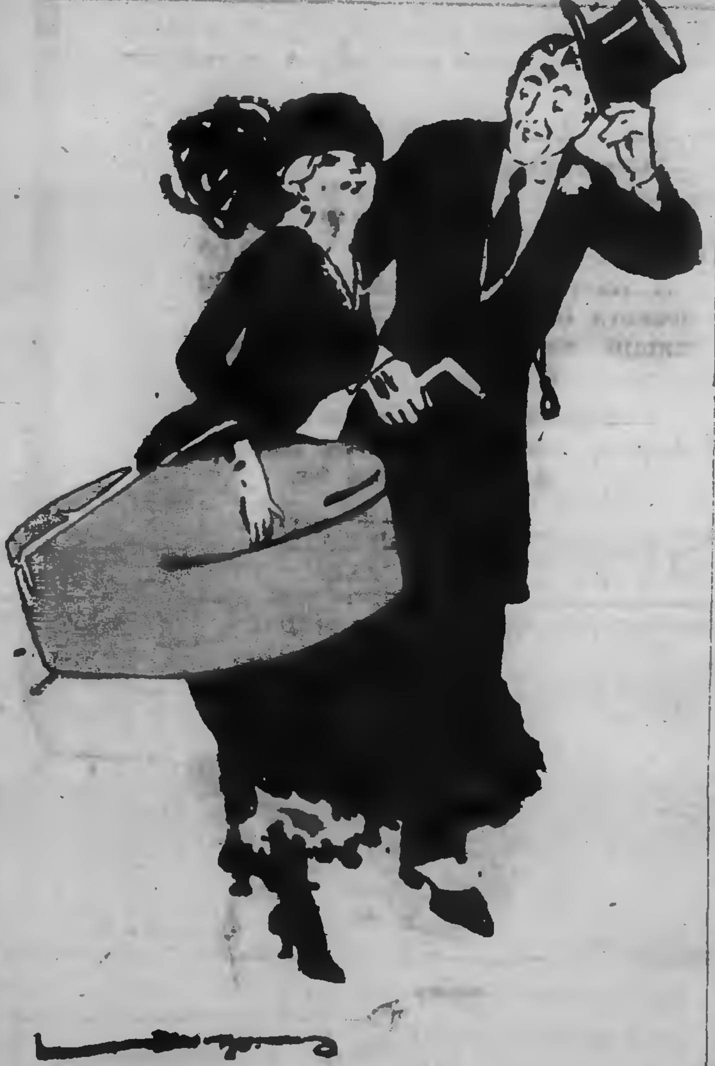
Augustus Wheatman, over in England, it is unnecessary to describe, for "Gus" is well-known on the streets of the large English towns as he is in Australia. He was born on the stage, so to speak, and, as a pantomine favorite in Glasgow, Liverpool and Manchester, he stands in the first flight. Some of his greatest successes are as "Uncle Gregory", in "A Pair of Spectacles", and "Preedy," in "Preedy and the Countess." To look at rotund old Gus, one would never imagine he had appeared in Shakespeare, yet, at the Old Adelphi Stock, he was one of the best of Shakespearean clowns, and has played with all the stars.

Walter Hicks, Reginals Fry, Walter Lindsay etc., are all performers of merit, and in the case of two of them, have had South Africa and Australia experience.

Coming to the ladies, Mary Marlowe plays "Lucienne." She came to England from Australia, with a great little piece "On Our Selection," in which she created a furore. She stayed with Tree for some months, and then joined Meyer. She was for a long time in the Williamson Repertoire Company, touring Australia and New Zealand, and left with a great reputation for the Mecca of all actors is the Metropolis.

Miss Eve Walsh-Hall is from His Majesty's, London, lately, and has played the part of "Suzanne" with Mr. Meyer in his principal company for over twelve months. She returns from Canada, direct to the Strand theatre, to fulfill a five years' contract.

Miss Katie Yates plays the part of "Ki-Ki." She has made a speciality of Parsienne, frothy parts, having played for Miss Ellaline Terris in "The Gay Gordons" and for Miss Phyllis Dare, in "The Dairymaids." She served her initial apprenticeship with the Benson Company, but preferring light material, she went to musical work, and lastly joined the merry little farce, "The Glad Eye," with which she has been for some twelve months.



"The Glad Eye" walk as here illustrated is really much more interesting than the Tango.

Going up in the Zebra to the seventh heaven of delight after seeing "The Glad Eye."

Scene from Act 1. A very charming setting for this is carried intact by the Company.

WEST BEARS BURDEN

It Is Paying Too Big a Share of C.P.R. Service Says Counsel.

OTTAWA, Dec. 5. — Mr. James Bicknell, K.C., counsel for the Dominion Government, began his argument in the western freight rates case yesterday morning, and had not concluded when adjournment was taken last evening.

Mr. Bicknell submitted figures from the annual statement of the C.P.R. to show that in 1911 the eastern lines yielded $6,000,000 in net freight earnings while the western lines yielded $19,000,000, or $13,000,000 more than the east.

"If the east is not able to bear its proportion of expense, the west is made to do it, and consequently the west is paying a greater share than eighteen per cent., the amount it should pay towards the general expenses on the amount of capital actually invested."

Mr. Bicknell expressed his belief that the Muller figures were accurate and that the rates in the west were out of all proportion to the cost of service.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL
FOR
The Hospital for Sick Children
COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1912, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,367 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 3 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 427 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto.

ARE GOULDS BEHIND ROAD?

PRESCOTT, Dec. 6.—F. A. Knapp of this town, who is promoting the new Canadian Transcontinental Railway from Cape St. Charles in Labrador to Dean Inlet on the Pacific Coast, is now in New York, where the Gould family are reported to be interested in the undertaking.

The company will be capitalized for $100,000,000, and while the names of those interested with Mr. Knapp could not be ascertained, it is known that large financial interests are at his disposal both in New York and in London.

All arrangements are complete for incorporation at the next session of Parliament.

Dando served the Erie continuously for 51 years.

"Jack the Peeper" Not Craig.

SHELBYVILLE, Ind., Dec. 6.—Corroboration of the story that a mysterious "Jack-the-Peeper" paid nightly visit to the bedroom window of Dr. Helen Knabe, the Indianapolis woman physician, found slain in her apartment on Oct. 24, 1911, was promised by the state yesterday in the trial of Dr. William B. Craig, former Toronto man charged with her murder.

Mrs. J. W. Smith, who told of the man she saw, "at least thirty times" peeping into Dr. Knabe's window, was unable to identify him as Dr. Craig, and her description did not tally at all with the defendant.

To Buy Lighting Plants.

CHATHAM, Dec. 6.—At a special meeting of the City Council held yesterday afternoon it was practically decided to purchase the gas and electric light plants of the Chatham Gas Co., at the price of $410,000, to be used as a means for introducing and distributing Hydro-electric power in Chatham. Hon. Adam Beck, Minister of Power, and his chief engineer, Mr. Gabey, and Engineer Jeffrey were present, and Mr. Beck delivered an address.

Found Drowned In Drydock.

He came here Thursday from the Collingwood Shipbuilding Co.'s plant. The body was lying under the steamer Duncan. Baxter has a wife and family in Scotland. Mrs. William Langdon of Toronto is a sister.

Cheap Money For Farmers.

REGINA, Sask., Dec. 6.—The first provincial measure towards providing cheap money for farmers was introduced in the Legislature as a result of recommendations made by the commission which visited European and other countries. It provides for the formation of a Saskatchewan Farmers' Mortgage Association.

That Style? Your Figure? Impossible!

Fat women who are contemplating a new gown in the mode will have to contemplate a reduction of their flesh before they visit the dressmaker.

Fortunately this is nothing like the hard labor it was when one had nothing but exercising or dieting to get results with. Nowadays a short course of the Marmola Prescription Tablets should bring any woman, however fat, to the proportions necessary for her to wear a Directoire gown.

Let her take a Marmola Tablet (made in accordance with the famous prescription and, therefore, harmless) after each meal and at bedtime and she should very soon be losing a pound a day. This result, accomplished without disturbing one's table customs, forming wrinkles or distressing the stomach, astonishes everybody.

Even one large case, costing only 75 cents at any druggist's, or the same amount direct by mail from the Marmola Company, Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich., gives positive results. This constitutes the acme of economy.

SETTLEMENT SATISFACTORY TO PARTIES HAD BEEN MADE

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—In last night's Review there appeared a statement that a writ had been issued by Mrs. Cuffe against Mr. William Johnston as defendant, for damages caused to the death of her husband in the accident which took place to the Turnbull building last summer.

I might say that without any acknowledgment of liability on the part of the owner, tenant or contractor, a settlement was made amicably between the parties, but as there were two infants of the late Mr. Cuffe, it was found necessary to bring the matter before the attention of the Court, for the purpose of confirming the settlement, and the Official Guardian of Ontario is satisfied that the settlement is a fair and proper one, and nothing now is left but to obtain the approval of the Court.

I regret very much that the announcement was made in last night's paper, because this has lead to annoyance to the parties concerned, and the action brought by me was solely for the purpose of confirming a settlement amicably arranged between the parties to it.

In justice to Mr. Johnston, I wish you would give this item as much publicity as you did the statement, that action had been brought against him.

Yours truly,
G. N. GORDON.

Peterborough, Dec. 6, 1913.

PETERBORO HEALTH ASSOCIATION

To those of our readers who are interested in the good work that the Peterboro Health Association are doing in helping to educate the people to join in the great national cause of wiping out the dread white plague, tuberculosis, that takes such awful toll of our loved ones every year, the following will be of interest, showing what is being done outside of Peterboro by the National Sanatorium Association.

In 1896 the Muskoka Cottage Sanatorium was built for pay patients, for early or incipient cases, with 100 beds and in 1912 a reception hospital with 10 beds for advanced cases was added.

Then in 1902 a Muskoka Free Free Hospital with two hundred beds for early or incipient cases was opened. In 1907 the King Edward Sanatorium on the banks of the Humber River, near Weston, with two hundred beds for advanced cases, with a night camp on the same grounds for working men who have tuberculosis, but can only continue well enough to work and provide for their families if they sleep in the open air and have at least two good meals a day, none of which would be provided in their homes, and all of which are provided at the night camp.

Queen Mary Hospital for consumptive children on the same grounds, opened June, 1913, with eighty beds. 7,000 patients have been cared for in these institutions. This implies that an army of over 4,500 have been sent back to help once more as bread winners. Four hundred and forty-five patients are now being cared for in the four institutions. Two hundred and ninety-nine of these do not pay a single cent towards the cost of maintenance sixty-eight pay $4.90 or less towards their maintenance which costs over $10 per week. One million, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars for maintenance of patients since the institutions were organized. Two hundred and twenty thousand dollars was paid out last year alone for maintenance. Over five hundred and seventy thousand dollars has ben expended on capital account for building equipment etc. More important still, how many lives have been saved through the educational work done to prevent the spread of infection. Great fighting force in a resident staff of seven physicians and forty-six nurses.

Training school for nurses established, exclusively devoted to the work of our institutions. Great educational campaign in the publication and distribution of millions of leaflets.

Illustrated lectures by two field secretaries throughout the province, telling how consumption can be cured and how prevented.

Millions of Xmas stamps distributed each year. Over three million isued last year. Free dispensary where all needy patients arranging for admission to hospital and nursing those who cannot be moved.

Samaritan Club organized by a number of the ladies of Toronto to co-operate with the dispensary and visiting nurse is administering to the pressing wants of needy consumptives, and their families. Samaritan Rest Home in Muskoka for women and children in danger of infection through under nourishment, bad housing conditions, over work, or contact with other consumptives in their homes.

The Whole Anti-Tuberculosis Campaign will take its place in history, simply as one glorious epoch in the fight for final vanishment from among human kind, of every sort of communicable disease and as one incident in the long struggle toward the highest development and conservation of physical soundness and vitality.

PANAMA CANAL RIVALRY.

One Workman Picked Up For Dead, but Still Enthusiastic.

"When Goethals first went to Panama," says Ray Stannard Baker in the American Magazine, "the work was organized on what may be called the horizontal system—that is, the canal was considered as a whole, and one commissioner had charge of all the lock work, another of the excavation, and so on—but after a short trial of this method Goethals reorganized the entire work on what may be called a perpendicular basis. He divided the canal into three divisions—Atlantic, central and Pacific—and placed each of them under a superintendent. Two of these superintendents, Colonels Sibert and Gaillard, were army engineers and members of the canal commission, and the third, Mr. Williamson, was a civil engineer.

"Rivalry was instantly awakened between these divisions.

"'They are putting in concrete at Gatun at so many yards a day,' the superintendent would tell the foreman, say, at Pedro Miguel. 'You aren't going to let Gatun beat you, are you?'

"A fierce rivalry grew up over amounts of excavation done, cement used, ironwork put in, and the results were published from week to week in the Canal Record. The struggle has come to infect all classes of workmen. A story is told (and they swear it is true) of a man on the Atlantic division employed at the upper end of a huge drainage pipe used to carry water out of the hydraulic fill at Gatun dam. It was a long tunnel with a curve in the middle, and this man's job consisted in keeping the entrance free from obstruction. One day he inconsiderately fell into the pipe and was caught up and swept through with the torrent. They picked him up for dead, but presently, opening his eyes, he said, 'They couldn't do that on the Pacific division.'"

A Two Meal Animal.

Breakfast with bacon (or meat) is a latter day invention, it should be recalled. Down to almost modern times man was a two meal a day animal—dinner and supper. A fifteenth century proverb bade him rise at 5 a. m., dine at 9 a. m., sup at 5 p. m., go to bed at 9 p. m., "and thou shalt be ninety and nine." The Oxford Dictionary, indeed, gives 1463 as the date of the first mention of "breakfast." For centuries afterward it meant only the morning draft of ale, with or without a bite of bread. Everybody then got about his work fasting.

DYNAMITE PRISON

Attempt To Destroy Alberta "Pen" Discovered In Time.

EDMONTON, Dec. 6.—Preparation for an attempt to blow up either the Alberta penitentiary or the mine operated by the prison for the Dominion Government were discovered yesterday. Twenty-one sticks of dynamite were found hidden in some brushwood by one of the prisoners.

Snugly packed in a paper box, apparently placed in this manner so that suspicion might not be aroused should the eye of any passerby fall on the package, the dynamite had been concealed in the bushes, just above the prison mine.

As prisoners were at work cutting away the brushwood late Thursday afternoon, one of the convicts drove his axe into some of the bushes, and when he lifted the brushwood discovered the box. The explosive was carried to the penitentiary.

The First False Teeth.

Until little more than a century ago humanity had to rub along without false teeth, of which nowadays one firm alone claims to sell over 12,000,000 a year. The first successful maker was Giussepangelo Fonzi, an Italian dentist, who started practice in Paris in 1798 and, thanks to his skillful treatment of Lucien Bonaparte, soon made his way. After years of experiment he discovered the substance from which artificial teeth are made and received the gold medal of the French Academy of Science. One of the earliest persons fitted with false teeth was the empress of Russia. After Waterloo Fonzi migrated to London and then to Madrid, where Ferdinand VII. rewarded him with a yearly pension of 1,000 ducats for a set of false teeth.

Human Derelicts.

This is the invariable history of such cases. Let an unidentified body of a man or woman, young or old, be discovered, and from all directions will come inquiries disclosing the fact that many persons have disappeared from the knowledge of their friends. Tragedies and heartaches are thus uncovered, for the mere act of inquiry proves that some one in each case has suffered anxiety over the missing one and has feared evil happenings. Crime shame, melancholy, discontent, unhappiness, desire for adventure, are among the causes that lead to the disappearance.—Indianapolis Star.

KING GEORGE AND QUEEN MARY SCHOOLS

ating, and is that now almost universally used in all the large schools that are being erected in English, American and Canadian cities. No other town or city betwen Toronto or Montreal, outside of Ottawa, has a school with a heating and ventilating system in the same class.

The main feature of the system is the total separation of the heating part from the ventilating part. This prevents any possibility of the contamination of the fresh air by coal gas or otherwise.

The steam is generated by a Kewanee boiler. The boiler is bricked in the peculiar Kewanee way. The Kewanee boiler is built in the largest steam-heating boiler plant in the world and has the reputation for being very economical on fuel.

The radiators are the Safford screw nipple pattern made by the Dominion Radiator Company and are those almost universally used in this country.

The ventilating part of the system is very superior, being similar to that installed in the Ottawa public schools within the last ten years.

The fresh air for ventilating purposes is forced into the rooms through galvanized ducts and is delivered to them about eight feet above the floor line by high power fans which are designed to provide four changes of air per hour per room. The fans are driven by five horse power motors, made by the C. G. E. Company. The fresh air is heated by forcing it through stacks of Vents Hot Blast Radiators. The foul air passes out of the flues which lead to the roof and is delivered out at that point.

The heating is rendered more easy by the fact that only one side of any class room is presented to the out side atmosphere.

The building committee: Messrs. B. F. Ackerman, Dr. J. E. Middleton, Col. J. W. Miller, J. J. Turner, Jr., and Dr. M. A. Morrison. Architect: F. Bartlett.

Contractors: W. J. Johnston and Messrs. Langford & Sheehy respectively for the East and West Ward. The sub-contractors being: For the East brick work J. J. Hartley, cut stone, Sherwood & King, plastering, Mr. Jos. Johnston; heating and ventilation, R. G. Sturgeon & Co.; plumbing, Messrs. Duranceau & Archibald; roofing, Mr. Maitland; lighting, Messrs. Alexander & Miller; painting and glazing, Mr. Ralph Carton, galvanized iron, cornice work, Mr. W. R. Turner.

Sub-contractors West Ward: Plastering, Wolstenholm Bros.; painting, Mr. Doupe; roofing, Archibald Moore; Mr. H. Shurter executed the concrete work in the East Ward school and laid the walks to both East and West. Mr. W. James did the grading at both schools.

With the completion of these schools, the Board of Education has accomplished the plan it outlined seven years ago, namely, to provide adequate and suitable school buildings for the Public and High school children of the city.

A Large Outlay.

The King Edward School, the Collegiate Institute, the six roomed addition to the Queen Alexandra School, the reconstruction of the Central and the old Collegiate Buildings, and finally, the two new buildings just opened, have all been erected or reconstructed during the past seven years.

The value of the school buildings seven years ago was $118,000.00, now their value is approximately $375,000.00.

The extent of the playgrounds seven years ago was less than four acres, now they comprise twenty-two acres.

The outlay in buildings, grounds and improvements during those seven years has been a quarter of a million of dollars.

This expenditure has been made necessary by the rapid growth of the city. The number of Public School pupils enrolled in October, 1906, was 1,668, while in October, 1913, it was 2,359. The number of Public School teachers employed in 1906 was 38, while in 1913 there are 58 and four special teachers.

On the average three additional class rooms are required each year to accommodate the increased number of Public School pupils. There are 13 regular class rooms in each of the new schools and already 9 are in use in the Queen Mary School and eight in the King George School. This will show that it is only a matter of a very few years until all the rooms will be occupied.

That the buildings are necessary is readily seen, and that good value has been obtained for the outlay, is as evident.

At the King George.

Dr. Merchant of Toronto, in addressing the gathering, said that as trustees and parents, we should keep in front with what we are doing as we are doing it all for our children, although at times when business is pressing, we think we are neglecting the children, but, as a matter of fact, we are not. Everything we do is for the children. The question is "What shall we do for them? What are the citizens endeavoring to do?"

"Children cannot be fashioned as potters' clay. They literally grow to what they are. When we see a little fellow going wrong we would like to shake him, but it's an impossibility to change him by shaking. He has to be used like a flower and let him grow as God would have him.

In speaking of the new school, the speaker said that it was one of the most modern and best equipped schools, and also a well appointed school. The school is for the child, physically, mentally and morally. We often find schools planted in little courts. It's a great mistake. Dr. Merchant spoke of the great advantage obtained from the spacious play-ground and entreated the Board not to sell if they became short of money in carrying on their work.

"I suppose some of the people are against a school being on a hill, but I am greatly in favor of it," said the speaker with emphasis. "Nobody can ever make a mistake by building a school on a hill. The physical condition of the child dwells considerably on the healthful conditions of the school. You don't have to argue with the people in regard to the physical being of the child now as in former days.

Activity in the child must have a discharge; therefore the Kindergarten is for the small child. The end of life is service. Service is action. A child cannot serve as anything without the use of muscles, and there is no service apart from the muscles. The child must learn through a habit to have control of the muscles. They must grow along these lines as well, as mentally. "The enterprise that built this school will do other great things for the city," concluded the speaker.

Mayor Bradburn in a short but interesting address, congratulated the Board on their foresight in having the school erected on the hill. He admitted that at first he was in doubt about it but now he was sure no other site could have been selected.

Among the others who gave short addresses were Inspector Mowat, Ald. Anderson, Ald. Gillespie, E. A. Peck, M.P.P., and Rev. F. J. Sawers. During the visiting hours large numbers of parents visited the school.

Near the close of the function Chief Howard and Chief Thompson called in and made short addresses, while Mr. Bartlett, the architect, also gave a short address.

At Queen Mary School

In his address at the West Ward school, Mr. D. Walker, Principal of the Normal School, said that when he first came to Peterborough, sixteen years ago, as Public School Inspector, his first report recommended a new school building in the West Ward. It had taken the Board of Education sixteen years to act on this report, but now that they had done it, they had done it well.

The parents and ratepayers should feel that the school was theirs, and should realize that the education for the boys and girls of twenty years ago was not the education for the boys and girls of the present day.

A good deal of the cost of the educational system went for teachers' salaries, and as the cost of skilled labor and the high cost of living was to be considered, it must be expected, that the teachers' salaries would increase.

Mr. Walker suggested that as the patients should realize the school was theirs, they should let the Board of Education know what they wanted done in the schools.

Other speakers were ministers, members of the Board of Education, Mr. J. H. Burnham M.P., and Police Magistrate Dumble.

THE WEATHER

"Are we going to have any winter this year?" or "Is this winter going to be of the same brand as the last one?" These questions and others of a similar character are heard frequently, but no one is in a position to speak positively on the subject. The weather, however, is subject to the rule of averages, as well as other things. If it does not get off to a good start, it is usually not of a severe character. If there is not good sleighing before Christmas, there is usually little afterwards. As yet there are no pronounced signs of its approach. Yesterday had a temperature of 67 degrees, and while to-day is a little cooler it is still very unseasonable for December.—W. P.

STOLE HIS ORDER

WINNIPEG, Dec. 6.—An interesting phase of the Plum Coulee murder and robbery, showing that the crime had been carefully planned, has come to light.

A few days ago a man said to bear some resemblance to the man Krafchenko now wanted by the police, ordered personally from the Hennessy-Smith Arms Co. here guns and ammunition worth $100 for the Plum Coulee Hardware Co. They arrived at Plum Coulee and were delivered to Mrs. Stewart, who has the only hardware business in that town. Next night her store was burglarized, nothing being taken except the guns and ammunition.

ENTERTAINED THE CHINAMEN

ATTENDANCE OF THIRTY-FIVE CHINAMEN AT ST. PAUL'S LECTURE HALL.

About thirty-five Chinese of the city were entertained last evening by the teachers and officers of the St. Paul's Sunday school. Addresses and reading of the Scriptures by the Chinese students was the feature of the evening's program. Mr. Wm. Madill presided. The evening was brought to a close with a luncheon, provided by the ladies of the church.

The brightened faces of the guests as they sat down to the most appetizing repast spoke volumes for the good work the officers of the church are doing amongst the Chinese of the city.

St. Paul's has the distinction of having the largest and most flourishing class of Chinese in the city.

ANNOYING DANDRUFF

Will Make Canada a Baldheaded Nation if Not Checked

M. Pasteur, the great French Physician of Paris, once said: "I believe we shall one day rid the world of all diseases caused by germs."

Dandruff is caused by germs, a fact accepted by all physicians.

Dandruff is the root of all hair evils. If it were not for the little destructive germs working with a persistency worthy of a better cause, there would be no baldness.

Parisian Sage will kill the dandruff germs and remove dandruff in two weeks or money back.

It will stop itching scalp, falling hair and make the hair grow thick abundant.

It puts life and lustre into the hair and prevents it from turning gray.

It is the hair dressing par excellence, daintily perfumed and free from grease and stickiness. It is the favorite with women of taste and culture who know the social value of fascinating hair.

Comes in large 50-cent bottle at Warne Drug Co., and leading druggists and toilet goods counters everywhere. "The girl with the Auburn Hair" is on every package.

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

Notes by the Official Scribe

The usual bi-monthly meeting held on Wednesday of this week, was fairly well attended, President David Moore calling the meeting to order about 8.15.

An Interesting Letter

Owen Miller Secretary of the American Federation of Musicians, sent a reply to the President's query as to whether or no the orchestra at the Grand Opera House was under agreement. The Secretary's answer was that there is an agreement, and the musicians performing while the stage Bands were locked out, was a matter that was being looked into.

Visit of M. A. Carney

M. A. Carney, 5th Vice President of the Stage Employees, visited the city this week, stepping off as he travelled from Hamilton to Ottawa. Mr. Carney had called on Mr. Turner, but reported little progress after the interview. He told the boys however, not to be discouraged. The boys assured him that their cards were all paid up and they were out till their charter was placed in its old position. One official of the local had a letter from a prominent firm of solicitors advising him of possible prosecution if he did not desist from interfering with Mr. Turner's employees, and the threatened official can only think of one occasion when he had business around the Opera House since the lockout and that was when the carpenter of the "Dream Maiden Co." knowing there was trouble in Peterboro, refused to unload the car till he had consulted a responsible official, and then he was told to go ahead and unload his properties.

An interesting way was described as to how the union men of Hamilton treated the Griffin Theatre whose management caused the visit of Mr. Carney to that city. Organized labor men around the 400 mark marched up and down in front of the Griffin Theatre labelled "We don't patronize Griffins'." The musicians had also come out with the stage hands, so the lockout was of short duration. Union men of Peterborough might take a leaf from the book of their confreres at Hamilton and show that a blow at the Stage Employees at the Grand is a blow to all.

A Verdict Given

A question having been raised with P. M. Draper as to the validity of the credentials handed in by the Reid Faction of the I. B. E. W. that officials reply was that there were seceders from the international body, consequently were not recognized by the American Federation of Labor nor the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada.

The Social Season.

A donation was granted the Trustees who are putting in a piano to enliven the winter evenings. The presence of the instrument will bring more applications for the hall's use, besides adding tone to the building in more than one sense.

The Mayoralty Candidates

Representatives expressed disappointment at the non-declaration of a platform by the two candidates at present in the field. Much discussion ensued as to a labor representative and whether or no organized labor would rally at the polls next January in favor of labor's nominee. A committee was ultimately formed and will wait on J. J. Hartley of the Bricklayers' and Masons' Union, and urge him to accept. Mr. Hartley had promised his decision to the press this week-end, so, if he does accept nomination, the union men of the city will have lots of time for a successful campaign.

UNUSUAL AND CHIC.

Oriental Lines In This New Costume.

OF TAN DUVETYN AND CLOTH.

Chinese lines have been exploited in evening wraps for several seasons, and oriental effects both in materials and trimmings have received a perfect sartorial ovation from the feminine public, but this year the silhouette designed from Chinese costumes is new in the dress world.

The chic little three piece costume pictured is of such a genre. The material used is tan wool for the skirt and the same shade in duvetyn for the little mandarin jacket, which has a sash of silk worked with metal threads finished with bands of fur. The costume is original and smart in the extreme.

One way to remove the mark of a scorch is to wet the scorch with cold water and place it in the sun.

POLICE COURT

STRANGER GETS FREEDOM ON PROMISE TO LEAVE CITY

Apparently labor conditions in Toronto are driving men to drink. This morning for the second or third time this week, men claiming Toronto as their home, have appeared in the local police court on the charge of being drunk or else the charge of vagrancy.

Cyril Smith, an Englishman of Toronto, pleaded guilty to the charge of being intoxicated. He claims that he came in here yesterday afternoon to get a job in the bush. His explanation was satisfactory to the court and he was given the usual scare of six months in Central if he ever visited the local police court circles again.

Will Make Improvements.

The charge laid by Sanitary Inspector Spence against a local butcher for feeding offal to his hogs was withdrawn owing to arrangements being made between the Inspector and the butcher as to better conditions in his slaughter house during the future.

ZABERN PUNISHED

Removal of Regiment Hurts Town Declares Alsatians.

BERLIN, Dec. 6.—In the Reichstag most of the political parties appear to be satisfied with Emperor William's removal of the garrison as the first step looking to the settlement of the Zabern incident, as it is thought the offending officers thus will be adequately punished.

The clerical members point out that the transfer of the regiment from Zabern to Hagenau also affects the officers who are removed from the comfortable quarters of the garrison and put to considerable expense. The Alsatian members, however, express dissatisfaction on account of the financial loss which will be suffered by the inhabitants of Zabern as a result of the transfer of the regiment. This, they think, will act as a punishment for the people of that town. The Alsatians demand the removal of the offenders.

Mexican Envoys Reach Berlin.

BERLIN, Dec. 6.—Francisco de la Barra, formerly Provisional President of Mexico, arrived here yesterday from Paris on his way to Japan. He spent the greater part of the day with the Mexican Minister to Germany. F. A. de Icasa. He did not pay a visit to the Foreign Office or see any German officials.

Senor de la Barra leaves to-day for Moscow and will travel over the Trans-Siberian Railway. He expects to reach Japan on Dec. 21. He declared yesterday that his visit to Japan was merely one of courtesy.

Moving Picture Merger.

TORONTO, Dec. 6.—Several companies with share capital mounting into millions are recorded in the current issue of The Ontario Gazette. The first of these concerns the United Motion Picture Theatres, Limited, with a capital of $2,750,000, to operate from a head office in Toronto. The Canadian Bartlett Automobile Co., Ltd., with one million capitalization also makes headquarters in this city. The Cleary Mines Limited, follows suit with one million shares at one dollar.

Strike Is Settled.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—The strike on the Great Western Railway, which has tied up traffic since Wednesday, was settled yesterday at a conference of the men with the representative of the Board of Trade. The 30,000 men of different trades, most of them miners, who had been thrown out of work by the stoppage of traffic, will now return to their labors.

This was done at the dictation of the trades union leaders who did not countenance the strike.

WHERE EVE WENT

A Woman's Flight In an Aeroplane

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Ah, please!" pleaded Eve Dunham, with her hand on one of the propeller blades of De Mennes' beautiful flying machine.

"But mademoiselle is not quite proficient," objected the young aviator. "Tomorrow, perhaps next week, after you have made a few more trips with me, you understand better the stop, the pause, the descent. Voila toot! You fly alone!"

"But I want to fly today, M. de Mennes," pouted Eve, "in my own little machine. It is like a feather and responds to a mere touch of the wheel. No? How stupid!"

The Frenchman bowed his regret at having cast a shadow over Miss Dunham's sunny countenance, and he watched her walk back to her own monoplane with some doubt in his keen eyes.

"She look like—she look like she take a chance when nobody is around," he muttered. But it was time for another one of his spectacular flights before his assembled pupils, and he promptly forgot Eve Dunham and her discontent.

Eve's friends were not surprised at her sudden passion for aeroplaning. One by one Eve had taken up other fads and dropped them, but when her engagement to Lewis Thayer was announced it was discovered that Eve had reduced her hobbies to three, tennis, music and domestic science, and was entirely faithful to them until there came a day when she quarreled with Lewis. He did not quarrel with her. It was Eve's whole affair, and the domestic science fad was abandoned, music was agonizingly reminiscent of happier days, and no one could play tennis like Lewis.

It was not surprising that the broken engagement was marked by Eve's purchase of a monoplane and learning to operate it. Happily or otherwise, she had plenty of money at her disposal to indulge this fancy.

Now she stood in the vast inclosure and watched the fantastic flights of her teacher, De Mennes. Her adventurous spirit yearned to pierce the blue sky.

Tonight it would be moonlight and the field would be deserted. She could bribe Patrick McGee, who had charge of her machine, and away she would go!

The moon was high in the heavens when Eve motored down to the aerodrome alone in her runabout. The sheds were all closed and the ground was deserted, but she knew that Patrick McGee would be waiting behind the gate.

The gate swung inward, and she rolled over to the shed where her machine was stored. Patrick came running up behind, begging her to desist from her mad attempt, but Eve was insistent.

Soon the monoplane was outside. Patrick declared it was in perfect order, and, having assisted Eve to her seat and strapped her in, he started the propeller, the engine caught, the machine quivered, and away it went, wavering over the rolling ground; then, responding to Eve's guidance, it rose up and up until she had reached the desired height; then along her chosen air lane she flew direct.

Beneath her the aerodrome diminished and faded from view. Overhead the moon grew larger and more brilliant. The stars stared at her with luminous eyes, and the wind rushed by.

Presently she flew over the city with its myriad lights, and the machine, flying like a homing bird, pointed northward, for Eve had lost all sense of location.

Below she caught the silver gleam of a river. It was gone, and the dark bulk of hills took its place.

Now it was time to return home, for she had promised herself just a spin in the air, out of defiance to M. de Mennes. But which way led home?

Eve Dunham confessed to herself that she did not know. She guided the machine around in a sweeping circle, trusting to chance to reach the city. Once over the city she was positive that she could find her way back to the aerodrome, for she had made the flight over the city many times with her instructor.

But where was the city?

Back and forth Eve flew, once deceived by an upward glare against the sky. It was only a barn on fire, and nowhere did she see the reflection of city lights.

Then when she paused uncertainly she was aware that something was wrong with the engine. It was missing—once, twice, again and yet again.

Suppose it fell!

Well, she had taken her chance. "I—I'm s-something of a fa-fatalist." Eve assured herself with chattering teeth, not knowing what a hand fate was taking in her affairs this moonlit night.

She attempted to volplane.

"It's that or die!" murmured plucky Eve, and she began the descent.

All went well for awhile. As she neared the earth Eve tried to select a favorable spot in which to land, but the grouping of woods and hills and moonlit patches was very confusing, and what had seemed to be a wide field suddenly changed to a park, dotted with trees and with a great house set in its midst.

Eve tried to keep away from that house, but by some strange fascination it drew her and the machine toward it. She was gliding swiftly down toward the roof of the mansion, and she knew that death and disaster lay at the end of the fall.

She leaned forward, and the movement shifted her weight. The machine changed its course and just missed the house. It crashed into the tops of a great oak tree and stuck fast, while the engine whirred a few times and then stopped with a cackling sound.

Eve, snug in the aluminium body of the machine, was jarred by the impact and whipped and bruised by the branches as she crashed through.

A momentary silence followed the landing. Then came the sound of opening doors and voices in question and answer.

"It's one of them airyplanes got stuck in the oak tree, sir!" came the wondering voice of a stable hand.

A man's voice spoke in quick, authoritative tones.

"Start the big car out here, Benson, and turn on the searchlights! Train them on the tree—on the top, man! By Jove, you're right! Bring a ladder!"

Eve, sitting meekly in her imprisoned flying machine, heard some one scrambling up the tree. Up he came, and she could hear the panting of his breath and the bending of the smaller branches as he mounted near her perch.

Then, the faithful Benson having trained the searchlight so that it pierced the leafy branches and fell full upon Eve's face, the girl saw rising over the edge of her compartment a man's head. Inch by inch it was revealed to her in the white light.

A beautifully brushed mop of red brown hair, a very white forehead, two jetty black brows and beneath them two unbelieving blue eyes, a handsome nose, a cropped mustache and the astonished mouth of Lewis Thayer. He looked frightened.

"Eve! Eve! Where did you come from?" he gasped at last.

And Eve, bewildered by the unkind trick that fate had served in leading her straight to the home of Lewis Thayer when her proud spirit would have led her to the antipodes rather than face him, could only hang her head and say faintly:

"My machine ran away from me. Something happened to the engine, and I attempted to alight. I didn't know where I was."

"Yes?" was Mr. Thayer's polite inquiry. And neither one of them appeared to notice that there was a trace of humor in this conversation held in the top of a tree on a moonlight evening between two persons who were irrevocably estranged.

But Benson, sleepy and impatient, recalled them to the unpleasant situation.

"Do you need assistance in getting the man down, sir?" he asked.

"The—er—man is a friend of mine, Benson, and he is quite unhurt, so you may as well go to bed. I will help him down," said Thayer authoritatively. He was looking down at the expectant Benson and so missed the look of gratitude that Eve shot at him from under her lashes.

"Very well, sir," said Benson with alacrity. "Shall I leave the lights on?"

"If you please. I will put the car in. Good night, Benson."

"Good night, sir," said Benson.

The two in the tree watched Benson's lantern as it bobbed down the driveway toward the lodge at the gate where he lived. When he had disappeared from view Thayer looked into Eve's troubled eyes.

"There is only one way for you to get down," he said seriously.

"And that is?" asked Eve.

"I must carry you."

Eve did not hesitate. She must not show embarrassment. She would be very practical and matter of fact. Circumstances demanded it.

"Very well," she said calmly. She stood erect and steadied herself. "Whenever you are ready, Mr. Thayer."

Thayer stepped down to a lower branch, braced himself securely, held up his arms and said "Now!"

With Eve in his arms he went down slowly, laboriously, cautiously, for, slim as she was, it was no easy task to carry her down the precarious way to the ground.

At last he slipped to the turf beneath the tree, his left arm still encircling her. She could feel the heavy beating of his overstrained heart. The magnetism of his touch thrilled her as it had done before, and she dreaded the moment when his clasp should loosen and she would be "free" once more.

She didn't want to be free. A little sob caught her throat as she felt his arm relaxing its hold.

The grasp tightened.

"You are hurt, Eve?" he asked quickly.

"Yes," she whispered.

"I might have known it," he muttered. "Tell me."

"My heart," whispered Eve.

"Your heart?" he repeated stupidly.

"Yes, Lewis; it is hurt. It is breaking for you," confessed poor Eve, clinging close to him.

She felt his heart leap suddenly, and his right arm came around to fold her in a close embrace.

Shortly afterward the big motorcar leaped down the avenue and went hurtling toward Eve's home. It was a long ride, but the roads were perfect, and the moon blazed whitely down upon Thayer and his sweetheart.

"I'll never ride in an aeroplane again, Lewis," whispered Eve. "I know you hate the things."

"On the contrary, I love them," asserted Thayer heartily. "Didn't one of them bring me a wife?"

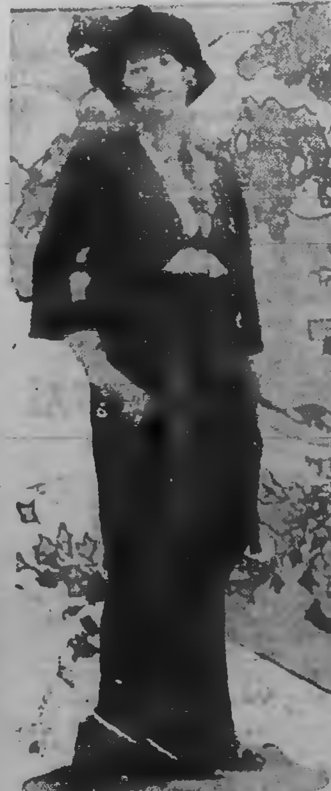
The Bolero For Afternoon Wear.

A new fabric of the season has been christened "kitten's ear cloth" from its resemblance to the soft, velvety appearance to be found on the inside of pussy's ear.

The afternoon suit illustrated is of this material in crow's blue—a blue that is almost black in its intensity. The bolero coatee is of the same shade of velvet embroidered with iridescent beads. The sleeves are odd little chopped off affairs. The hat is of black velvet, trimmed with blue ostrich, and the black patent leather boots have buttoned tops of blue satin.



OF CROW'S BLUE CLOTH.

One pound of Epsom salts put into the hot bath will reduce weight and relieve rheumatism.

Just the Cap For Cold Winter Days.

CHINCHILLA SCHOOL CAP.

Comfortable for the little chap who plays outdoors in the bitterest weather is this comfortable cap of chinchilla fabric. Attached to the hat are ear laps, which add further warmth, protecting the laddie's little ears.

Novelties In Footwear.

In many respects the changes in footwear are radical. Gold shoes we are accustomed to, but the gold boots which have been brought out have not had much of a success. High shoes are buttoned. Bronze is coming back to us from the long ago. Boots with colored leather are good, polished gray kid having a great vogue, with pearl buttons. Patent leather is used for all sorts of boots and shoes, and cut steel and enamel buttons and fancy toe tips appear on only a few of the shoes. Gun metal calf is new for walking boots, but satin takes first place for evening shoes. Buckles have superseded all rosettes and bows, and single rhinestones are the few exceptions. Jeweled heels have appeared on evening shoes, and some of the stockings exhibit a rhinestone in the center of each pattern on the instep. Insets of lace figure on many of the more costly stockings, but one cannot do wrong in wearing plain silk hose.

KITCHEN KINKS.

To cut hard boiled eggs in smooth slices dip the knife in water.

To cleanse a frying pan which smells of onions or fish fill the pan with water and when it boils drop in a redhot cinder. Afterward rinse and wash in the usual way.

When the grate is cleaned and polished rub all over with a piece of old velvet. Old velvet is also very useful as a final polishing cloth for waxed boards and floor cloths.

Apples cut in irregular pieces will cook more quickly in a pie than if sliced, for they do not pack closely as slices do, and so the hot air comes more easily in contact with the fruit and cooking is facilitated.

Birthday Candle Ring.

If a birthday is soon coming in your household, buy one of the charming little candle rings to go round a birthday cake. These rings are made of wood, enameled white and painted with small pink and blue flowers. They are perforated with sockets for holding many small candles. They sit securely on the table outside the cake, and there is no danger of burned cloth or scorched cake when they are used. Of course they come in different sizes and cost according to size.

One with so many holes that the possessor of that many years to her credit would attempt to forget it costs $1.75. A group of three small ones costs $2. If only part of the holes are needed to accommodate the necessary number of candles the candles can be arranged symmetrically, skipping one or two sockets between each two candles, and the empty sockets can be covered with flower heads or bonbons done up in little motto papers.

HOUSE HUNTING

By LAURA R. TURNLEE

MacElligott returned from his vacation, and when he entered his bachelor home—a single room, which was all he needed—it seemed lonelier to him than ever. In a country hotel with women and children about him he had had an advantage. None of them belonged to him, but neither he nor they had anything to do all day long, and he could see as much of them as he liked. But now he was back again to the same desolation.

"I've a mind to take a house," he said—"a small house, but a whole house. I'll have room to ask friends to come and stay with me. I can walk about in the rooms."

So the next day he went house hunting. After visiting a number he came upon a cozy place just about big enough for him. But somehow his enthusiasm for housekeeping had been replaced by common sense. "No one can make a home without a woman in it," he muttered to himself. "My friends won't come to keep me company, and I wouldn't want them anyway." While he spoke he pushed the button at the front door. A moment before it was opened a young woman of prepossessing appearance came up the steps. An elderly woman appeared at the door, and MacElligott drew back. The lady who had just appeared said:

"I understand that this house is to let furnished. Can I see it?"

"Certainly."

Supposing the two had come together to look at the house, the keeper of it led the way into the living room, a dainty little apartment, neatly furnished, and from there through the rooms on the first floor. On reaching the second floor she threw open the door of the best bedroom, remarking, "Any couple who couldn't be happy in this room couldn't be happy at all."

MacElligott and the lady both looked very sober at this, for the keeper said it as if having mistaken them for a married couple. MacElligott looked at the ceiling, and the lady looked at the floor.

"And here," continued the speaker, opening a door communicating with a smaller room, "is a convenient room for a child. The crib over in that corner will be left with the other furniture."

Neither the gentleman nor the lady showed the expected appreciation for the child's room or the crib, but the conductor passed on to other chambers, expatiating on what they were for and how convenient they were, finally passing down into the living room again. She was about to make an effort to rent the house when there was a ring at the doorbell, and she left them while she answered it. The lady stood looking down to the floor. It was very stupid of the keeper to go about talking to them as if they were married when they had not even met before. MacElligott thought it time to assure the lady that if she wanted the house he would not think of standing in her way. After an ahem he did so.

"Taking a house is only a passing fancy of mine," she replied. "I'm tired of boarding and would like a house, but I have no one to occupy it with me, and I doubt if I should improve my condition by housekeeping. True, it would give me occupation to take care of it, but I should have to take in a woman as a roomer for company, and I dislike having persons about in whom I have no interest. Besides, a woman would be no protection."

"I am in the same fix," replied MacElligott. "I'm a bachelor, and if I should take a house it would soon be a sorry looking place, with no woman to look after it. Without constant scrubbing, brushing and putting things to rights any house will run down."

"That's very true, but you could hire a housekeeper, some elderly person, whose presence wouldn't—wouldn't excite comment."

"H'm! I would prefer one whose presence would excite comment."

At this the lady's eyes dropped again to the floor.

"How would it do for you to take the house and rent a room to some old man, whose presence would not cause comment? He would serve perhaps for protection."

There was no reply to this, the lady keeping her eyes on the floor, but her features said very plainly, "I'd rather have a man about my own age."

Meanwhile the keeper was showing another person through the house, and MacElligott, hearing them coming downstairs, said:

"May I make bold to ask your address? I may be able to suggest a plan for you. I have a cousin who"—

The lie was not spoken. The keeper was coming. The lady hurriedly gave her address in a low tone and passed out. MacElligott waited till the third party had gone, then made a bargain for the house.

"When would you like possession?" asked the woman.

"I don't know."

"I take it your wife is much pleased with the house."

"Very much pleased."

MacElligott paid the rent on the house for three months, then one day called with the lady he had met there and made arrangements for its occupancy. The keeper still spoke of her as "your wife," but caused no embarrassment, because by this time the couple were engaged.

OPTIMISM AND PROGRESS, FEATURES OF CANADIAN BASEBALL LEAGUE MEETING

Toronto, Dec. 6.—At the annual meeting of the Canadian League here yesterday the dominant features were optimism and progress. The meeting was the best in all respects ever held by the league. The much-discussed transfer of the Berlin and Guelph franchises was not dealt with and will not be until after the first of the new year. President James P. Fitzgerald, was re-elected for a term of two years.

TWO OPTIONS.

Among the more important announcements of the day were those to the effect that George A. O'Neil of London, had secured an option on the Guelph franchise for $3,000, ten per cent. of which has been deposited, and that M. M. Robinson of Hamilton, had secured a ten-day option on the Hamilton franchise at a figure which was not made public.

EXHIBITION GAMES.

Clubs were given the right to arrange exhibition games, provided they pay the club scheduled for that date the regular guarantee of $75 and the $10 to the league.

The league's share of the gates on the ten per cent basis was as follows:—Ottawa, $1,771.66; London, $1,498.1[illegible]; Peterborough, $[illegible]7.20; Brantford, $603.85; Guelph, $552.32; St. Thomas, $538.02; Hamilton, $495.13; Berlin, $424.77.

President Fitzgerald will not call a schedule meeting until after January 1, or until such time as the composition of the circuit is definitely decided upon.

The league will continue to pay ten per cent. of its gross gate receipts. The league will set aside a sinking fund of $1,000 a year until such time as $5,000 is reached. The balance will be divided pro rata annually to each club finishing each season.

The visiting clubs as well as the home clubs, at the end of each series will make duplicate returns to the league.

The financial statement showed a $1,000 balance in bank as a sinking fund, and each club given $157.

President Fitzgerald was in the chair, with the following representatives present:—W. A. Mahoney, Guelph; G. Stevely and Geo. O'Neil, London; W. H. Denham, Peterboro'; P. Hagan, W. Witt, Dr. Kalbfleisch, E. Clement, Berlin; T. Nelson, Roy Brown, Brantford; John Burns, Geo Lee, M. M. Robinson, Hamilton; P. Shaughnessy, Ottawa.

SPORTING NOTES

If Art Ross, star cover-point of the Wanderers' hockey team, persists in refusing to play for the reduced salary offered him this season, he may be suspended. He has received notice from the president, notifying him to report on Dec. 8 for training. The letter also infers that if Ross does not sign a contract by that time, he will be suspended by the club.

Kingston Standard:—The Frontenacs are determined to get into the very best of shape for the hockey season. Of that there is little doubt, as they are taking two classes a week in the gym. at the Y.M.C.A. There was a good number out last night, and all participated in the exercises for over an hour. When the time comes to get out and practice on the ice the team should be in good trim and in the very best of condition.

The hold-out players of the Ottawa Hockey Association have offered to sign their contracts at the sum stipulated by the club, providing they are made for two years instead of one. The hold-outs are Darragh, Ronan and Shore.

The collapse of the Maritime Province league means that Ottawa is likely to get Allen Wilson without having to pay anything for him. Ottawa is also after Soloman of Berlin.

A meeting of the Y.M.C.A. Hockey Culb will be held this evening at 7.15. All members are requested to attend.

SPECIAL MEETING OF THE CURLING CLUB.

A special meeting of the club is called for Monday, December the 8th, at 8 p.m. to be held at the rink.

The purpose of the meeting it to enable the members to ballot for a number of persons who have made application to join the club, as well as to consider such other business as may rightly come before the meeting.

RETIRING PRESIDENT AGAINST AMENDMENT

Stratford Man Is Elected President of Ontario Hockey Association.

Canadian Press Despatch.

TORONTO, Dec. 6.—At the annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association to-day, President Wettlauffer, who is retiring after two years' service, spoke of the Association with a record cash balance of over six thousand dollars as probably one of the strongest and wealthiest amateur sporting organizations in America. He registered his protest against the proposed amendment to the rule which would define a "rural player" as one living in a "village, police village or rural district" as likely to cause a hardship to some clubs and he said the proposal to extend the off-side line to ten feet instead of three feet from the goal keeper, is the thin edge of the wedge, regarding offside play.

Charles Farquharson, of Stratford, was elected President, and the salary of Secretary Hewitt was raised from five hundred to seven hundred and fifty dollars.

CONVICT SAYS GUARDS SMUGGLE IN TOBACCO

Guards Make Rake-off on it, Declares Another Prisoner—Tubbing Again in Lime-light

One convict declared that prisoner who was "tubbed" and beaten by a guard one day died the same night.

Dr. Phelan informed the commission that the convict referred to dropped dead from apoplexy.

Samuel McCormick, a guard, who did duty in the insane ward, told how a colored convict had been given the treatment known as "tubbing." The convict was strapped and given two "dips" in the water. He knew of other convicts, who had been placed in the tub. Each one had been given this treatment for misconduct.

One man given a "tubbing" was in the insane ward, although the witness declared that he knew well enough what he was doing. The convict was "tubbed" without an order from the superior officers. The convict attempted to bite an ear off one of the guards and for this he was punished. An order was received from the surgeon not to do any "tubbing" and it was stopped for a time, but afterwards resumed when convicts became unruly.

The convicts he bad reference to were undressed before being bathed.

KINGSTON, Dec. 6.—Quite a sensation was sprung at yesterday afternoon's session of the prison reform commission, when a convict declared there was traffic in tobacco at the penitentiary, and that any convict who wanted it had no difficulty in securing it. The convict followed up his statement by producing half a plug of smoking tobacco from his boot-leg.

The commission has now real evidence of the fact that tobacco finds its way behind prison walls, and although no statement has been made, it is generally understood that the commission in its report to the Government will ask that a moderate supply of tobacco be provided convicts as a means of keeping proper discipline in the big prison.

That guards made a rake-off for tobacco they got into the "pen" for convicts was another startling statement by certain convicts, who refused to give the names of the guards fearing persecution.

Another charge by a convict was that prisoners had died as the result of neglect in the hospital.

THE CRATE FATTENING OF POULTRY

Practical experience has shown that crate feeding is not only a very satisfactory but also an economical method of fattening poultry. The saving in the amount of feed required to produce one pound of grain is quite marked, and the feeder is enabled to observe to greater advantage, the progress being made by individual birds. He can also, if necessary, curtail the duration of the feeding period in the case of birds which have attained maximum weight and are ready to be placed in the finishing crate.

Crate fattening cannot with success be carried on in a haphazard way. The feeder requires to understand the principles of what he is at and to give the necessary attention to the details of his work. In order to teach the proper method of feeding poultry in crates the Live Stock Commissioner at Ottawa has had prepared a seasonable illustrated pamphlet on the subject which explains clearly the construction of a fattening crate, the constituents and preparation of proper rations, the method of feeding, killing and dressing birds and information regarding packing for market. The work which is designated Pamphlet No. 2, of the Live Stock Branch, is available to all who apply for it while the edition lasts to the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

LESUEUR LOSES

Long-Drawn-Out Trial Finally Goes Against Author.

TORONTO, Dec. 6.—The appellate division of the Ontario High Court yesterday morning issued judgment dismissing the appeal of Dr. W. D. LeSueur, of Ottawa, against a judgment of Mr. Justice Britton, rendered on Jan. 9, 1913, whereby Dr. LeSueur was restrained from publishing any book containing extracts or copies or any information derived from any of the books, letters, newspaper files and papers contained in the collection of G. G. S. Lindsay, concerning the life of the late William Lyon Mackenzie. Dr. LeSueur was engaged by Morang & Co., Ltd., to write a book on the life of William Mackenzie. In order to do this Dr. Le Sueur found it necessary to get access to the manuscripts in the possession of Lindsay. Lindsay gave his consent to this, and the life of William Mackenzie was written. The book was rejected by the Morang Company, who considered it as unfair to the character of William Lyon Mackenzie's life.

CONCESSION TO ULSTER

into Ireland, which King George signed at a meeting of the Privy Council Thursday, was published in The Royal Gazette last night.

Premier Asquith's pronouncement was made, as many of his most important declarations on British politics have been, in the course of an after-dinner speech. The Premier was the guest of honor of the Reform Club of Manchester.

Dealing with Sir Edward Carson's basis of settlement categorically, Premier Asquith said he was sure Sir Edward must agree that the statement that there could be no settlement worthy the name that would be humiliating or degrading to those for whom Sir Edward spoke should apply to all sections of the Irish people. On the second point Mr. Asquith said he supposed Sir Edward referred to what formerly was called "home rule all round." Ireland's case, he added, was a case of urgency and must come first. It could not be delayed until the Government had gone through the complicated process of adapting the principle of home rule to all the different parts of the United Kingdom.

The Premier said he agreed there must be no ultimate separation of Ireland from Great Britain, but with the modification that there were peculiar conditions making the application of a cast-iron or standardised system of home rule to different parts of the United Kingdom not practical. He added that the real and effective authority, supreme and unquestionable, must be retained by the Imperial Parliament.

In beginning his speech Premier Asquith said: "I have looked in vain for a suggestion from the Opposition which would lead to a possible settlement, and I fancy I have found it where I least expected to find it." In concluding the Premier said:

"I am hopeful the discussion, freely and frankly, carried out on the lines I indicated at Ladybank and on the lines Sir Edward Carson indicated may lead to a cessation of the long-embittered controversy and a settlement which will command the consent and good-will of all parties concerned. I agree with Sir Edward Carson that we have to consider carefully and sympathetically the case of the Irish minority; but equally we must keep in mind the case of the majority, who, after a struggle extending over more than a lifetime, now see their goal actually in sight."

Mr. Asquith's speech comes at an hour when the newspapers of both parties considered that the attempt at a settleemnt had reached the stage of deadlock and were taking the gloomiest view of the future.

FIFTY DROWNED

Death Roll in Texas Disasters Is Steadily Increasing.

BRYAN, Texas, Dec. 6.—A death roll of more than fifty persons, with scores of flood refugees spending the night in imminent peril, and possibly a thousand others marooned and suffering from prolonged hunger and cold, was indicated by last night's reports from the flooded Brazos river bottoms in this section of south central Texas. For over fifty miles the Brazos was three to five miles wide and running with mill-race speed.

The known dead in Texas floods numbered 53 before reports from the inundated territory in this district began coming in late yesterday. The late reports were brought by men on horseback, and indicated at least twenty more persons had been drowned. About two-thirds of the dead were negroes.

READING AND ITS PLEASURES

By F. M. Dela Fosse

Methods of making memoranda must always have been in existence, for it is hardly to be supposed that before the age of letters men trusted entirely to their own memories for the fulfilment of business or other engagements. The keeping of diaries, however, does not seem to have come into vogue till the 17th century, and during that period two of the most famous diaries in the language were produced, viz., those of Samuel Pepys and John Evelyn. The most interesting and valuable of these is the one written by Pepys, although Evelyn's diary is by no means to be despised as a source of instruction and recreation. There are many points that render Pepys' Diary especially valuable. In the first place, it can be relied on as absoluely truthful, for it is a chronicle of events, jotted down day after day, evidently under the belief that no other eyes would ever rest upon it. It is written in shorthand and Pepys' own feelings and failings are presented in a way that no sane being would venture to present them for publication. Secondly, the accounts contained therein of the Plague and of the Great Fire of London are among the finest records that we possess of those events whilst the insight afforded into the doings of the court of Charles II. is astonishingly luminous.

Evelyn's Diary.

Evelyn's Diary, on the other hand, bears signs in many places of having been written long after the event, and in this respect therefore, if in no other, it loses a certain amount of weight as an historical authority. The writers of these respecive diaries were warm friends through a long series of years, notwithstanding great dissimilarity of taste and character. Evelyn was an almost perfect type of the English gentleman, and stands out in bold relief, in a licentious age, as a pattern of all the virtues. He was a loving father, a fond husband, a patriotic and devoted servant of his king and country. The only act that may be said to stand at all to his discredit is that of having left the king's colors three days after joining them, for which he gave the excuse that he did so "lest he and his brother should be exposed to ruine without any advantage to his majesties" That Charles II. forgave him for his defection to his father is amply attested throughout the diary. Pepys' on the other hand, was of a totally different brand of humanity. He was certainly no Puritan, but he never allowed his predictions to interfere for a moment with his public duties and his name has come down to us as one of the most efficient public servants of the day. As Secretary of the Admiralty he did grand ervice at a time when a strong man was needed at the helm.

Evelyn on Pepys.

Evelyn's panegyric on Pepys shows what a high opinion he had of him. Under date May 26th, 1703, he wrote as follows:—"This day died Mr. Samuel Pepys, a very worthy, industrious and curious person, none in England exceeding him in knowledge of the navy in which he had passed through all the most considerable offices. Clerk of the Acts and Secretary of the Admiralty, all of which he performed with great integrity. He was universally beloved, hospitable, generous, learned men of whom he had the conversation." Mr. Pepys had been for nearly forty years so much my particular friend that Mr. Jackson sent me complete mourning, desiring me to be one to hold up the pall at his magnificent obsequies; but my indisposition hindered me from doing him this last office."

Pepys writing almost forty years before under date Nov. 6th, 1665 has this to say about Mr. Evelyn:—"In fine a most excellent person he is, and must be allowed a little for a little conceitedness, but he may well be so, being a man so much above others. He read me, though with too much gusto, some little poems of his own, that were not transcendant, yet one or two very pretty epigrams." There are many appreciative references to Mr. Evelyn scattered throughout the Diary.

It may be noted here that whilst Pepys' Diary covers only a period of nine and a half years, from Jan. 1st, 1660, to May 29th, 1669, Evelyn's runs over a period of close on seventy years. Neither of these Diaries saw the light till the early part of the 19th century, Evelyn's being published in 1817, and Pepys' in 1825. Pepys' Diary had been reposing for years in the Library of Magdalen College, Oxford, but it was not till the Rev. John Smith, of Baldock, began to decipher its contens that its real value became apparent. In 1825 Lord Braybrooke published part of the work, but it was only given to the world in its entirety in 1893-1896. Our library possesses two or three copies of the Diaries of these writers.

The King's Evil.

Evelyn's Diary deals largely with his travels on the continent, and the reader's interest is enhanced by his vivid descriptions of men and things. Accounts of a visit to the galleys at Marseilles and of a trip to Naples, including a description of Vesuvius, are noteworthy, as also is the account he gives of the ceremony of "touching" for the "King's Evil," which will be found under date, July 6th, 1660. A strange notion seems to have prevailed from the time of Edward the Confessor, that the "King's Evil" or Scrofula, could be cured by the royal touch. Queen Anne was the last of our English sovereigns to pursue the custom, and Dr. Samuel Johnson was the last person in England to be treated in this manner for the disease. The office for the ceremony remained in the English Church Prayer Book till 1719.

To Evelyn, England is indebed for many reasons. Through his instrumentality the Arundelian marbles were presented to Oxford University. It was by his insistence also that England was brought to a proper sense of the importance of engaging in reforestry and to an appreciation of the beauties of landscape gardening. He was also one of the founders of the Royal Society. Lastly, he has performed no mean service to his countrymen in presenting to them, although unconsciously, a portrait of a man, who both in public and private life, was almost the beau ideal of what a man should be.

Other diaries that are deserving of mention are John Wesley's Journals, Swift's Journal to Stella; Fanny Burney's Memories (Madame D'Arblay), and the Greville Memoris.

Wesley, Swift, D'Arblay.

These are important enough for a separate article, but only passing reference can be made to them here. John Wesley's Journals are not in the Library, but there are copies of be obtained of the three others named.

Madame D'Arblay's Memorials are most interesting. They treat of the later part of the 18th century, and give us splendid pictures of the court of George III., where for a time Madame D'Arblay was installed as second keeper of the Robes. The Greville Memoirs deal with a later period of English life. Grenville was Clerk of the Council for many years and his revelations concerning certain personages are at times the reverse of good-natured. Disraeli seems to have held no very high opinion of him, for, in speaking to a friend on the subject of these memoirs he remarked that Greville was the most conceited man of whom he had any knowledge, "and," he added, "I have read Cicero and I know Bulwer Lytton."

HIS FIRST VISIT TO PETERBORO

REV. BYRON H. STAUFFER TO SPEAK MONDAY NIGHT

The Rev. Byron H. Stauffer, the well known Pastor of Bond St. Congregational Church, Toronto, pays his first visit to Peterboro next Monday evening, Dec. 8th., when he gives his celebrated lecture "The Funny Pennsylvania Dutchman" in George St. Methodist Church. Rev. Mr. Stauffer, himself a descendant of the hardy Pennsylvania Dutch stock, is one of the best known preachers and lecturers in the Province of Ontario and also is well known in many parts of the States.

He has the appearance, voice and action of the accomplished orator. For six years, through his power as a speaker, Rev. Mr. Stauffer has had the largest evening audience of any church in Toronto. This, in face of the fact that he believes in long sermons, always preaching from 45 to 90 minutes. Yet his church is scarcely able to accommodate the people who come, many of whom have to stand.

Mr. Stauffer is being brought here under the auspices of the Epworth League of George St. Church, and they wish it to be of interest to the whole city. The admission is being made low, 15c or 4 for 50c. Tickets may be obtained from members of the league or at the door.

Returning to Japan

Mr. J. Cuthbertson, who has been visiting in the city for the past three weeks, left last evening for Tokio, Japan, where he will resume his duties as Superintendent of the International Christian Police Association. Mrs. Cuthbertson and son will visit with her sister, Mrs. Dutton of 92 London Street until Mr. Cuthbertson returns in 18 months' time.

MISS M. A. O'CONNELL SPOKE ON A LEGEND OF TADOUSAC.

A large and appreciative audience gathered in the T.A.S. Hall last evening, to hear Miss M. A. O'Connell, on "A Legend of Tadousac." Her address was short, but very interesting, and evidently enjoyed by all. Tadousac, at the confluence of the Saguenay and the St. Lawrence Rivers, was the first port entered by the French, and was the scene of their first establishment on Canadian soil. From it, went forth the missionaries to convert and civilize the regions of the Saguenay, and the mysterious north, making it the cradle of Christianity in Canada. Tradition records that the first mass ever celebrated in Canada was on the site of the present village of Tadousac.

The legend itself deals with the circumstances surrounding the death of one of the greatest of the apostles of Christianity and civilization in Canada, the Rev. Father Jean Baptiste de la Brosse. On the evening of his death, being then in very good health, he is said to have predicted his death at a few hours later, and to have left instructions for his funeral rites, promising help in the carrying out of his wishes. At twelve o'clock that night, the chapel bell tolled, and the priest was found motionless on the chapel floor. The saintly missionary was dead. A storm had arisen, but the men of Tadousac, relying on the help that had been promised them, set out and found the priest who was awaiting their summons on the lonely Ile Aux Condres, while every bell along the St. Lawrence, from every church tower, rang forth a requiem, "swung by some unseen power." The legend, embodied in verse by Professor Caven, of Prince of Wales College, Charlottetown, P.E.I., was beautifully rendered by the speaker.

Rev. Father Galvin.

Rev. Father Galvin spoke for a few minutes in praise of the paper, and he referred to the rich material for history which Canada possesses, and the many interesting legends which deal with the early part of Canadian history, when the Catholic Church did so much for the upbuilding of the country and civilizing of the Indians. He spoke of Father Jones, the guardian of the Jesuit archives in Montreal, where a detailed record of the early missionaries' work is kept.

A piano duet was well rendered by the Misses Margaret McDonald and Helen Shaver. Mr. Ed. Desautel's recitation from Drummond was heartily encored. Miss Marguerite Clancy gave a vocal solo. The accompanists were Miss L. Hurley and Miss Lillian Clancy. Miss K. McCarthy presided.

PRICES SHOW AN UPWARD TEND

HEAVY OFFERING OF PRODUCE AT TODAY'S MARKET

Christmas time market with all it's shoving and bargaining was at its height this morning. The auditorium of the market building was crowded and people streamed in from nine o'clock till after twelve, returning with arms laden with fowl, or other products, such as butter and eggs. The prices were a trifle in advance of last Saturday, eggs in particular showing no signs of decreasing. They sold for 42 and 45 cents per dozen and the fresh assortment invariably drew the 45. Butter went for the same prices as it has this past three weeks, that is 28 and 30 cents per pound. It was not so much in abundance as it has been, and one lady remarked as a Review man was passing, that butter would be higher next Saturday.

Never before was there such a large number of geese, chickens and turkeys exhibited on the tables. In some places they were piled three high. Geese varied from $1.40 to $1.75; chickens from 75 cents to $1.30 per pair; turkeys from $1.80 to $2.85. One turkey that looked to be a fine specimen was sold for $2.50. It weighed 16 pounds.

A Review scribe inquired of one lady what she was asking for her chickens and was informed $1.35 per pair. "Why," he exclaimed, "sure you can get them for that in the stores." The abrupt answer he received was "Well, you know the road to the stores."

The outside market gave evidence to a great deal of pork. It sold for 13 and 14 cents per pound while lamb was 15 and 17 cents. Apples went for $1.25 per bag, and potatoes $1.15. One barrel of snow apples was quickly picked up at $3.50.

The scribe inquired as to the crop of snow apples and sweet apples and found that although the crop was light, the apples were free from worms.

HIS BOARD BILLS ARE LEFT BEHIND

POLICE ARE LOKING FOR A YOUNG MAN WHO NEGLECTED TO SETTLE.

Whether it was the mild weather or the newly paved streets that attracted him is not known, but at any rate, he stayed in the city for a little over a week at the expense of one of the hotels and an Aylmer street boarding house. Who? Well, at the hotel he registered as Harry Grame, of Oshawa, and at the boarding house he was Mr. Green, of Belleville. He was here, he claimed, in the interests of the Peterborough Hockey Club, and was to be the trainer. At the hotel he also claimed to be of the journalistic world, having a situation on The Times. He made friends with another young man whose mother conducted a boarding house. Here he took up his abode.

Quick Change Artist.

He then claimed to be working on the reportorial staff of The Review and changed his name from Grame to Green and his home town from Oshawa to Belleville. His hostess inquired about things in general pertaining to the railroad city and he was, it is reported, very familiar with the place and knew much about the town. That strengthened the belief that his home was in Belleville.

The management of the hotel was called up on the long distance telephone from Belleville and a lady who stated that she was the "reporter's" wife, asked if her husband was there. She was told he was not. He must have got "wise" for the next morning he was missing from the boarding house and he left nothing in the form of money. The only thing he left was a letter stating that a game of cards had relieved him of his roll and he thought it better to dig out.

The Review made inquiries into the matter and found that he was of medium height, dark complexion, wore a derby, was clean shaven and dressed in dark clothes.

Now the police are looking for him, with the object of collecting two board bills.

PLANTS IN SLEEP.

Some Take Their Naps at Night, Others During the Day.

Clover shuts its leaves before rain and at night, bringing two of its three leaves face to face and folding the third over the top. The young blossoms are also carefully sheltered by inclosing leaves which move forward in the evening and wrap them around.

There are two plants in the garden whose flowers sleep by day—the night blooming stock and Lychnis vespertina. The former is withered and shriveled in daylight, but expands and exhales a vanilla-like odor at night. The lychnis is white, and in bright sunshine every flower closes and hangs limply down.

As the sun sets this Endymion plant awakes expectant of the moon. The drooping calyzes raise themselves and slowly expand their flowers. It visibly ceases to droop and fade, and the plant, which almost died by day, is adorned anew. Its sister, the red lychnis, shines by day and is called diurna, but this white one has long left the beaten ancestral path and has become vespertina.

As it opens small flies appear and visit it. The calyx is of that reddish hue which they approve. The sun dew which attracts flies shows the same dull red in its leaves. It is not a rarity, but few have seen its blossoms opened.—Scotsman.

Jim's Advantage.

A prominent state official in a mountain region reined in his horse one hot afternoon and inquired of a barefooted woman working in the field, "Madam, can you tell me how much farther it is to Johnson's Corners?"

The woman leaned on her hoe and pondered gravely. "No," she said finally, "I can't. My son, Jim, could tell you, though. Jim's been aroun'. He's got shoes."—Everybody's.

TWO CANADIANS KILLED BY STRIKERS NEAR CALUMET

Worst Crime of Struggle Between Striking Miners and Strike-Breakers in Northern Michigan, Occurs at Painsville, When Arthur and Harry James of Toronto are Slain by a Mob

CALUMET, Mich., Dec. 8.—The most vicious crime of the campaign of outlawry which has accompanied the strike of the Western Federation of Miners was perpetrated at Painesville, near here, at four o'clock yesterday morning, when two Canadians, Arthur James, aged 29, and his brother, Harry James, aged 24, were shot dead by a mob of unknown strikers as they lay asleep in bed in their boarding-house. In the fusilade which killed the James boys a third mine employe was fatally wounded, and an eight-year-old girl was shot through the shoulder.

The two James brothers arrived here Saturday morning, having come here from Toronto, and in the afternoon, in company with several other new men, they were sent to Painsville, where the mines of the Copper Range Consolidated Co. are located. The men were quartered in a double boarding-house on Baltic street, conducted by Thomas Daly. About four o'clock yesterday morning Mrs. Daly, who was sitting up awaiting the arrival of a party expected on a later train, heard a bullet whiz by her head and bury itself in a partition a short distance away. Then, as though the first shot was a signal, there followed immediately a fierce fusilade of shots from just outside the house.

The bullets went in all directions, as is evidenced by the fact that the two James boys, who were sleeping in a room in the third storey of the house, were both instantly killed. Thomas Daly, proprietor of the boarding house, who lay asleep in his room on the second floor, was shot through the lungs and died last night.

Immediately following the shooting, the house was surrounded by a score of deputies, but when they arrived there was no sign of the murderers, who are thought to have been strikers. A search of the woods in the vicinity revealed nothing, and the deputies were rushed in all directions in hope of heading off the fugitives.

The examination of the Daly House shows that at least five different kinds of rifle bullets were used.

Yesterday morning's shooting was the climax of a long series of lesser crimes which have been perpetrated by strikers in an effort to check the Copper Range Co.'s attempts to restore normal conditions.

THE FORMATION OF BIG BROTHERS' CLUB SUGGESTED

To the Editor Review:

Dear Sir,—

Now is the season of Christmas cheer but to a number of little children in our city the pleasures of Santa Claus visit will not come on account of lack of work, poverty, sickness or drunkenness in the home.

Many others of us unfortunately are also deprived the greater pleasure of giving, having none to whom to give or those to whom Santa formerly came have grown up and the old home is childless.

There is a surprisingly large number of the prominent business and professional men in the city who are in these classes and who will gladly co-operate in the following scheme which has been talked over among several, and merely given to the press to make some others acquainted therewith who might be willing or anxious to enlist but otherwise overlooked.

It has been suggested to form a Big Brothers' Club, open exclusively to business and professional men who have no children of their own, or whose children have grown up and gone away from home.

1. That the object of this club be to be a Big Brother to the little children of the city who are going to be sad on Xmas day from lack of the few litle things that make the child's heart happy.

2. To provide fresh air holidays in the country or elsewhere to poor children who need it and are unable to arrange it themselves.

3. To help any little child in any other way where the little help may make it happier or better.

It has been arranged to hold a meeting of those interested, in the Bank of Montreal chambers on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock.

Yours,
— E. V. Frederick.

We anticipated that with the expected change in the weather something would happen. Now that the weatherman has done his duty, our anticipations have been fulfilled, for none other than Mr. F. H. Dobbin announced today that he would be a candidate for aldermanic honors and would run in the centre ward. So be it. The fault is all his own.

Nations of the Punjab With Flames in Their Hearts.

VANCOUVER, Dec. 8.—Indignant at the widespread agitation which developed following the decision handed down by Chief Justice Hunter, in the Hindu immigration cases last week, many former natives of the Punjab are said to have declared their intention of returning to their own country with "flames in their hearts," as they describe their feelings in the picturesque style of the orient.

This decision was reached at meetings held yesterday in Victoria and Vancouver.

GENERAL BOOTH AND RELIGION

Wants More of It.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—General Booth, who arrived back in London late on Wednesday, barred interviewers yesterday, promising that he would keep his observations on the Canadian and American visit for the public welcome to himself on Monday next. An officer in his confidence, however, informed The Gazette correspondent that the General was highly pleased with the Army of Canada, but feels that it should have more religious power as compared with its evident social reform standing. He was also impressed with the interest manifested by leading public and commercial men in the affairs of the Army.

CONSERVING HUMAN LIFE

Some Thoughts From Sermon of Rev. R. G. Peever

To a congregation that filled every available seat, the pastor of George Street Methodist Church, spoke at the Sunday evening service, on "The Conservation of Human Life." The topic was a pertinent one. It was handled with large earnestness, force clearness and ability. It was exactly that form of address that went home to the "man in the pew." Not a discourse of theological import, but one intensely practical and helpful. Following are a few of the spoken thoughts taken from the half hour service.

Conservation is a means not so much to reclaim as to prevent. It was well to bring back the sheep that was lost. It were better to have prevented it straying.

• • •

It was a gracious act to forgive and welcome the prodigal son. How much better if the shield of love and example had intervened against the personal lapse.

• • •

The life of the Church must be directed to reach out and accomplish large good. We must stand for two things—quality as well as quantity. The best there is in shaping moral life and plenty of it.

• • •

We must stand for conservation of opportunity for our children, that the future be not one of wasted undirected effort. Ours is the present generation. Crystallized effort will vastly influence the generation to come.

• • •

Side by side with conservation, stands redemption. The waste lands of Germany are redeemed into mighty areas of fruitful forests. This material thought extends to our Canadian temporal affairs, as well as moral.

• • •

We must see to it that the man who is morally bankrupt is helped to a position of some responsibility. We must help him to brace up and respect himself. Once so, he is an asset to the community, instead of a hindrance.

• • •

Nature is prolific but man is prodigal. Not only prodigal but continually careless. Out of 180,000 children born in Canada last year, 36,000 died before reaching the age of twelve months. And still we urge immigration to populate our vast lands. A child is worth $50,000 to the State. Think of the tremendous loss!

• • •

Montreal has the largest death rate among children in Canada. During the vacation of 1912, nearly 50,000 small children died. What of the conditions that provoke such mortality? That city purposes to spend $1,000,000 in three years to provide play grounds in the interests of conservation of youthful life. Money well spent.

• • •

The armed peace of Europe cost $300,000,000 in the last ten years, enough money to move, bless and uplift the world. Expend such a sum under God's blessing and the world would be infinitely better for us all and for the future.

• • •

The cigarette evil is enormous. The records show that in the last three months of 1912 over 50,000,000 were consumed; an increase of 200,000 over the same period the previous year. It was a common sense thing to raise the age of tobacco buyers from 16 to 18 years. When the boy or young man smokes cigarettes he is driving nails in his coffin plate. The young users of this fiendish thing show lapse of mind, lack of energy and inertness. It was paralyzing young Canadian manhood. It was a great and needful work for the church to combat this gigantic evil. Better that old smokers would stop smoking than that they be an example to the young.

• • •

The Gospel of Christ is one all embracing to save life. It was the plain duty of the church to instruct and warn and hold and save the child, the youth, the man. Any sense of duty that fell short of this should be censured.

A STUDENT IN ENGLISH

Chinese Spokesman Writes His Address to School Teachers

One evening last week the lady teachers of the Chinese classes at St. Paul's Sunday School entertained the scholars to tea.

This courtesy was recognized by the students and their spokesman, Young Kim, (W. T. Young, in Canadian), prepared a written address to the teachers.

Those who read in periodicals, the letters and articles contributed by Hashimura Toga will recognize the similarity. The difficulties of the English language to a chinaman must be immense and a translation of Chinese thought and sentiment into English by means of a dictionary or phrase work, brings words together in a queer confusion though the idea finds expression.

Following is the address that was received with applause, as read to the company:

Dear Gentlemen and Mrs. Madam and Miss Ladies,—

But are the St. Paul Church of all the school teachers, a very delicious gospel and good lesson teach the Chinamen.

And he has give me the couple tea today as very much thank and I don't forget and I will hope they very well and holding enjoyed at every day and many of them.

Then if we come, we hear the St. Paul Church at every Sunday what we are doing. We will reading the Bible and bless the God, the God as forgive us sins and the God love us and the God give the four seasons till us. The Spring with it's fresh green leaves and the grass and the land a park for all people doing ball.

The Summer with it's flower for all people, keep it on window. Look beautiful and green, tall tree made it the shade for all the school boy go round picnic.

The Autumn with it's vegetable and fruit for all the family and hotel, and the restaurant make it pie for foods.

The Winter as frost and snow that purify and prepare the ground be more fruitful and the snow was purify and prepare the disagreeable off. Make anything well.

Now look it. I will hope all the people keeping the house and very well and anything good, clean and must wash the floor at every week and don't spit on floor. Keep it well as I hope so much.

JOLLIFICATION COST THEM $2

Police Court Off to Bad Start This Morning.

Jeremiah Van Norman, Peter McCrea, Edward Parks, Matthew Edwards, and Allan Fairen, all "knights of the canteen," contributed $2 each to the police court this morning as a result of a week-end jollification.

David Kelly was up on the same charge coupled with being a trifle disorderly on George Street. His spree cost him $5.75.

A youth was charged with being drunk in the public lavatory on Sunday morning early, and His Worship called out $5.00. Chief Thompson however requested that he be put in the box. Questioned as to his age the defendant stated that he was eighteen on the first of July last. He obtained his liquor, which included a glass of lager and two whiskeys, at the American Hotel. The bartender who served him was James LeBarr, whom he knew only by sight. He didn't think that LeBarr knew him.

He didn't remember leaving the hotel, but knew it was some time before 7 p.m. on Saturday. He didn't recollect anything till the policeman arrested him. He was just "sobering up." It was the first time he was ever drunk and as he spoke the truth, the Magistrate reduced the fine from $5 to $2 to be paid in ten days.

Release of Mrs. Pankhurst Cause Her Followers to Rejoice

LONDON, Dec. 8.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant suffragette leader who was arrested at Plymouth Dec. 4 on her arrival from the United States aboard the steamer Majestic, was released from the Exeter Jail at 10 o'clock last night.

Mrs. Pankhurst began a hunger and thirst strike immediately following her arrest.

Mrs. Pankhurst was driven to an hotel. She appeared very weak and immediately retired to bed. She was in charge of a nurse. Mrs. Pankhurst is liberated on seven days' license. She intends to proceed to London at the earliest possible moment.

Not anticipating the early release of their leader, suffragettes gathered last night at the Empress Theatre, Earlscourt, to protest against the imprisonment of Mrs. Pankhurst. The house was only three-quarters filled, and "Gen." Mrs. Flora Drummond, who presided, explained the empty seats by accusing the postoffice of tampering with letters containing invitation tickets. In denouncing the Government, she exclaimed: "Here and now we swear that never again will the Government get Mrs. Pankhurst. We shall organise a body guard which will even face battleships."

A resolution demanding the instant release of Mrs. Pankhurst was carried with enthusiasm, but as the meeting was dispersing the news of her liberation was announced and was greeted with prolonged cheers.

KILLED IN MOTOR CAR

Horse Leaps Half Into Tonneau Striking Occupant

HAMILTON, Ont., Dec. 8.—Thos. Reid, aged about 45 years, who resided on the Caledonia road in the vicinity of Marshall's lime kiln, met almost instant death late Saturday night. Reid was riding homeward in the tonneau of an automobile being driven by Harley Wilson, of Ryckman's Corners. At a spot about half a mile south of the mountain brow on the Caledonia road, a rig, driven by Arthur Bedell, 113 Young street, who, it is alleged, was racing another rig in charge of Willis Mulholland, 80 North Caroline street, collided with the machine. The frightened animal plunged forward and landed partly in the tonneau of the auto with its fore feet striking Reid full on the head and chest. The victim was rushed to the city hospital, but long before that institution was reached he died.

EVERY MEMBER CANVASS SUCCESS AT ST. JOHN'S

Results Beyond all Expectations Says, Rev. Canon Davidson in Thanking His Congregation

At St. John's Church last evening, Canon Davidson extended the thanks of the officers to the congregation for the response made in the every member canvass. He said the officers were most pleased and the results had exceeded their most sanguine expectations.

The number of subscribers to the church funds and for missions had been very largely increased and if the subscriptions were kept up as was expected, it would mean that the church funds would be placed on a different basis for the future.

Canon Davidson went on to say that while there had not been many appeals to the congregation of St. John's, he hoped that in the future there would be even less, and he also expressed the hope that there would be wider benefits as the people of Peterboro generally, had acceeded to the request made to them, and were adopting the scriptural, definite and systematic method of supporting the church.

Discourage Entertainments

He hoped that the Church generally would more and more discourage entertainments as means for raising money, and rely on the regular support which it was shown, the people were willing to give.

A Social Hour.

After the service a social hour was spent in the lecture hall when the canvassers and workers gave reports and told of their experiences.

During the week the canvassers had tea together, being entertained by the ladies' societies of the church before they started their work in the evenings.

CONFERENCE FAILS.

Effort To End Dublin Strike Is Unsuccessful.

DUBLIN, Dec. 8.—The attempt to reach a settlement of the Dublin strike, which has been in progress for fifteen weeks, has failed. A conference, composed of employes and employers, assisted by labor leaders from Britain, sat for twenty hours thrashing out every point, but broke down yesterday on the workers' demand for complete reinstatement of the strikers. This the executive of the employers would not concede.

The result of the conference is a great surprise and disappointment, as the prolonged discussion gave hope that the disastrous strike, which had caused the eviction of hundreds from their homes, was nearly an end.

The employers had offered to reinstate 80 per cent. of the strikers.

Denounces Larkin.

LONDON, Dec. 8.—Joseph Havelock Wilson, president of the International Seamen's Union, has published a pamphlet denouncing James Larkin, leader of the Dublin Transport Workers, and "Larkinism," as responsible for the failure to settle the Dublin strike.

PETERBOROUGH BIRDS AT GUELPH SHOW

It is not so very long ago that prize birds raised by local breeders, were not exhibited outside of this city, but now, thanks to the Peterboro Poultry Association, Peterboro birds have found their way to the annual show held in Guelph and elsewhere.

This morning Messrs. H. Lush Archie Breault, W. Grose, Jas. Baptie and Geo. McClelland sent some of their best birds to Guelph. Over 100 birds will be exhibited.

MAY RUN ALL WEEK

Rates Arguments Cannot End Before Thursday or Friday.

OTTAWA, Dec. 8.—If the east is entitled to low freight rates because of water competition, then the west is entitled to the same privilege because of the natural advantages, was the synopsis of the argument advanced by M. K. Cowan, K.C., before the Railway Commission at the western freight rates case on Saturday.

The natural advantages of the west, explained Mr. Cowan, who is counsel for Saskatchewan and Alberta, are no grades, no curves, and several other features not found in the east, and all red nding to the minimum cost of operation of a railway. Contrary to common belief, water transportation only benefits those places in the east touched by the water, and not the entire section of the east, declared Mr. Cowan.

He contended that the same rates should prevail from Fort William west as prevail between Fort William and points in the east.

The rates between the distributing centres in the three prairie provinces, he said, should be on the same basis as the rates from Fort William.

It looks as if the famous case will not be concluded before Thursday or Friday, as only three of the eight counsel to be heard in argument have presented their views. Isaac Pitblado, K.C., representing the Winnipeg Board of Trade, will have the floor. He will be followed by L. G. McPhilips, K.C., for British Columbia.

The argument in defence of the railways will be opened by F. H. Chrysler for the C.P.R., who will be followed by Hon. F. H. Phippen, K.C., for the C.N.R., and Eugene Lafleur, K.C., for the G.T.P.

GIRLS TAKE FRENCH LEAVE FROM THE REFORMATORY

They Were Found Late at Night in Half Frozen Condition

TORONTO, Dec. 8.—Choosing the same day, and almost at the same hour, four girls escaped from Toronto reformatories Sunday evening, two from the Alexandra Industrial School and two from the Mercer Reformatory. Blanche Darling and Lucy Nichols, aged 17 years, evaded the attendants at the Alexandra Industrial School and Alice Booke and Dorothy Hall, aged 16 and 18, in the same manner awaited their opportunity to leave their attendant at the Mercer, and in the dusk of the evening made their way to King street but at a late hour last night they were found half frozen on the beach.

An official of the Alexandra School refused to give any details of the escape to the press.

The superintendent of the Mercer Reformatory stated that the most distressing part of the occurrence to her was that the girls who escaped from her institution were dressed only in their school clothing, altogether insufficient to withstand the cold of last night. Both she said were weak-minded.

Belgians Will Build Road.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 8.—A concession for the construction of 5,000 miles of railway by a Belgian syndicate was finally approved Saturday by the Chamber of Deputies. It is expected that the act will be ratified by the Senate next week.

Congress has taken no action as yet on the Presidential election. Dec. 15 is the date set for the adjournment, but the members express the opinion that the session will be extended.

SIX TO ONE FOR THE HYDRO

Walkerton Favors Proposal of the Commission.

WINDSOR, Dec. 8.—By a majority of nearly six to one Walkerville on Saturday approved the proposal advanced by the Ontario Hydro-electric Power Commission. The first bylaw, authorizing the council to enter into an agreement with the commission, received 223 votes for and 33 against.

For the second bylaw, to issue debentures for the construction of a distributing station, sub-stations and equipment for the town power plant, the vote stood 222 to 41.

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, DEC. 8, 1913.

THE BLESSINGS OF MILITARISM.

THOSE WHO HAVE CLASSED Sir Edward Carson with Larkin and Mrs. Pankhurst may now modify their views of the Ulster leader. Mr. Asquith may well have reason to thank Sir Edward for his drilling of the "loyalists." There is nothing like drill, as we have often contended in these columns, for curbing the fighting spirit which is inherent in the race. The "Ulster rebellion" is perhaps the best modern illustration of the civilizing and disciplinary power of militarism. Mrs. Pankhurst's movement was not military at all, it was a petty, hysterical, hatpin, hair-tearing melee, and where there was any scheming or strategy it was of the cowardly, criminal and contemptible order.

Larkin was a little better than Mrs. Pankhurst, for one reason he had a good and urgent cause as his motive. But his wild actions did not help the cause and only roused the fighting spirit and could not direct it when roused. So that a great deal of steam and power went to waste, which, if it had been centralized and organized, it would have proved a force in bringing about a fair adjustment of labor and capital.

The days of bloody rebellion are past, at least for Western nations. Sir Edward Carson has proved himself a sane military man and a stern but fair enemy. His willingness to discuss term with Mr. Asquith shows that he is no fire-brand who is seeking for a bloody glory. Some will say that the action of Mr. Asquith in stopping fire-arms has brought the Ulster leader to his senses, but why was this not done before? Mr. Asquith knows that Ulster is a power to be reckoned with, arms or no arms, and, as we have said, he may well thank Sir Edward for his drilling of the rebels.

THE AGE OF PUZZLES.

THIS IS THE AGE of problems. It might indeed be called the Puzzle Age. For life is becoming more and more like a Chinese puzzle.

Every day sees the birth of a new problem. There is the labor problem, the navy problem, the immigration problem—the latest in this category is the Hindu problem—there is the white-slave problem, the suffragette problem, the Home Rule problem, the liquor problem, the woman-police problem, the medical inspection of schools problem, the mayoralty problem, the street-paving problem, the sewage problem, the garbage problem—which includes the problem of getting the garbage man to call regularly. Space would fail us to recite all the problems which present themselves for solution every morning to a weary editor.

Why add to their number? Why create an "egg problem?" there is nothing problematic about an egg—"eggs is eggs." If a hen won't lay it is little use scratching your head over it, or building a bomb-proof hen-pen for the winter months and feeding the hen on spiced bran-mash and maize or patent "egg producers." If a hen wants to lay it will lay, and if it does not want to lay it won't, and as a rule it does not want to lay when you want it to. The best and swiftest solution of the egg problem in such a case is to decapitate the fowl and enjoy a sweet and hearty revenge, for after all roast chicken is as good as boiled or poached eggs any day.

Most of these problems which beset us disappear when we cease to talk about them and get to work and do something. If we allowed ourselves to become obsessed with every little difficulty or circumstance in which we found ourselves, the hours of the day would be one long series of interrogation marks. What a multitude of problems there are in the home? To regard all the household duties as such it would appal the housewife. If a woman were to sit down every morning and say: "Now there is the breakfast problem, the dish-washing problem, the children-going-to-school problem, including the neck-washing problem and boot-cleaning and hair-combing problem. Then there is the house-cleaning problem, the washing, mending and darning problem; the dinner, tea and the visiting problems—Oh dear!" If any woman began each day in this manner there would soon be no home to puzzle over, nor wives to puzzle. But most sensible women just do the duty that lies next and leave the problems to those who have nothing else to do.

A MINISTER'S SALARY.

IN VIEW of the question as to the high cost of living, which is just now under discussion, a writer in the Presbyterian draws up the following estimate of the yearly expenditure of a minister, where there is two of a family:—

Diet, $1 per day, per year, $365; fuel, $90; stationery and postage, $25; telephone, $20; telephone expenses, $5; buggy wear and tear, harness, etc., $15; horse keep, $50; church offerings, $60; furniture, wear and tear, $20; magazines and newspapers, $15; books, $35; clothing, $200; clothing, home sundries, $20; boots and shoes, $60; insurance on effects, $10; insurance on life, $50; barber bill, $25; laundry bill, $15; holiday, two weeks, $25; presbytery meetings, semi-annually, $20; hired help, $180; medicine and doctor's bills, $35. Total, $1,340.

The writer adds that some are leaving the ministry because, with a large family, they find it "impossible to be spiritual when they cannot honestly meet their just debts."

Some of the items in the list will be regarded as a little extravagant. Most ministers even with "a large family" would regard themselves as passing rich on nine-hundred dollars a year.

MARCHING ORDERS.

THE FOLLOWING is the sort of thing Sir Wilfrid "dopes" his followers with, this is the peroration of his speech at Hamilton:

"Let my last word be this: Let us all together, old and young, join hands, gird our lions, buckle on our armor, furl our standard, and go forward together in services, in earnest, whole hearted unselfish service for Canada first, Canada last, and Canada forever."

Sir Wilfrid is a little unreasonable, first he tells his stalwarts to join hands and then expects them to gird their loins—that is, "brace up"—buckle on their armor and unfurl the standard. We submit that the above orders are unreasonable. They remind us of a man who once tried to arouse the efforts of a congregation by saying: "Now brethren, let us all put our shoulders to the wheel and stand back to back!" Sir Wilfrid should take military lessons from the Honorable Sam.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

REUBEN E. TRUAX, who won South Bruce by-election for the Liberals, is now called upon to answer charges of personal bribery and corruption. This gentleman was The Globe's favorite champion, whom that paper said wielded a "true axe," the axe has not yet fallen and may possibly come down on the neck of The Globe.

MR. ANDREW CARNEGIE'S persistent beneficence has at last brought him to poverty, not that he is begging in the streets of London, nor has he taken to work. He has still a few million dollars left to keep him from the poorhouse.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

"'And now we'll go home,' said the mother at church, just before the sermon, thinking her little girl would be tired.

"'No, not yet, mummie,' replied the child; 'I so want to see the beggars go round.'"

Dan Crawford and Literature.

(British Weekly.)

Speaking at a crowded meeting of the Presbyterian Women's Foreign Mission Society in Philadelphia, Mr. Crawford deplored the many books and commentaries in use, and thanked God that he was shut off "from that miserable thing called literature in Africa. He had only his Bible, the book with a million eyes."

God Was Responsible.

The Mail.

On her one hundredth birthday to-day Mrs. Margaret Kiddney received from Irving Fisher, professor of political economy at Yale University, a letter asking her to inform him as to what longevity.

"How foolish he is," exclaimed Mrs. Kiddney. "I'm not responsible for living so long."

Mrs. Kiddney prepared yesterday, with the aid of her sister, Mrs. Annie Garbrant, 87 years old, a Thanksgiving dinner for relatives and other guests.

The First Hunger-Striker.

Westminster Gazette.

Who first set the example of a hunger-strike? A correspondent of the New York Evening Post has discovered that this distinction belongs to Cleopatra—at any rate, according to Shakespear's version of her story. On her capture by Proculeius, Shakespeare makes her say.

> Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir;
> If idle talk will once be necessary,
> I'll not sleep, neither: This mortal house
> I'll ruin,
> Do Caesar what he can. Know, sir, that I > Will not wait pinion'd at your master's > court.

Meat, of course, in Shakespeare's day meant food in general, so the vegetarian need not chortle over this passage.

Turn O' The Tide.

The tide flows in to the harbor—
The bold tide, the gold tide, the flood of the sunlit sea—
Are swinging and slanting their prows to the ocean panting
To lift their winds to the wild wide air
And venture a voyage they know not where—
To fly away and be free!

The tide runs out of the harbor—
The slow tide, the low tide, the ebb of the moonlit bay—
And the little ships rocking at anchor
Are rounding and turning their bows to the landward yearning
To breathe the breath of the warm sweet strand
And rest in the sight of the high hill land—
To hold their haven and stay!

My heart goes round with the vessels—
My wild heart, my child heart, in love with the sea and land—
And the turning o' the tide passes through it,
In rising and falling with mystical currents, calling
At morn a range where the far waves foam,
At night to a harbor in love's true home,
With the hearts that understand!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editor of The Review:

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me space in your valuable paper for a few remarks on the straw man medical inspection in schools.

I note with interest your editorial commenting on Dr. Struthers' remarks. It is pleasing to find that there are some editors capable of seeing beyond the surface. As you intimate, what is to become of our manhood and womanhood if the responsibility of the parents is to be taken away and put up to a few medical physicians. Yet, that is the real issue. I do not think for one moment that the able doctor intended making that point so clear.

This agitation for school inspection is only a means to an end. The real object is to educate the people into the idea that they know only what medical science teaches, and finally to get a Federal Health Bureau, then the people will be slaves to medical laws.

It is pleasing to know that many of our best physicians are opposed to this course. A great many of the arguments in favor of medical control come from what is known as the American Medical Trust. It is not surprising that many medical doctors uphold this course, because it is in their business interests to do so, therefore we expect him to put forth his best plea for medical influence and control.

This medical scheme costs something. What are the results in other places? Are the people of Kingston, even with their lime stone and fresh air right off Lake Ontario, any healthier than the Peterboro people? We might be original and teach the others something new, instead of following as sheep to the slaughter.

The writer knows people in both Toronto and Kingston, some of whom are school teachers, who have had practical experience with this inspection business and who are not at all backward in denouncing it as a farce.

We would not protest so strongly if it ended with the schools but when we realize that this lecturing, here a little, there a little, is but the driving of the wedge of medical trust to get control we feel that we, as true citizens, should not be asleep at our post of duty. With all our boast of civilization, education and christianity, parents and school teachers do not know how to blow their nose, as Dr. Struthers says, it does seem a pity to be sending money to heathen lands while we are in such darkness. This all knowing medical science used to tell us catarrh came from colds not attended to in time, that is, before one takes cold; then again it used to tell us consumption was inherited. Notwithstanding, one of our doctors, lecturing on that memorable tuberculosis Sunday, said it was not inherited. Science according to Webster, is "Knowledge, or certain knowledge" or "understanding of truth." Does truth change? Surely we are not heathenish enough to put our heads under the yoke of a science which is one theory today and another tomorrow.

Thanking you in advance, yours sincerely,

OBSERVER.

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—In support of your recent editorial article on Medical Inspection and Parental Responsibility, let me quote a leading authority on thes ubject—J. Sim Wallace, M.D.D. Sc., L.D.S., Hon. Dental Surgeon west-end hospital for nervous diseases and Dental Surgeon National Dental Hospital, London. Dr. Wallace does not believe in the theory that the state can supplant the parent in he care of and responsibility for the health of the child, he says: "The inspection of school children's teeth by a qualifitd dental surgeon would be of much use, but my belief in the compel success of such inspection as a means of preventing dental torubles, is not very great. The teeth are most liable to be attacked by caries before the child goes to school, and by the age of five many children are amply supplied with carious teeth and septic roots which seriously jeopardize development, if indeed they have not already more or less ruined the constitution. Thus it is that the natural method of combating the troubles will always remain the most important. Mothers ought to know or learn how to rear, and more especially to feed, their children. I do not seriously propose this, but I believe it will soon be seriously proposed that before a woman shall be granted a certificate of marriage, she will be required to pass an examination on hygiene and dietetics. Perhaps a political agitation on the subject might have a beneficial moral effect. Unfortunately there seems to be but little organized desire on the part of the public to know how to prevent the disease, and no inducement is given to medical men to investigate the subject. Doctors and dentists are seldom consulted on how to prevent disease. They are consulted and paid for their skill in curing it, and naturally devote their best attention to that for which they are paid. Perhaps a society for the prevention of disease might do much good.

Another point of importance is the formation of healthy ideals. At present the ideals are weak and unwholesome. A mother's intention or ideal nowadays is to avoid giving her child any food which it will be unable to digest, and so it is kept on what is essentially an infant's diet for years after it should have been able to eat practically anything. Unfortunately, this ideal is often apparently encouraged by the medical practitioner."

Yours truly,
A PARENT.

In the Enemy's Uniform

A Story of Secret Service and Hairbreadth Escapes

By THOMAS R. DEAN

When I was serving with my regiment, the —th Pennsylvania cavalry, in the Army of the Potomac a portion of my company was detailed to serve as General Gregory's escort, and I was placed in command. We were separated from the regiment, making our camps with the headquarters camps, and were under the general's direct command. We furnished him with orderlies and messengers, performed any scouting or other service he required and while campaigning acted as his bodyguard.

One day I was directed to report in person to the general in his tent. He told me that a company of Confederates had ridden right into our lines, thinking we were their friends, and had been captured. He was in need of information as to where the enemy were, what force they had and what they were doing. The country people—his only source of information—were in sympathy with the Confederates and utterly unreliable. He had conceived the idea of sending out a scouting party right into the enemy's camps if necessary dressed in the uniform of the captured Confederates, to bring him the information he desired and had sent for me to consult about the matter.

Generals don't usually consult with the lieutenants commanding their body guard, but a commander cannot order a subordinate on secret service. For that purpose volunteers are called for. General Gregory asked me if I would be willing to act on his plan, and, although I knew that a Yankee soldier caught within the enemy's lines in his uniform would be hanged for a spy, I consented to perform the service. He sent me back to the escort to call for a dozen volunteers, which I had no difficulty in obtaining. Then I returned to him for instructions.

After an hour's talk with the general over crude maps of the vicinity furnished by Union citizens, during which I was informed that the men whose uniforms we were to use belonged to the —th North Carolina cavalry, I went back to camp, and the uniforms and side arms were sent there by the general's order. I chose the uniform of a sergeant rather than an officer, since the former is not so prominent as the latter and less likely to be identified. My men all dressed as privates, using arms marked "C. S. A." and horses branded with the same letters.

A Union citizen guided us to a wooded hill, from which we could look down on the camp of a brigade of Confederates. It was after taps, and the tents of the enlisted men were in darkness within, though they were bathed in the light of a moon that was nearly full. Here and there a candle was burning in an officer's tent, and a cluster of tents standing by themselves, most of them containing lights, evidently constituted the headquarters of the commanding officer and his staff. I remained awake till all the lights had been put out, then lay down with my head on the root of a tree for a few hours' sleep.

Shortly before sunrise we descended from the hill and rode leisurely along the road to the camp. I waited till I had seen the guard relieved and the new sentinels were quietly walking their beats. Approaching the man whose beat lay across the road, he challenged us.

"Who comes there?"

"Dispatch bearers on our way southward," was my reply.

Seeing we wore the gray, he passed us, and we rode through the camp, attracting no especial attention.

I believed the brigade we had passed through to contain about 3,000 men, with a battery of artillery and a battalion of cavalry. They were evidently a detached force, stationed on the road between the hills to prevent the passage of an enemy. I charged every man of my command to remember this, for no one could tell which of us would get back with the information.

About a mile south of the brigade the road turned to the eastward and the country opened up. The level ground was covered with different camps of the enemy, but we were not obliged to ride through any of them and gave them all a wide berth. Whenever we saw a man or body of men coming, if we could turn out of their way without seeming to do so purposely to avoid them we debouched. But most of those we met did not know us and had no reason to inquire who we were.

I saw a cloud of dust ahead and when I couldn't get a glimpse of what was beneath it made up my mind that it was kicked up by a general and his staff. I looked about for a wood or some other place in which to avoid a meeting, but there was nothing at hand. I could not turn aside without letting down the rails of a fence which extended on either side, so I was obliged to go forward and run the risk of being questioned.

Sure enough, those we met were a general with his staff. He reined in and asked who we were. I told him that we were of the —th North Carolina cavalry. Then he asked what we were doing away from our regiment, and I told him the company to which we belonged had been captured, but we, having been detached on a reconnoitering expedition, had fortunately not been taken.

"Where are you going now?" he asked.

"We are going on a roundabout course to rejoin our regiment."

I watched the general, holding my breath in terror lest he pursue his inquiries to a point beyond my knowledge. He thought awhile, then asked me to what corps I belonged. I knew the names of several of the generals in the Union front and named one of them. Then my questioner asked me to name my division and brigade commander, and I "couldn't remember."

"You men are stragglers," he said in reply, "and likely bent on pillaging or some other reprehensible conduct. I consider it my duty to send you back to your command."

Our hearts sank within us. When returned to the regiment to which we claimed to belong we would be proved impostors and our real identity would come out. The officer had but a dozen men in his escort, but needed no large force to send with us, for any resistance would be mutiny, and mutiny is punishable with death. He detailed a corporal and four men to see that we returned to our command and rode on.

Had we not been in the enemy's lines with a halter hanging over us the situation would have been laughable. Five unsuspecting Confederates were intrusted with guarding a dozen daring men who would rather die by a bullet than a rope. I said nothing to my men nor they to me. We rode meekly between the corporal and two of his men in front of us and two bringing up the rear. But by a look I signed to my subordinates to remain submissive till I should assume the initiative.

It behooved me to make a break for life before being returned to our supposed command. I kept my eyes open and presently saw a large field of tents a short distance ahead. On leaving our guards we must go through a cornfield to a wood on the other side of the field. I did not long delay action, for I saw a troop of cavalry coming on the road before us.

"Corporal," I said, "we're bearing important dispatches from the commander in chief and don't propose to be interrupted. We're going to leave you, and you may as well let us go, for if you fire on us we shall return your fire."

With that I put spurs to my horse, calling on my men to follow me. The corporal and his men were so surprised that they stood paralyzed till we had got several hundred feet away, then gave chase, firing over our heads as they came. As bad luck would have it, the horse of Bob Robbins, one of my men, stumbled and fell, shooting his rider over his head. I turned and rode back to him, but too late. The troopers were on him, and my other men had got so far away that if I attempted to save Robbins I would be captured myself. So I fled.

As for the five Confederates, we saw nothing more of them. We had seen all of the enemy we cared to see and were eager to get back to camp. But every way we turned we encountered the enemy, and, since we were now outlawed, we dare not meet them. We hid in a thick wood during the afternoon, hoping to make our way to our own lines under cover of the night. We lighted a bivouac fire and lay down. So long as we could pass for Confederates we were in no danger, but our narrow escape from detection had got on our nerves. None of us slept since we expected to move at dawn.

About midnight we heard a movement in the underbrush, and suddenly out of the darkness came Robbins. He had been taken to the provost marshal and questioned till he was so wound up that he broke down and confessed himself to be a Yankee soldier. He was sent under guard after dark to general headquarters and on the way broke from those in charge of him. In the darkness he had gained the wood we were in and came upon us accidentally.

His coming brought a new danger, for he had confessed himself a spy and would incriminate us. However, as soon as it was dawn we mounted our horses, one of the men taking Robbins up behind him, and started to make our way back to our lines. We were not far from them, but were obliged to go a very roundabout way. During our travels we suddenly descried a body of Confederate cavalry about our own strength riding toward us.

Again the halter tightened about our necks, and we prepared to fight desperately for our lives. The commander, a young second lieutenant, rode up to us, and I saw at once that he had not met us before.

"A spy has escaped, and we are looking for him. Have you seen anything of him?"

I was about to reply in the negative when I noticed him looking steadily at Robbins. I changed my tactics.

"Seen him!" I exclaimed. "We've got him."

"Good."

"We're taking him to our general."

"I'll relieve you and take him to mine."

"No, you won't. We made the capture and propose to get the credit of it. Forward!"

We rode on, leaving the young officer gaping at us. Presently, turning, I saw him riding in another direction.

We got safely back to camp and gave the general the result of our reconnoissance.

"Your Confederate uniform," he said, "was an element of strength and at the same time an element of weakness."

Paderewski Warned Away.

CHICAGO, Dec. 8.—Six detectives Saturday night guarded Ignace Jan Paderewski, the Polish pianist, who received letters threatening his life if he kept his Chicago engagements. The letters were mailed him when he was in St. Louis and promised revenge for his alleged support of an anti-Jewish newspaper at Warsaw. The writer said he would place a bomb beneath the pianist's private car.

Two detectives accompanied Paderewski when he left his car and remained with him until he returned. A half dozen of them were stationed about the car during the night.

From the State of Utah

By F. A. MITCHEL

M. De Gournay, a citizen of Paris, was sitting in his club reading a newspaper when a young man approached him and said:

"Monsieur, pardon me for interrupting your reading, but I have a request to make of you. I am a citizen of the United States—Utah is where I hail from—and I have made a fortune in cattle, mines, merchandising—in short, by every means except selling liquor over the bar. I came here to see Europe. At first everything seemed old fashioned, but in time I got used to your ways, and now I like them first rate, even to the way you commit matrimony."

De Gournay looked up at the speaker as he would at a curious kind of animal in a menagerie. The American proceeded:

"When we on the other side of the big salt lake make up our minds to do a thing in any other way than our own we never try to mix the two methods. I have a proposition to make, and I'm going to make it on the French plan. The other night at the American embassy I met one of your daughters. I have concluded to make you a proposition for her hand."

Whatever were De Gournay's feelings at this blunt announcement he did not give way to them. He stared at the speaker in a sort of wonder for awhile, then said with French suavity:

"And you consider, monsieur, that you have adopted our method of opening a matrimonial negotiation?"

"I will admit that there is an American flavor to it—I mean a Rocky mountain aroma."

"Decidedly," said the Frenchman in well modulated tones, while he kept his eyes fixed on his interviewer, evidently studying him.

Jack Henderson's face bespoke that free, uncultured frankness indigenous to a new country. There was not a diplomatic feature, not a trace of meanness in it. De Gournay had five daughters and not enough property to give even one of them a dowry. This brusque proposal was no more to his taste than would have been the touch of the prickly cactus among which the westerner had lived. Nevertheless he did not propose to turn it down until he had discovered what there was in it.

He accepted Mr. Henderson's card and gave him permission to submit a few references—Americans in Paris, who knew all about him.

But the Frenchman's exterior did not correspond with his interior. Every American abroad is supposed to be worth millions, and De Gournay, as has been said, had five maidens to marry off. While looking with one eye at his newspaper he was watching the American's retreating figure with the other, and later, when he saw Jack leave the club, he arose from his seat, threw off his assumed indifference and started out on a still hunt to find out all he could learn about the suitor.

Two things he learned were eminently satisfactory—Henderson had made a large fortune, and his character was excellent. Nothing detrimental turned up. After a lot of red tape, as Henderson called it, he was permitted to call at De Gournay's home and have a look at the young lady he had applied for, Mlle. Estelle, in presence of her father and mother and three of her sisters. Jack declared when questioned about the visit that there was not as much chance for spooning as if the girl had been set up on the divide and he given a job of driving a mule team in the canyon.

After a long delay, followed by a business meeting between M. De Gournay, Jack Henderson and two notaries, at which Jack settled $500,000 on his bride to be, the couple were married at 10 o'clock in the morning by a maire, at 11 in a church and at 12 sat down to a wedding breakfast.

Jack was very happy beside his bride, whom he had never met socially but once, when a lackey entered the room and handed her father a note. De Gournay paled, and the features of his face otherwise indicated that he had received a blow. Arising from the table, he left the room, and soon after the mother took the bride away also.

Jack saw that something had gone wrong, but kept his seat till the guests began to take their departure, when he, too, arose and went out to learn what had become of his bride. A servant informed him that she had left the house with her mother. Jack, astonished, asked for his father-in-law and was informed that he would find him in the library. Thither went the groom, to see De Gournay pacing back and forth in a fury.

"What's up?" inquired Jack.

"How did you dare impose upon me as you have done?" cried the angry Frenchman. "But I am rightly served, to trust anything that comes from barbarous America. Go away from this house and never come here again. As for my daughter, she will spend the rest of her life in a convent. Go!"

Jack had once been fired on by Indians and stood in the way of a herd of stampeded cattle at the same time. But he liked it better than this.

"Please explain, monsieur," he said.

"I have only since your wedding been informed that the people of Utah have as many wives as they like. My daughter shall not enter your harem."

It was not till evening that Jack, having explained that he was not a Mormon, obtained his bride.

A WARNING TO CHILDREN

Lindell Power, the eleven-year-old son of Constable Power, of Toronto, is in the Sick Children's Hospital in a serious condition, as the result of severe burns which he sustained when his night clothing caught fire in the kitchen of his home at 76 Osborn Street. Constable Power, who beat out the flames, and saved the lad from certain death, was also badly burned about the hands.

The lad had gone down to the kitchen in his nightgown and had seated himself in front of the stove to warm himself. It appears that he had placed a piece of newspaper close to the stove to shield the heat from his legs, when the paper caught fire, and in a moment the flames had spread to his night clothes. His father rushed into the kitchen and beat out the fire with his hands after which an ambulance rushed the lad to the hospital.

WORK

Let me but do my work from day to day;
In field or forest, at the desk or loom,
In roaring market place or tranquil room,
Let me but find it in my heart to say,
When vagrant wishes beckon me astray;
"This is my work, my blessing, not my doom;
Of all who live, I am the one by whom
This work can best be done, in the right way."

Then shall I see it, not too great, nor small,
To suit my spirit and to prove my powers;
Then shall I cheerful greet the laboring hours,
And cheerful turn when the long shadows fall
At eventide, to play and love and rest,
Because I know for me my work is best.

—Henry Van Dyke.

HIT BY A BULLET

TORONTO, Dec. 8.—While handling a loaded 32-calibre revolver at his home at 211 Wallace avenue yesterday afternoon, Samuel Taylor, aged 21, accidentally discharged the weapon, the bullet entering his left shoulder and traveling upwards, coming out at the left side of his neck.

He was attended by Dr. Morgan, 817 Lansdowne avenue, and taken to the Western Hospital in the doctor's motor car, where he is reported to be in a bad condition.

Vision of a Cross.

A remarkable occurrence is reported in connection with the death of Mrs. Kate Lafrance, aged seventy, who passed away at the Kingston General Hospital recently. Attendants say that early in the morning the image of a cross could be distinctly seen at her bedside. Mrs. Lafrance died the same evening. The cross was about eighteen by twelve inches and was visible for only a brief period. There was nothing in the sick room at the time to give such an impression.

AGED CARDINAL DIES

Mgr. Luigi Oreglia, Was Dean of the Sacred College at Rome

ROME, Dec. 8.—Cardinal Luigi Oreglia, dean of the Sacred College, died here Friday of pneumonia. He was 85 years old and was the only surviving cardinal created by Pope Pius IX.

Luigi Oreglia Di Santo Stefano was head of the cardinal bishops or dean of Sacred College. He was born at Bene Vagienna, diocese of Mondovi, on July 9, 1828. He was created and proclaimed a cardinal by Pope Pius IX. on Dec. 22, 1873. He was bishop of Ostia and Velletri, arch chancellor of the Roman University and prefect of the congregation of ceremonies.

The pope was deeply grieved when told Saturday morning that Cardinal Luigi Oreglia Di Santo Stefano Aloysius had passed away. Although the aged cardinal's death had been expected, the Pope sustained a shock when Monsignor Giovanni Bressan informed him as cautiously as possible of the occurrence.

"Arson" Operator Convicted.

CHICAGO, Dec. 8.—The seventh conviction in the "arson ring" trials here was obtained Saturday when Joseph Clarke, a fire insurance adjuster, was convicted of burning to defraud. Clarke was found guilty of hiring John Danies, a confessed incendiary, to set fire to a business building here

What the Weather Costs.

It is very aged, that western notice: "Don't Shoot the Organist. He's Doing the Best He Knows How." By the same token, don't blame the newspapers for the weather forecasts. They are doing the best they can by printing the copy supplied by the government, and the government is spending on its weather service the tidy sum of $1,019,680 a year—a nice little increase compared with 1870, when the work was begun on $20,000. Of course there are glaring failures, but on the average the accuracy of the prognostications has very materially improved.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The President's Niece to Be an Actress.

MRS. MARGARET HOWE.

Mrs. Margaret Howe, wife of Dr. George Howe and a favorite niece of President Wilson, has decided to sacrifice four years of gayety and unalloyed pleasure at the national capital for a life of drudgery and hardship on the stage.

Miss Howe, as this beautiful young woman is now known professionally, recently appeared as Marie in a dramatization of Longfellow's immortal poem "Evangeline" at a New York theater. While the part in no way taxed her abilities, she made the most of her opportunities. In fact, her poses and complete mastery of silent expressions were such that many an actress of far greater renown might seriously covet.

As Miss Margaret Smyth Flinn she was one of the most admired and beautiful girls in the south. Her home, in Columbia, S. C., was noted for its delightful hospitality and brilliant social functions, which culminated in her marriage into the White House family a short while ago.

Her husband's professional work as a physician being at Chapel Hill, N. C., her fame as a hostess in that town became widely known, she and her youthful husband entertaining many of the foremost men and women of the day, particularly those identified with literary and artistic spheres.

Miss Howe's ambition and enthusiasm to make a career for herself on the stage were so sincere that her husband and family readily consented to her recent appearance on the boards.

In all events, if Miss Howe pursues her career with discretion and intelligence and does not permit her pretty head to become turned through an overdose of flattery and admiration, it is safe to chronicle a brilliant artistic future for this daughter of the south.

Some Helpful "Don'ts."

If you have a strong point in your character don't make it a weakness by admiring it too much.

If you are blessed with a good memory don't weaken it by cherishing things against people.

Don't tell little lies. If you must be untruthful tell big ones and become known as a statistician.

Don't keep a diary. Some one might produce it when your enemies are trying to prove you are insane.

Don't put so much hope on the new thought that you slight the importance of the good old second thought.

Don't forget when the trouble you fear most comes to you it will be much easier to bear than you imagine.

Don't forget that next week you may be looking back with great regret because you didn't show greater appreciation of today.

Don't forget that every task you neglect that you may take a vacation will meet you at the station with all its relatives and friends when you get back.

Don't sit in idleness waiting for your ship to come in. You will be luckier than most people if when it finally comes in the silent boatman isn't in charge.

Don't forget that if a little fairy should appear and make visible the burdens all are carrying on their backs yours seem small and trivial in comparison with most.

Will Man Dispose and Woman Propose?

Over in Stockholm a dreadful discussion is raging because women wish to be given the right to propose. A statement of Dr. Paul S. Hunter of the Wisconsin board of health to the effect that woman is prior to man after all seems to give the much sought privilege to the woman. If Dr. Hunter's statement is scientifically correct, as he says it is, woman existed on this earth ages before man. Eve lived in the garden of Eden a great many years before Adam appeared, and therefore women can reverse the old situation, for trouble only began when man was made.

"The female sex existed alone on this earth for ages," says Dr. Hunter. "When the male came he came as an offshoot of the female, and, although for ages the great processes of life had gone on without him, he began to claim priority for himself as soon as he developed a physique strong enough to force his demand. He has been telling these stories about himself and his great superiority until today, but now science can disprove his claim."

The average person wonders about the future stand of science toward woman's right to propose. If woman is man's superior (as she undoubtedly is or is not) she should certainly manage her own matrimonial ventures. A great many women would propose more gracefully and more discreetly than some men, but the sad things that may happen to the impressionable weaker sex (in the light of the new discovery) when they are unable to forbid a lady to marry them can be pictured. It is consoling to think that the poor abstracted scientists will be least able to resist the danger that they have brought upon themselves.

Tunis in 1912 last year grew 368,548 acres of sugar beets.

THE SAD MARCH HOME

Toronto Star

Scott's men stood the test. Evans collapsed a little before his comrades and Oates died before Scott, Wilson and Bowers. But even the physical inequality was very slight. In good temper, unselfishness and courage there was no failure.

No doubt it was a terrible disappointment to these men to find that they had been beaten in the race to the Pole by the Amundsen party, although they accepted the defeat gamely. There are few passages in literature so tragic, so heartrendering, as the story of the slow march home, with the growing consciousness that death was inevitable.

Some engagements are announced by the mother and denounced by the father.

TOO MUCH HEAT CAUSED SMALL FIRE ON HART AVE

Firemen Had Two Runs to Property of Warren Hall

At ten o'clock this morning, the firemen received a call from the residence of Mr. Warren Hall, 677 Water Street. A chimney fire was the cause, and the blaze was easily extinguished.

They had just returned from this fire when they received another telephone call, this time from near the C. G. E. works. Mr. Bertie Mason who resides at 157 Hart Ave., had a fire in the furnace and when the register became heated, it set fire to the wood work.

Boys Gave Assistance

Some boys in the neighborhood kept the flames in check till the brigade arrived and it was then extinguished by means of a chemical. The damage amounted to some $50.00.

Strange to state, the house was owned by Mr. Warren Hall, thus making two trips to the property of Mr. Hall within an hour.

Some very long and hard runs this past few days have put the fire horses a trifle under the weather. Two of them are on the sick list. The chief is living in hopes that this time next year all trouble of this sort will be overcome through the medium of a much needed chemical engine.

The presentation was made by Mr. J. C. Kells of Millbrook, assisted by Mr. A. A. Colwell of Newcastle, and Mr. Norman McGill, of Cavan.

MINIMUM AGE LIMIT IS CHANGED

Boys Taking Confirmation Eligible for Membership.

At the regular meeting of the Sacred Heart T.A.S. yesterday, the nominations of officers for the ensuing year took place. The elections will be held at the next meeting, December 21st.

The Society changed the minimum age for members. Hitherto, all members had to be over 16 years of age but after some discussion it was carried unanimously that all boys who have made their Confirmation be eligible for membership. This will no doubt bring forth results not only now but in the coming generation. Father O'Brien remarked that the idea was to get the young boys, who so soon will be the men of the parish, imbued with a temperance spirit.

The rink committee reports that all is in readiness for the cold weather. The rink this year will be 150 feet by 85 feet, which should give a very fine sheet of ice. It will be lighted by rows of incadescent lamps, thus improving the lighting system.

POSTAL EMPLOYES STICK TO THE ORIGINAL DEMAND

With a Final Warning to the Government Leaders of the Dissaffected Men Prepare to Take a Vote on the Proposal to Strike—Trouble Involves 100,000 Persons

LEICESTER, Eng., Dec. 8. — The threatened strike at Christmas of the Government's postal and telegraph employes, numbering nearly 100,000 men, probably will be averted, but the movement will be only postponed, as a result of the action of a conference in which are participating 200 delegates representing 22,000 members of the various postal organizations who met here yesterday.

The delegates adopted a resolution rejecting the report of the Government commission recommending a slight increase in the salaries of the employes. At the same time they pledged themselves to push their original demand for a 15 per cent. increase of wages throughout the service.

The strike proposed was debated at length and the meeting finally decided to leave the decision to a general vote of the members of the organizations.

A proposal that the postal organizations should unite with the miners' and railwaymen's and the transport workers' unions was discussed and met with much favor among the delegates. The conference decided to oppose the Government candidates at all Parliamentary elections until the demands of the postal employes are acceded to and the delegates decided to select four candidates to contest several constitutencies on the platform of improving the conditions under which the postal employes work.

"We are very near a parting of the ways," said Mr. McCarthy, the chairman, in opening the conference. "I hope sincerely the Government will not persist in forcing our hands. We are going forward unflinchingly to our goal. I ask you to weigh well your words and your decisions and when the time comes to translate those words and those decisions into action, and to act with swiftness, determination and courage.

There has been much agitation among the postal employes for a general strike at Christmas time, while the postal work is heaviest and most important, but yesterday's action of the conference makes necessary a general vote of the employes on the strike question and it is doubtful whether a strike can be organized in time to become effective by Christmas time.

The postal employes base their demands for an increase of pay largely on the argument that the postal service yields to the Government great profits in which the workers should have a larger share.

The Postmaster-General, Herbert Samuel, in his last interview with the leaders of the postal employes organization, threatened that if there was a strike all the employes who quit their work would be permanently discharged, but the men hope to be able to make a political issue of their demands and to gain the support of the large trades unions.

The Government is making tentative arrangements to enlist the services of military telegraphers to take the place of strikers in case of need as the French Government did during the great railroad strike in that country in October, 1916.

The postal employes unions are fifteen in number, and have a membership of about 97,000. They comprise employes of the postal, telegraphic and telephonic services, all of which are controlled by the Government.

NEEDLE GANG BUSY

New Jersey Is Scene of Outrages in Pictures Theatres.

NEWARK, N.J., Dec. 8.—Federal as well as state authorities are likely to take a hand in the investigation of the poison needle mystery growing out of the experiences of Mrs. Marjorie Graff in a moving picture theatre two days ago. So far the only arrest is that of the young South American, Esmand Megaro, who is held in $20,000 bail on an assault charge made by Mrs. Graff, after a man seated near her in a box jabbed a needle into her arm, and she was seized with drowsiness. The cases of five young woman reported to have been victims of experiences similar to those of Mrs. Graff are being investigated by the police of this city, however, and the attention of the federal authorities here has been brought to the Graff case in connection with the enquiry into several white slave cases.

Court-Martial For Officer.

BERLIN, Dec. 8.—Lieut. Baron Von Forstner, according to a report reaching here, is to be tried by court-martial for wounding a lame shoemaker on Dec. 2 at Zabern, Alsace, during street disturbances. It was Lieut. Von Forstner who started the recent trouble between the troops and civilians at Zabern by making scornful remarks to the citizens when he addressed the recruits of his company some time previously.

Seventeen huge Socialist meetings were held yesterday and were addressed by members of the Reichstag. A protest was recorded against "military anarchy versus constitutional rights." Order was maintained at all the meetings.

ATTACKED PRISONER

Two Throw Acids Upon Man In Jail —Mounted Police on Trail.

KERROBERT, Sask., Dec. 8.—Friday the local jail was broken into by two men and a prisoner named Pettit, who was recently brought back from Toronto, was attacked, and a mixture of sulphuric acid and other corrosives thrown on him. He was left unconscious, but revived later and made his way to a Mounted Police detachment. He is now in the hospital suffering from burns and concussion of the brain. The mounted police have taken up the chase.

Pettit has had his trial postponed. It is believed that some of the men implicated in the death of several horses at Luseland attacked Pettit, fearing disclosures against them.

Airship Lost In Fog.

HAMBURG, Dec. 8.—The airship Sachsen arrived here from Dresden in a dense fog yesterday afternoon and was unable to find a landing place although skyrockets were fired. After cruising for a time over the city the pilot completely lost his bearings and finally descended at Quickborn, twenty miles to the north. In landing the Sachsen tore down the telegraph wires over a long stretch.

Negro Boy Arrested.

HALIFAX, Dec. 8.—George Ash, colored, 17 years of age, was committed for trial Saturday on a charge of murder. The victim was John Ruddick, another colored boy, who was shot on Nov. 15. It was claimed at the time that the shooting was accidental, but since then, it is said, incriminating evidence has been gathered against Ash.

Aimed at Wagon, Hit Horse.

BROCKVILLE, Dec. 8.—One of a party of four boys, on a shooting expedition just outside the corporation limits, took a pop at a pasing delivery wagon with a 32-calibre rifle. He aimed at the tailboard but the bullet went wide of the mark and lodged in the leg of the horse, which is thought to be permanently injured.

Milk Strike Started.

BERLIN, Ont., Dec. 8.—A milk strike was started Saturday morning in this city, as ordered by Mayor Euler. The majority of the milk dealers report a few patrons having quit their supply until the price is reduced, but the strike was not general. It is expected, however, by the special committee of the City Council that a large number of citizens will participate in the strike. Milk vendors do not anticipate losing much trade, as they claim a large number of their patrons will not go very many days without milk. They have no intention of reducing the price as is desired by the civic authorities.

RHEUMA DRIVES OUT RHEUMATISM

After 25 Years of Misery, this Man Walks, Works and Feels Fine Again

Right away—the first day you start to take RHEUMA—the Uric Acid poison begins to dissolve and dissolve and leave the sore joints and muscles. Its action is little less than magical.

RHEUMA works so speedily you actually can feel the Rheumatism leaving the body. A bottle costs but 50 cents and if you are not satisfied, the Warne Drug Company will return your money. Read this;

"I wish to state to you the facts and nothing but the facts. I bless the day a friend brought me a 50 cent bottle of RHEUMA. I used one-half of it and it did me more good than all the other medicines I ever tried. I had been afflicted with Rheumatism all over my body for more than 25 years. I could not walk, and was a broken-down man. During that time I spent a small fortune, trying to get rid of the horrible disease, but without help. However, RHEUMA reached my case and I thank God I can again use my feet and do my work.

"Before taking your medicine I was staying with a daughter on her farm, and despite her loving efforts to tempt my appetite I could not eat. After I had taken RHEUMA two days my appetite returned. Yours for prosperity."—Prof. H. H. Kelling, 7 S. Ninth St., Richmond, Ind., Oct. 10, 1913.

POPULARIZED into conventionality, the [illegible] fashionable minaret tunic is now a frequent style detail of the up to date three piece suit. Its lower edge often harmonizes in line and curve with the lower edge of the coat. The coat is often of a different material from the robe; it is seldom, however, of another color this season. The waist, frequently of another color from the suit, often matches the coat lining.

Though eccentricity in dress is rampant and curious styles are [illegible] all about us in a way that points toward a decided fashion change in the near future, there are any number of conservative fashions worn at the smart afternoon teas, theatre matinées or concerts. Of such costumes the three piece suit of velvet seems to be the favorite material. Plain it is sometimes, but more often it is combined with brocade, figured or striped, the latter ribbed and having a corduroy appearance. With this, satin and charmeuse are combined to make the delightfully stylish gown worn with coats or mantles of plain or figured velvet or brocade. Most of the coats fasten well up around the neck with a finishing straight or rolled collar of fur and straight narrow band cuffs, even if the fur is used nowhere else on the costume. Fur often hems the tunic edges when they are included in the dress design.

Coats of three piece suits are long and short; both lengths are equally in style. The shorter length is perhaps the more extreme fashion. Those reaching to or below the knees are more conservative in type and line, in spite of the intricate tailoring often displayed in the cut. The new short bolero coats are very like zouave jackets in shape and are the latest coat innovations. They are generally accompanied by tunic skirted dresses whose corsage fronts display a cascade of filmy frills that peeps invitingly out from between the negligently open bolero fronts.

The touch of fur that seems absolutely necessary to the styles this season also adorns most of the three piece suits. It may be only the collar and cuff piece already mentioned, added perhaps at the very last moment when the suit bought in the shop does not happen to contain this detail. To go to the other extreme, the foundation skirt may be so deeply hemmed with fur that when the coat is donned the dress is apparently made of it. The cloth that is made to imitate caracul is used in place of fur and the new broadtail fabric is quite as effective.

Because they are varied in style, the three piece suits shown here are especially interesting, in that they are suited to different types of figures. In one, shown in two views, with and without a coat, the tunic is omitted. The satin skirt is draped up to a little apron panel in front that is like the corsage material. The suit consists of a vanilla brown satin skirt combined with a cream colored chiffon waist covered with old blue design. The coat is of the same vanilla brown, but is a brocaded material—a ground work of ottoman with a crinkly satin serpentine figure. Intricate in cut, the coat has a double skirted effect, and a soft wide satin sash of the brown satin folds diagonally across the front, covering the fastening. The corsage has a wired ruche of ivory tinted lace, the coat one of the new rolled revers trimmed with a band of brown fur. The coat is lined with old blue crêpe de Chine of the corsage color.

A double tunic dress, with and without the accompanying coat, shown in two views, is an original combination of materials. The skirt is of velvet, the tunic of silk voile, the corsage part embroidered and posed over a pale pink chiffon lining. Both of the tunic skirts are edged with skunk fur and there is a double band of fur on the short sleeve. The sash end that falls down the front over the tunics is embroidered in bright colored beads. The coat, of caracul fur, has a slender band of skunk about the neck, fronts and wrists. Unlike the previous model, it is loose and wraps about the figure rather than fits it. This is an ideal model for a tall, thin woman, just as the first named suit is good for a stout, short woman.

A third gown is a distinguished model for those who dress in mourning or affect black. This is the sort of gown that looks well on all women, tall, short, stout or thin. It is of black crêpe de Chine, the tunic unbelted, but caught in invisibly at the waist. The skirt is most simple, with a rounded and discreet slash in front. The tunic is weighted by a fringe. The mantle coat, almost capelike in its simplicity of cut, is caught up to make the loose sleeves. The hat is swathed in crêpe de Chine with a heavy british aigrette eccentrically posed. It would take but a touch of black fur to transform this into a much more elaborate costume for midwinter.

THE SPORTING WORLD

AMENDMENTS ADOPTED BY THE ONTARIO HOCKEY ASSOCIATION

Bounds off Goaltenders at Ten Feet not Offside ---Players in Police Villages Can Play With Nearest O.H.A. Club --- Point and Cover Point Now Right and Left Defence

At the annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association on Saturday, the amendments were taken up, beginning with the one by James T. Sutherland, defining that home clubs be obliged to have jumpers directly opposite in color to the regular club sweaters. The idea is to prevent confusion through a similarity of colors of the opposing players.

Rules of the Game

Mr. Sutherland's motion to place in the rules the names of the positions of the players, which are not now in the rule book—goal keeper, right defence, left defence, rover, centre, right wing and left wing.

Quite a discussion arose over abandoning of the terms "cover point" and "point" in favor of "right defence" and "left defence."

Mr. Robertson, in supporting Mr. Sutherland's motion, said that inasmuch as the cover point and point really no longer existed on the ice, the change in the terms should be made. That line of argument was followed up by several speakers. Those opposing did not care to let go the terms which had always been used.

The amendment carried, and henceforth the rule book will have the names of the positions, and the defence will be known as goal-keeper, right defence and left defence. The other positions will be known as in the past.

Overtime Rests.

Mr. Hewitt's motion assigning rests in overtime contests was carried. The rule in future will be that, after the regular time is up, the teams will rest for ten minutes, then play ten minutes—five each way—then, if further overtime is necessary, rest five minutes after each ten minutes' play.

Timekeeping Gong.

Mr. Sutherland's amendment to have the timekeepers ring the gong to attract the referee's attention, in the case of disagreement as to time, was carried.

Bounds Off Goalkeepers.

The rule declaring no off-side on bounds off the goalkeeper three feet from goal was amended to make it ten feet. This, of course, does not include passes by the goalkeeper.

Villages and Districts.

The Drumbo amendment to allow boys living in police villages to play with the nearest O. H. A. team, just as is done now with dwellers in rural districts, was carried.

The honorarium of the secretary was raised from $500 to $750, and that of the treasurer remains at $50.

National Body.

Mr. Nelson reported that on account of the pressure of business at the Athletic Union of Canada nothing definite was done to form a Dominion Hockey Association to govern the game all over Canada.

He found, however, that the feeling of the Athletic Union was strongly with them, and the whole machinery of the A.A.U. of C. was at their disposal.

He felt that the O.H.A. was big enough and strong enough to give a helping hand all over Canada where needed.

Resolution Passed.

Mr. Nelson, seconded by Mr. Sutherland, moved the following resolution, which passed unanimously, reads as follows:

"That the incoming Executive be instructed to consider the question of the organization of a Dominion Association for the government of amateur hockey throughout Canada, and to forward the movement in every way consistent with the principles and policy of the Ontario Hockey Association."

Such a united policy in Mr. Nelson's view would nationalize the game and players would be controlled from coast to coast along the same lines as they are in Ontario. There would be no possibility under such a body to have players under the ban of a body to play anywhere else as an amateur.

Denison's Case

The case of Fred Denison and that of other O. H. A. players, will be considered at a meeting of the executive this week.

HAMILTON TIGERS WON FROM THE ALL STARS

Receipts of $2,670 in Benefit Game for Billy Slee

TORONTO, Dec. 8.—With nothing to gain and all to lose the champion Hamilton Tigers showed true sporting spirit when they met the pick of the Toronto football teams Saturday afternoon at University of Toronto Stadium with their team at full strength. The only absentee was Mallet, who is perhaps the best half-back of the Hamilton team. He is laid up with injuries to his leg which he sustained in the Canadian championship final at Hamilton with the Parkdale team. Over 7,000 turned out to witness the game which proved to be as good a football fixture as had been seen here this season. The bleachers were filled and the grand stand was well occupied when the ball was put in play. The crowd came to see a good game and they went away satisfied.

The field was in good condition, while the wind, which was blowing down the field, proved of no assistance to either team. The boys from the Industrial School were present, the guests of a well-known sporting man. Although the score was . to 7, it is no indication that the All-Stars were outclassed. The All-Stars played a remarkable game during the first half and held the Tigers to three points. The Yellow and Black had to fight for every point which they earned during the early parts of the game. The Toronto linemen smothered their end runs with alarming regularity. They stopped their plunges as well, and, in fact, at this stage of the game it seemed as if the champions would be defeated. However, changes were made at the beginning of the third half which did not prove beneficial to the All-Stars, for the Tigers were able to obtain two tries without much trouble.

The receipts of the game which amounted to $2,670, will be turned over to Mr. Slee immediately. The committee in charge desire to thank the players of both teams, the patrons of the game and all others who so generously and unselfishly contributed to such a worthy cause.

BASEBALL

Ottawa Free Press.—Some baseball fans last night were recounting sensational plays that were pulled off at Lansdowne Park during the 1913 season. Cosy Dolan's famous one-handed catch of a line drive from the bat of Hilliard of Peterboro, which saved the game, and Kelly Harris' scoring from second twice on an infield out in one game, were mentioned as being thrilling stunts. But all agreed Lefty Rogers' one catch of a long foul in deep left in which he doubled a man at the plate and then followed it up by a sousing home run to centre field was the greatest piece of baseball ever pulled off on any diamond. That sure was a great day for Lefty. He had a single, double, triple, and homer during the afternoon's pastiming.

IS CONSIDERED FAIRLY SAFE MAN

PARIS, Dec. 8.—Although Senator Gaston Doumergue, the Socialist leader, has deferred until to-day notifying President Poincare that he will take the responsibility of forming a Ministry, it is believed that he will accept the task imposed upon him. He arranged a provisional Cabinet yesterday afternoon, which included for Minister of Foreign Affairs either Alexandre Felix Ribot, Jean Dupuy or Theophile Delcasse. This proved a stumbling block, as neither M. Ribot nor M. Dupuy would accept the office and it is generally thought that M. Delcasse, who is now in St. Petersburg as ambassador to Russia, will also refuse, in view of the effect his nomination would likely have on opinion abroad, notably in Germany. It is, therefore, considered probable that M. Doumergue will eventually take the Foreign Office himself, following the example of M. Poincare when he was Premier.

Other members of M. Doumergue's provisional Cabinet include Gen. Duball as Minister of War, with Gen. Sarrail as chief of staff; navy, M. Soulens, now Under Secretary of War; instruction, M. Viviani; Finance, Joseph Caillaux; Commerce, Fernand David; Agriculture, Louis Malvy or Maurice Raymond; Colonies, M. Lebrun; Public Works, M. l'Hopiteau; Labor, Rene Renault.

Moderate opinion, while it would have preferred M. Ribot, M. Dupuy or some other statesman less committed to advanced views, considers M. Doumergue reasonably safe as Premier. There is apprehension among the Conservatives that M. Doumergue, when in doubt, will accept the counsel of M. Caillaux, the Radical leader, or ex-Premier Clemenceau. The public, especially that portion of it identified with finances, will be relieved if the political crisis can be settled to-day.

FIRE AT BOW PARK.

Damage To Brant County Establishment is About $40,000.

BRANTFORD, Dec. 8. — Thirty-three horses and six head of cattle perished in a disastrous fire believed to be of incendiary origin, at Bow Park farm, early Saturday morning. The fire makes the second of its kind suffered by the management within a few months.

Besides the horses and cattle valuable seeding and farm machinery, as well as hay and stock, was destroyed, and the total loss, it is estimated, will be around $40,000.

The big building, which was the scene of the blaze, consisted of the main stables of the farm. It was of brick construction with slate roof and had been standing for some years. The other buildings about were new, having just been completed, following the bad fire last spring.

An investigation has been launched, the services of County Constable Kerr being called in.

Kuntz's
OLD GERMAN LAGER

HURRY up with a bottle of Kuntz's Old German," said the man from New York. "It's worth a trip to Canada to get a drink of this corking brew. There's nothing like the "Old German" flavor in the United States, you know. Perhaps because the "Old German" process of brewing is so very costly. Anyway, you Canadians ought to feel proud of Kuntz's for brewing such a superb beverage. And I guess you are from the number I see drinking Kuntz's Old German.

CARE SHOULD BE USED IN CHRISTMAS DECORATIONS

A Warning From the Canadian Fire Underwriters Association

Fire Chief Howard is in receipt of the following self explanatory letter from the Canadian Fire Underwriters 'Association:

Dear Sir,—

Following our usual custom at this season of the year I beg to call your attention to the dangers of life and property from Christmas decorations, displays, etc., which are frequently made at this time of the year. The use of Christmas greens, harvest specimens and other inflammable materials such as draperies, scenery, cotton to represent snow, and the like, (especially in connection with electric and other lighting systems), is decidedly an increase of hazard, it being impossible to make displays of that nature perfectly safe.

The Statutory Conditions of your Insurance Policy read in part as follows:

> "Any change material to the risk, but within the control or knowledge of the assured, shall avoid the policy, as to the part affected thereby, unless the change is promptly notified in writing to the Company or its local agent."

In addition to the danger to property from the displays referred to, the danger to life in crowded stores or places of meeting, by reason of a panic occasioned by fire, even though it be small and easily controlled, is so great that the Underwriters, who have made a study of such hazards, would fail in their duty should they not give this warning.

By order,
John A. Robertson,
Secretary.

His Worship Mayor Bradburn also received a letter from Mr. Robertson. This letter was sent as a reminder that there is great danger of hydrants and other fire fighting apparatus becoming frozen in the winter and advised him to see that steps were taken along the line of prevention.

Mr. John Coughlin Receives Several Samples.

Mr. John Coughlin, proprietor of the Coughlin Monumental Works has received some samples of marble taken from a new quarry near Marmora. The Crow Lake Iron Co., of Traverse City, Michigan, opened up a mine in that locality. They had not been operating long till they struck a marble quarry and Mr. Wm. F. Bower, the manager, sent samples to Mr. Coughlin to be polished so they could be exhibited in the finished form.

This morning more samples were received and Mr. Coughlin stated to the Review that judging from the samples, the quarry gave promise of being very good.

SUNDAY SCHOOL IS GROWING IN ATTENDANCE

Rev. R. Pogue Makes Reference to it at Evening Service

REPORT ON CANVESS

The largest Sunday School attendance during his six years' pastorate, was reported by Rev. R. Pogue at the Sunday evening service at St. Paul's Church.

The attendance was 370 and it is hoped that the attendance for next Sunday will be increased to 400.

Rev. Mr. Pogue said that a very gratifying response had been made in the personal canvass during the week. He instanced one case, that of a salaried man who was not a business man, manufacturer or a real estate agent, yet he had promised to contribute $1 each Sunday for church funds and $2 per Sunday for missions. Another case was that of a clerk who would give $1 each Sunday.

During the service Mr. Gordon Wright sang "Abide With Me," in good voice and a duet by Miss Dorothy Allan and Mr. McKeown was also very acceptably rendered.

THE LIGHT ETERNAL

Two Highly Pleased Audiences Witness Its Presentation.

The Light Eternal. The very name has an instructive and holy ring which sounds the somewhat deadened cord in us; that cord which donates the supernatural side of man; his soul.

History tells us that theatres and plays were first instituted to assist in teaching, the uneducated, passages in the Bible and religion. The stage has degenerated to the modern musical comedy and burlesque entertainment so wholly that the plays with a religious theme are few and far between; yet there is one among the small number that is immortal and its title is "The Light Eternal." This devotional drama of early Rome was presented at the Grand on Saturday afternoon and evening before fairly large but highly pleased audiences. Some plays give us entertainment for a few hours but this play gives one thoughts and recollections which are immortal.

The cast presenting "The Light Eternal" is not surpassed by any cast that has played here this season. With John Milton as Marco Balerius, the martyr's son which is the leading role, there is little room for improvement, and Louise Dunbar as Caesar's daughter, gives excellent support. The remainder of the company particularly John Shultis as Sebastian and James Nelson as Diocletian, are exceedingly good.

Famous Play of Eugene Walters to be Presented Here.

The cultured and cosmopolitan nature of our theatre-going public is certain to guarantee a ready patronage to any amusement event of such merit as "Fine Feathers," the latest American drama, which H. H. Frazee will present here at the Grand next Saturday, Dec. 13, matinee and night. This is the play which was produced in Chicago in August, 1912, remained there until Xmas and then startled New York theatregoers for the balance of the season with its virile picture of the tragedy which graft brings to the home and with the searing invective with which the author has clothed his document.

Had Eugene Walter written nothing after "Paid in Full," and "The Easiest Way" his place would have been secure among American dramatists. He has, however, in "Fine Feathers" given us a further insight into his ability and gives us this latest development of his ripening talent as a fit study of what the American drama is and should be. In this play he gives us in Jane Reynolds an eloquent sermon for a large class of the American women of today.

The play is built upon the premise that graft is futile as a means to happiness, no matter how much luxury it brings at the moment. The story of the young couple, living in Staten Island, paying for a bungalow on the installment plan, all on a salary of $25 a week, is deepened into tragedy when a college friend, now become wealthy as a contractor, offers a bonus of $40,000 if the husband will pass upon an inferior grade of cement, in the building of a dam. After rebuking his friend, the husband is finally persuaded by his wife, who believes in the scheme, her belief, however, being superinduced by the thoughts of the luxury it will bring. From this point the author has depicted graphically what we have always known, "As ye sow, so shall ye also reap."

Level of Prices Rises.

The Department of Labor index number of wholesale prices stood at 136.8 for October, 1913, as compared with 136.0 in September, 1913, and 135.0 for October last year. Corn, peas, Ontario barley, hay and bran were higher, but wheat, flaxseed, western oats and barley were lower. Cattle and beef were higher, but hogs and hog products continue to decline. All dairy products were higher except cheese. Fresh Canadian fruits and potatoes advanced, but imported fruits, beans, onions and canned vegetables were lower. Record prices for jute and the highest price for cotton since 1911, raised the level of textiles. Copper, brass and lead were up, but steel, tin, quicksilver and silver were lower. Brooms were steeply up. Rope and raw rubber declined.

In retail prices, meats, eggs, milk and butter were higher, but there was a general decline in potatoes as the crop came on the market. Beans, flour, rolled oats and sugar were upward.

Must Have Fifty Dollars.

An important announcement was issued from Ottawa a few days ago in which a restriction of the Immigration Act is declared for the time intervening between now and March 1st. Foreigners living in Canada will not be able to procure the admission of adult brothers and sisters by special application to Ottawa, when the said relatives have not the necessary $50 in their possession upon entering the country.

This action means that some thousands of persons living on the other side of the Atlantic will not be allowed to enter Canada this winter.

Canal Traffic Increases.

Canadian canal traffic for this season up to Nov. 1, reached a tonnage of 46,428,283, an increase of nearly five million tons over the same period last year. The Soo canal was responsible for 3,384,713 tons of the increase, the Welland canal for 729,477, and the St. Lawrence for 831,569.

Juveniles Excluded.

Some years ago an old New Brunswick farmer was elected to the County Council.

As soon as the word reached home, the children flocked around the mother, exclaiming: "Are we all councillors now, mother?"

"Of course not," she replied, "only your pa and me."

CABINET TAKES DECISIVE ACTION IN HINDU QUESTION

Order-in-Council is Passed at Ottawa—Will Exclude Hindu, Japanese and Chinese Immigrants Until March 31.

Interval Will Give Time to Legislate Regarding Asiatics—Labor Market Overcrowded.

OTTAWA, Dec. 9.—Decisive action was taken by the Government yesterday to put a stop to the immigration of Hindus into British Columbia for the present at least. At a meeting of the Cabinet an order in council was passed prohibiting the further immigration of artisans or laborers into British Columbia from the Pacific or from the south until March 31 next. During the next four months the Government will have time to decide upon a definite policy regarding Asiatic immigration and legislate accordingly.

The effect of the order will be to exclude Japanese and Chinese until March 31, also, for discrimination is impossible. Indeed the situation created by the influx of Japanese women during the past two years has caused some uneasiness to the Government, and the Hindu situation has been somewhat in the nature of a god-send. For two years Hindu female immigrants have exceeded the male immigrants.

The overcrowded condition of the labor market in British Columbia gave the Government an opportunity to act, and advantage was taken of a clause in the Immigration Act which empowers the stoppage of the immigration of laborers when work is scarce.

The order-in-council does not prevent immigrants going into British Columbia from Europe or laborers going in from any other part of the Dominion.

HAMILTON, Dec. 9.—The official report of the analysis of the stomach of Mrs. Griffin who died several weeks ago, and into whose death an inquest was ordered, has not as yet been received by the local police. $10 AN HOUR FOR TREATING TEETH

Dentist Makes This Charge Because He's a Specialist.

TORONTO, Dec. 9. — Judge Theo. McGillivray of Whitby, is the defendant in a suit before Judge Morgan in the County Jury Court, in which Dr. Guy Hume, a dental specialist of Toronto, is the plaintiff. His claim is for $179, being the amount of dental work done to the plaintiff's daughter, Marjorie.

The doctor stated that special appliances had to be made with which to straighten the teeth of the child.

The defence is that the charge is excessive, and his Honor has paid into court $87, which he claims is ample to cover the bill.

Dr. Hume produced a schedule of his charges for work, which showed a minimum of $2 an hour for a certain class of work.

"Wouldn't that class of work be as difficult as treating a child's teeth?" he was asked.

"Yes," replied the dentist.

"Then why did you charge $10 an hour?"

"Because I am a specialist."

When asked how he became a specialist, the dentist replied that he did not know.

"'Do ordinary practitioners do this class of work?"

"Yes."

"What was your charge when you were an ordinary dentist?"

"$5 an hour."

"What did you charge for this kind of work before you were a specialist?"

"About $7 an hour."

"Dr. Hume stands very high in the profession," said Dr. F. J. Capon.

"He is known all over America, and I consider he was justified in charging $10 an hour," continued the witness.

Continuing, the dentist said that the highest charge he had ever made for a filling was $30.

ALD. BULLER AND THE MAYORALTY

Anonymous Letter Dodge Said to be the Latest Move.

It has been known for some time that every effort was being made to keep Ald. Buller out of the field by interested parties. The last move is the anonymous letter dodge. So at least it is rumored, there must be some reason for this big effort against Ald Buller who has a long and honorable record, both as business man and councillor. The Duke will be just as much pleased to meet a man of the people as someone with more style. At any rate The Review is glad to see in the field a man who has been asked to run for the position, has every right from long service to aspire to it and who will make a good man as mayor if he wins.

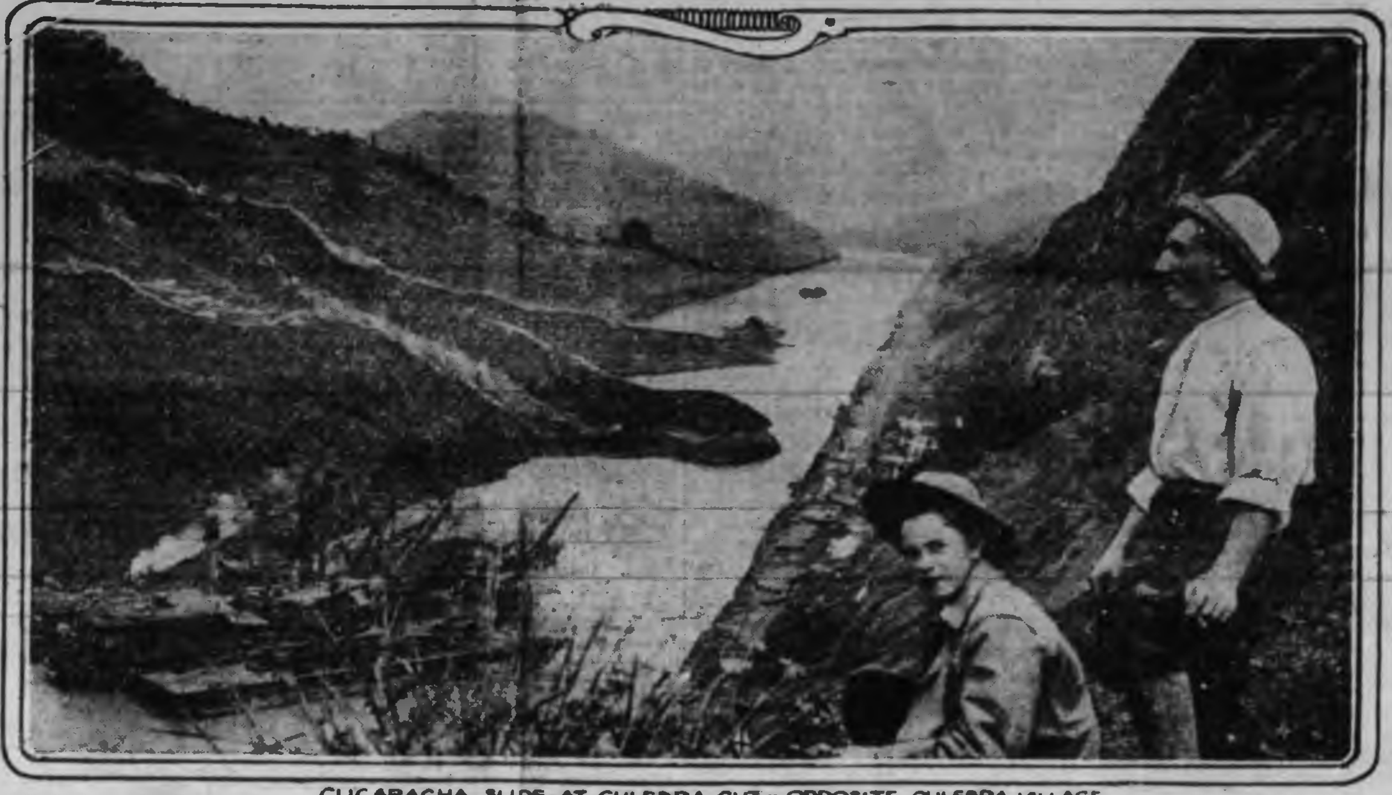
CUCARACHA SLIDE, WHICH HAS BOTHERED ENGINEERS AT THE PANAMA CANAL



CUCARACHA SLIDE AT CULEBRA CUT – OPPOSITE CULEBRA VILLAGE

The above photograph is probably one of the best photographs yet obtained of the Cucaracha slide in the Culebra cut of the Panama Canal. This slide has bothered the engineers since the work was started, and, despite their utmost efforts, continues to fill in as fast as dredges can dig out the tons and tons of earth. The Cucaracha slide is almost opposite the American camp in the village of Culebra and is about thirty-three miles in from the Atlantic Ocean. The accompanying photograph shows a view looking from Culebra toward the Atlantic. Suction dredges were found inadequate the task of removing the earth in the slide, as it is of heavy clay, which clogs the pipes, and bucket dredges which replaced them are to be seen in operation at either side of the slide

STEFANSSON SENDS WORD HIS PARTY IS SAFE AND NOW IN WINTER CAMP

Doesn't Know Where His Ship is But all the Other Vessels are in Best of Condition, He Says

OTTAWA, Dec. 9. — Somewhere within the confines of the Arctic Circle's drifts, Vilhjalmar Stefansson's staunch little vessel, the Karluk, is safely frozen in an ice pack. But the leader of the expedition is not with his vessel, and is unaware of its whereabouts, according to a despatch received from the explorer himself yesterday by George J. Desbarats, acting Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs, and acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It will be recalled that a recent despatch from Seattle, Wash., reported the Karluk missing with all on board, while still later Stefansson was reported safe in winter quarters.

Yesterday's news sets at rest all rumors, for Stefansson's report gives full details of his trip to the date of Oct. 30.

In brief, Stefansson's message states that, believing the Karluk safe in the ice in longitude west 147, fifteen miles off shore, he took a party ashore with him to hunt. The next day heavy gales sprang up and a fog. When the weather cleared the Karluk was not in sight, and had undoubtedly been carried away by the wind which drove the ice pack off shore.

So far the search for the Karluk has been unsuccessful, but as there is a crew of twenty-five men on board, and plenty of provisions, no anxiety is felt for its welfare.

The message received yesterday was dated Oct. 30, from Point Barrow, Alaska, and was sent overland from there to Circle, from where it was despatched on Dec. 5.

The message reads:

"The Karluk beset by heavy ice on Aug. 12, in longitude west 147, fifteen miles off shore. Ship frozen in on Aug. 17, and drifted with the ice until Sept. 10, when the drift stopped. On Sept. 20, believing the ship fast for the winter, and, as it was necessary to secure fresh meat, I took Jenness, McConnell, Wilkins and three Eskimos ashore to hunt. Northeast gales sprang up Sept. 22, with snow and fog. When the storm cleared on the 24th, the ice had gone and the Karluk with it. The ice undoubtedly went west before the wind. The Karluk may possibly have broken free and steamed east, but she probably remained fast and drifted west with the ice. Followed the coast west to Barrow, but the Karluk has not been sighted. The schooners Alaska and Sachs, with southern party, are safe at Collinson Point. The schooner Belvidere, with cargo of freight and provisions, is wintering near the international boundary. I am planning an ice exploration from the 145th meridian to the Mackenzie Delta, making survey and taking soundings for a steamer route.

"The Karluk has on board a company of twenty-five, including Beuchat, Mackay, Mamen, McKinley, Murray and Malloch, with the members of the crew, and five Eskimos.

(Signed) "Stefansson."

The last message previous to yesterday's was received from Stefansson early in August. At that time he reported that the Karluk had behaved well in a heavy storm and had rounded Point Hope on July 31.

Those with Stefansson now are: Dr. D. Jenness of Wellington, N.Z., assistant anthropologist; Burt M. Wilkins of Montreal, the photographer; B. M. McConnell, Los Angeles, Cal., assistant to Stefansson, and meteorologist.

The remainder of the scientific men on board the Karluk whom Stefansson names in his message are: Henri Beuchat, anthropologist; Alister Forbes-Mackay, Edinburgh, Scotland, surgeon; Bjarme Mamen, Christiania, Norway, assistant geologist; W. J. McKinley, Glasgow, Scotland; expert in terrestial magnetism; Jas. Murray, Glasgow, Scotland, oceanographer; George Malloch, Ottawa, Ont., chief geologist and topographer.

The Alaska and the Sachs, which Stefansson mentions are the other vessels of the expedition, and are manned by the scientific parties.

AFTERMATH OF FOREST FIRES IN NORTH COUNTRY

Young Men are Ordered to Pay Costs of $90.

PLEADED GUILTY

They Started the Fire which Destoyed much Valuable Timber.

The Bancroft Times says: Two young men named Hicks were arrested at a farm where they were stopping in the township of Wollaston, and brought to Bancroft, where they were charged with starting a fire in the township of Cardiff on Sept. 16, last, which destroyed a lot of valuable timber. They had been working for the Peterborough Lumber Co., and were discharged, and it is alleged that the fires were started with malicious intent. Another brother, who was with them at the time, is also wanted. He is said to have served a two year term on the Prison Farm at Guelph.

The charge was laid at the instance of Mr. Dane, fire ranger for the Peterboro Lumber Co., and Constable Bailey brought the prisoners in.

Since the above went into the hands of the compositor, the prisoners, together with the one wanted, came up for trial yesterday afternoon before Magistrate Jarman, they pleaded guilty, but were let out on suspended sentence, with the warning that they must settle down and get to work as respectable citizens. They were also ordered to pay all costs of the court and $25.00 to the Peterborough Lumber Co., which amounts to $95.00 in all, and in the meantime were given until the 15th of Feb. 1914, to get the necessary "green backs." They are to report to the Magistrate week by week until this amount is paid and in failing to do so, will be taken into custody again.

BOARD OF HEALTH IN SESSION

What About the Incinerator Asks Sanitary Inspector Spence

Plant Not Taken Over by the City Says Ald. Duncan

Mayor Suggests That City Use It's Own Wagons Next Year

Acting Chairman Ald. Duncan, Mayor Bradburn, Jas. Murty, Sanitary Inspector Spence, and Dr. McPherson, were present at a meeting of the Board of Health this morning. Accounts were ordered to be paid, as received.

$60.25 Left.

"You have $60.25 left and whatever is collected," remarked Mayor Bradburn. "We won't have very much left," said Mr. Murty. Mayor Bradburn replied that the Board would be lucky if they broke even. The Isolation Hospital was the subject of his discussion.

About That Sewer

Mr. Spence asked why the sewer service was not given on Lafayette Ave. He said there had been an error in judgment somewhere when it was stated that other work had been done.

Mayor Bradburn said he had been under the impression that all the work had been cleaned up.

Incinerator Not Finished

Mr. Spence asked if the incinerator was to be under control of his department.

Ald. Duncan replied that the contractor had not finished his work and the city had not taken the plant over. The offical test would not take place till the first of the year.

"The trouble is we can't get enough stuff down there to keep it going," said Mayor Bradburn. The chairman added that a dead horse had been brought to the incienraotr had been brought to the incinerator. It was decided to let the whole matter stand, the chairman to see if he could make some new arrangements with the garbage collectors.

City Get Wagons

"Put on your own wagons next year and put the whole thing under the control of the inspector," suggested Mayor Bradburn.

City Clerk Armstrong stated that a change in the law prohibited a charge per house being made. The charge would have to go on the assessment.

Eight Cases in Hospital

Dr. McPherson reported eight cases at the hospital, four being scarlet fever and four diptheria cases. "These outside patients, do they pay all right?" asked the Mayor.

"O, yes," replied the M. H. O.

Scavengers' License

Dr. McPherson suggested new regulations to govern the license of scavengers. Air tight barrels was one and day and night work for another. The department would insist on air tight barrels. Orders to be sent to the Sanitary Inspector, so that the work would be properly done.

Mayor Bradburn said the matter ought to be dealt with by the incoming council. The idea he thought was a good one.

TWO BADLY BURNED BY EXPLOSION

Thoughtless Youth Struck a Match as Sister Poured Gasoline

BOTH IN HOSPITAL

Their Clothes Caught Fire and Parents Were Burned Trying to Help

A terrible accident occurred at Raven Lake Cement Works, near Victoria Road, on Sunday evening, due to a gasoline explosion at the home of Mr. John Haw, who keeps the boarding house at that place.

It appears that Mr. Haw's daughter, a girl of 18 years, was pouring gasoline on the stove from a can, when her brother came along and struck a match. In an instant a terrific explosion took place and the room was like a fiery furnace. The girl's clothes caught fire and her brother was also in flames. When the father and mother attempted to smother the fire, they were also badly burned.

The explosion attracted others to the scene and the flames were extinguished before further damage was done.

The unfortunate girl was frightfully burned about the body and presented a horrible sight. Her brother was also burned and is in a dangerous condition. The injuries sustained by their parents, while not serious, are of a very painful nature.

Dr. Huxtable was summoned to attend the victims, and did everything possible to allay their sufferings. The condition of the boy and girl was of such a serious nature that it was decided to have them removed to the Ross Memorial Hospital. They were placed in the caboose train in charge of Conductor Hoover and arrived in town about 2.30 o'clock. The ambulance was at the station, and the boy and girl were taken to the hospital.

In conversation with a Post reporter, Dr. Huxtable stated that the girl was in a very serious condition, her entire body being badly burned. Her recovery is doubtful.

Mrs. John Haw, their mother, accompanied them to Lindsay. Her face is badly disfigured as a result of the burns received.—Lindsay Post.

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, DEC. 8, 1913.

THE LESSONS OF SCOTT'S FATE.

STEFANSSON is now reported to be safe and snug in a winter camp at Flaxman Island. The lessons of the sad and terrible end of the Scott party have doubtless not been lost on the Norsman and it is not likely that he will expose himself to the same fate. Then the North is not so treacherous as the South, although it is more stern and severe. The Arctic regions have been traversed by explorers for over a century and many land-marks exist as guides, treacherous places are known and stations containing food and appliances must also be in existence, relics of former expeditions. The explorer of the North is cheered by the consciousness that he is never very far away from human habitations, he has reliable friends in the Exkimos ;even the Polar bear must be a welcome visitor in the polar solitudes, not to mention the seal family. In the South there is no such possible companionship. The only creature that seems to dwell there is the penguin and there are no human beings native to the Antarctic.

But the South Pole is now no longer uninhabited since Scott and his brave men laid down their lives there. Their spirits will for ever haunt those regions, appealing to the imagination and stirring the adventurous spirits of future generations. Our young men could find no more thrilling, cleaner and enobling reading than the record of the last Scott expedition just published. Our Librarian informs us that a copy of this great book is now in the Library. There will be a big demand for it this winter. If there is one thing which the Canadian youth needs it is such a lesson as this book presents of endurance, faithfulness to purpose and manliness even unto a lonely death. The last words of Scott to the world, while they are sad and pitiful, are an inspiration to those who imagine their lot in life to be the most hopeless and loneliest that was ever endured. Here are his closing words written maybe with a frozen hand: :—

"Since the 21st we have had a continuous gale. . . We had fuel to make two cups of tea apiece and bare food for two days on the 20th. Every day we have been ready to start for our depot 11 miles away, but outside the door of the tent it remains a scene of whirling drift. I do not think we can hope for any better things now. We shall stick it out to the end, but we are getting weaker, of course, and the end cannot be far.

"It seems a pity, but I do not think I can write more."

In a letter to Mrs. Wilson, the wife of one of his comrades who was dying at his side, he wrote:—

"If this letter reaches you, Bill (Dr. Wilson) and I will have gone out together. We are very near it now, and I should like you to know how splendid he was at the end—everlastingly cheerful and ready to sacrifice himself for others, never a word of blame to me for leading him into this mess. He is not suffering, luckily, at least only minor discomforts.

"His eyes have a comfortable blue look of hope and his mind is peaceful with the satisfaction of his faith in regarding himself as part of the great scheme of the Almighty. I can do no more to comfort you than to tell you that he died as he lived, a brave man—the best of comrades and staunchest of friends.

"My whole heart goes out to you in pity."

"REDEEMING DESERT LIVES."

THERE WAS a splendid service at George street Methodist church Sunday evening—good congregation, splendid singing, an interesting sermon. Rev. Mr. Peever, the pastor, took as his subject, "Redeeming Desert Lives," which was an application of the idea of conservation to the religion of Christ. The sermon was of a kind that is not heard often enough from the pulpits of to-day, for frequently congregations are wearied with a philosophy that was up-to-date when Kid was captain of his pirate crew, or that has, at least, long since ceased to bear a vital relation to living people. Religion and the Church are not isolated segments of our social life, but are influenced and changed by every new movement and idea that operates on the life of man. Conservation is only one of a great number of questions, the relation of which to the church and religion of the time is only vaguely realized, if at all.

Mr. Peever's idea seems to be an effort to show how to make things better by applying the idea of conservation to the work of the church. Thus, he quoted figures and gave data to show how the social evil or white slave traffic might be successfully attacked by conserving the morals of the youth of the country—by instituting safeguards against temptation to stray from the path of virtue. Also, that the religion of Christ went further and even reclaimed that which was lost—the derelicts of social life. However, he seemed to go a little from his subject when he attacked the expenditure for armaments, naval and military, by quoting the figures and desiring their application to the cause of Christianity.

This point raised two questions which have various forms. Is this waste for war necessary? or why does it exist? Secondly, what does Christianity gain from the tremendous expenditure for war or for armed peace?

As to the first question, waste is not contrary to nature as it exists in the world, for of the million of eggs which the codfish lays only a score or so reach maturity. Of the millions of acorns which are reared in the leafy shade only a very few to great oaks grow. One milkman could deliver all the milk used in one street, when, as a matter of fact, several work on the same route. The socialist condemns waste as unnecessary and as a result of the competitive basis of society and so long as society is on a competitive basis it is difficult to see how waste will be entirely avoided, or how war can be made unnecessary. For, so long as there is rivalry between individuals and between collections of individuals, occasions will arise when, in spite of arbitration and all the safe-guards for peace, there will be no common ground for the settlement of disputes save by the terrible arbitrament of arms. The imperfections or humanity of man is the real cause for waste and war and perhaps all the sins of the world.

The second question is already answered for, so long as great navies and armies preserve peace, Christianity has everything to gain by having freedom to prosecute its work, to extend its beneficent influence over the hearts of men all around the world.

Granting this, evil can be lessened or reduced to a minimum if it cannot be abolished, and in applying the principle of conservation to the purpose of making men better Mr. Peever is to be commended and encouraged.

TESTING THE LAW.

THE MONTREAL STAR has been testing the law as to the carrying of revolvers without a permit. One of its reporters pocketed a pistol and got himself arrested. The Recorder who tried the case discovered the plot and acquitted the reporter. In summing up, the Recorder pointed out that the law made liable to a penalty any person having a revolver in his possession without a permit. The clause "for an unlawful purpose" had been recently removed. The common law, however, he thought, justified a person's acting in the public interest. This, he thought, the Star reporter had done, under the circumstances he chose to dismiss the action.

It would appear that a good many people are not aware that there is a law in existence against the carrying of firearms. The liberty allowed to youths and even boys with shot-guns is not only dangerous, it is unlawful. If we have laws they should be applied, and this test case by the Star newspaper may remind the police that they are the limbs of the law.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

LAST SUNDAY being "Universal Bible Sunday," the Bishop of Montreal issued a pastoral requesting his clergy to preach upon the value of the Scriptures. That was very thoughtful of the Bishop, the value of the Bible should be demonstrated at least one Sunday in the year.

EVERY REAL MAN wears a moustache, says the Kaiser. What about Julius Ceasar? What about many excellent editors of our acquaintance? A man who wears a beard or a moustache may do so because he has something to hide.

A DESPATCH FROM VERA CRUS, Dec 4, says:—"Fearing assassination by the Mexicans who are inflamed by recent developments, John Lind, special representative of the Uuited States, will not leave the grounds of the United States embassy here. He has also stopped smoking cigars, fearing they are drugged." It is bad enough to be scared to death, but not to be able to smoke must be Mr. Lind's crowning sorrow.

WILLIAM GOOD, a chaffeur, of Montreal, has had the good fortune to come unexpectedly into $38,000. Four years ago a stampede of horses in Arizona resulted in Anthony Jameson being rendered unconscious. Good, though a smaller man, carried the injured man three miles to a farm-house. He heard of his good fortune through an advertisement in an Arizona paper. He has engaged a New York lawyer to collect his reward. He should have gone to Philadelphia.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

. . . . .If Shakespeare Were Alive.

"If Shakespeare were in Stratford-on-Avon now, or any other provincial town, many would ignore him, many more would decry him. The county people would consider anxiously, whether or not he should be visited."—"A Bookman's Letters," by Sir W. Robertson Nicoll (Hodder and Stoughton).

Mr. 'Awkes in Training.

Toronto News.

WE could all see that Mr. Arthur Hawkes needed exercise. But few of us suspected that he would go into winter training in South Lanark. Moreover, if he derives physical advantages from the system he has adopted there is danger that the physical gain will be secured at the cost of some mental worry. There is also a deposit of $200 to be considered.

Trouble in the Alliance.

UNDER all the circumstances Mr. Rowell has sustained his most significant defeat in East Middlesex. He was provided with a very excellent candidate by the Alliance. He was personally active in the contest and he was assisted by the Alliance on the platform and in the canvass. Manifestly he has a policy which the Province will not accept and over which his own party becomes more hopelessly divided. The effect upon the Alliance may be even more disastrous. There are signs that the Conservatives will not continue to supply funds to an organization which has become an adjunct of the Liberal party. It is likely that this will be made very clear at the next meeting of the Alliance. It is not desirable that any such situation should develop, but at least the responsibility will not rest upon Conservatives.

IN DEFENCE OF BAZAARS

Lorna in the British Weekly Says They Benefit the Whole Community.

There are gloomy critics of the churches who consider sales of work only a shade less undignified than whist drives or tango teas. All such modes of raising money from the stately bazaar to the merry jumble sale, are condemned as frivolous and worldly. Congregations, undeterred by these cenorious mutterings, are busy in every corner of the land getting ready for the December sales. These events are of increasing importance in the annual program, and we may fairly claim that they benefit the whole community. They have an excellent effect, for one thing, in promoting friendly relations between the religious bodies in a town or suburb.

There are opportunities on such occasions for intercourse with brothers and sisters from other folds, and the spirit of mutual helpfulness is revived. Then, again, the sale of work, in preparation and retrospect, fills the home with fresh interest at the most depressing season of the year. It is not only in the manse or the wealthy deacons' houses that evenings are given up to organisations or handiwork. In a well-constituted fellowship, every family is invited to take part in the coming event. Unexpected talent is discovered. Mrs. Smith may have no turn for teaching, platform speaking, or choir leadership, but, like the Maharani who saved Kim's life in his illness, she is a queen when she "squats to the cooking pots," or in plainer English, when she makes toffee, jam and cakes, such as no confectioner can rival. "You must try these kipper-cream sandwiches," said a hostess on Sunday at tea-time. "The cream was made by Mrs. —— and was bought at the sale." Every purchaser of any article, however inexpensive, carries away a kindly feeling towards the church from which it came. Life needs fresh interests

"When the long, dark autumn evenings come"

—interests associated with laughter, brightness, the sparkle of leaves and the glow of firelight. The sale of work does much to tide over the blank evenings between the end of the holidays and the beginning of Christmas gaiety. No one who has undertaken even the twentieth part of a stall will gaze wearily at the drawing-room clock, like Miss Nightingale, thinking it will never reach the ten.

FOUR WINTERS OF RHEUMATISM

Cured of Sciatica And Muscular Rheumatism By "Fruit-a-tives"

RIDGETOWN, ONT., May 21st. 1913.

"Fruit-a-tives" cured me of Rheumatism. It was the only medicine that made any impression on me. I was a terrible sufferer from Rheumatism. I was laid up for four winters with Sciatica and Muscular Rheumatism, and was completely crippled.

Some neighbor of mine told me that "Fruit-a-tives" helped him, and I started in to take them. I used "Fruit-a-tives" faithfully for two years, taking them every day as I saw they were doing me good, and the results were marvellous.

For over two years, I have been completely free from any Rheumatic Pains whatever, and I give "Fruit-a-tives" the credit." W. H. RACHER.

CROSSING A BRIDGE

It Was an Important Feat in More Respects Than One

By F. A. MITCHEL

The wind howled; the rain came down in torrents. All the streams were swollen. Night came on, and the darkness added to the bleakness.

In a farmhouse near which ran a railroad track a woman sat over a baby that was moaning and tossing with fever. Now and again she would take the child up in her arms and caress it, but its sufferings were not diminished, and she would put it down with an exclamation of despair.

A boy of twelve stood by looking pityingly on his baby sister. He was a sturdy little fellow and old enough to realize that he might lose her.

"Oh, for some one to send for a doctor!" wailed the mother.

"Can't I go?" asked the boy.

"You go! Do you think I would let you go out in such a night as this, running the risk of losing you as well as your little sister? If you could go by the road I would send you, but you would have to cross the railroad bridge. The wind would blow you down into the gulf below."

"I've crossed the bridge. I know how to do it in a wind. I can crawl."

"You should not have done so even by day. The danger would be far greater at night, and on such a night as this it would be frightful. Besides, if a train should come along what would you do?"

"Hang on to a tie."

The mother shuddered. Beneath the ties a hundred feet below a river was boiling over rocks.

"There's no train to cross the bridge till 11:05," continued the boy.

"How do you know, Jakey?"

"I know all about the trains."

This was true. Jakey Summers was much interested in the railroad, the running of trains, and was known to the employees of the company at the station a few miles from his home. Many a free ride had been given him both on trains and locomotives.

"I wish I dare let you go," said the mother, "but I don't."

A spasm passed over the baby that frightened her and Jakey too. The boy went out into the kitchen, and when his mother was not conscious of his presence he was standing before her with a lighted lantern.

"Oh, Jakey," she exclaimed, "you're not going to cross that frightful bridge this terrible night!"

"I can do it all right, mamma. Don't you worry about me. Just you stay here and take care of Betty. I'll bring Dr Parker back with me. He's got a car and can come by the road, if it is ten miles around, as quick as I can get to him across the bridge."

The mother put her arms about him and hugged him, but he disengaged himself and with a "Now, don't you worry about me, mamma," went out into the night. A gust of wind blew in as he opened the door, and his mother started up to prevent his going, but he pulled the door to, and from a window beside it she saw his light disappearing down toward the track. With a prayer for him she went back to her baby.

Jakey soon gained the track and began to walk on a path beside it toward the bridge. He had glanced at a clock before going out and saw that the time was half past 10. It would be thirty-five minutes before an express train would reach the bridge, but the bridge was half a mile away, and he must necessarily be a long while getting over it. For this distance he breasted the wind, though ordinarily it would have been easy walking on the path. He had no means of noting the time and must take his chances as to being on the bridge when the train passed over it. He trudged on as fast as he could and was conscious of making pretty good time.

A gust of wind howled through the branches of the trees and caused a loud wail among the telegraph wires above his head. When it died down, before another gust came, he heard the boiling waters of the river. He paused awe stricken. In order to brace his resolution he thought of his baby sister and his anxious mother and, moving on a short distance, stood at the end of the bridge.

It was 300 feet long, with an abutment on each bank and one in the middle of the river. Taking his lantern in his left hand that he might cling with his stronger right, he began to crawl over the ties. After a squall he stood erect and made a distance of some forty feet before another blast came, when he was obliged to get down and cling for dear life.

Now he was over the boiling waters, well calculated to strike terror into an older person. But his mind was intent on getting across before the coming of the train. When the wind blew its strongest he crouched between the rails, bracing himself against a sleeper, but as soon as its force was spent he would crawl on, sometimes partly rising, sometimes standing, all the while forging onward.

And now he noticed that one rail was lower than the other. He knew this could not be on account of a curve in the bridge—bridges are never so constructed. He feared that something was giving way. The farther he proceeded the greater the inequality of the height of the rails. As he approached the center abutment this inequality was sufficient to throw a train off the bridge into the river.

Jakey quailed. The bridge was breaking down, and he knew not but that farther on a part of it might have been swept away. He hesitated, thinking to return. In vain he thought of his little sister and that her life might hang upon his getting a doctor. He dare not go on. A gust fiercer than any preceding swept over the structure, and he could hear a terrible cracking beyond. He was appalled. He turned to go back, but stopped. From a distance, borne on the wind, came the rattle of a train.

Jakey knew that this was the express; that it was passing on open space some five miles away, where he had often seen it pass before. But it was seven miles by the winding of the railroad. Within a quarter of an hour it would be on the bridge. He was near the center. So far as he could judge, he would barely have time to get on terra firma by going either forward or back. The bridge would go down with [illegible] and he would go down with both. He was reasonably sure that behind him the bridge was standing, for he had just come over it. Ahead of him he could not see through the darkness.

A whirl of influences passed through the child's brain—his sick sister, his troubled mother and now the horror of a train freighted with people going down into that terrible chasm. Perhaps it was this that decided him. He never knew what decided him. He only knew that he could not go back. All his nature revolted against doing so. He must go forward.

And he did. At the center abutment he found that it had partly given way and one rail was at the lowest point below the other. As he crawled forward it began to rise again. This gave him courage. He saw that the damage was caused by the giving way of the abutment in the river, and the one on the farther bank was likely standing. A whistle so clear that it indicated a near proximity of the train spurred him on. Despite the danger of being blown off the bridge, he stood up and walked on the ties. He was not now over the boiling water, and that was a relief.

Suddenly a bright light flashed ahead of him. A locomotive had rounded a curve and was heading on a straight track for the bridge. Jakey began to swing his lantern. He heard the sound attending the checking of a train, but the headlight of the locomotive flared nearer. Jakey was now some fifty feet from the end of the bridge and feared to be run down. He could only stand his ground and swing his lantern.

The train came to a stop after passing a few feet on to the bridge. The engineer waited for the light to advance and, leaning out from his cab, heard Jakey's report of the condition of the bridge. A shudder passed over the big man on the mammoth engine at hearing that he and his trainload of people had been saved from a frightful fall to death by the boy with the little upturned face beneath him.

A light was coming forward, and the conductor approached. Here and there in the cars a window was thrown up and a head thrust out. The conductor heard the story that the bridge was wrecked, and he, too, shuddered.

"I got to go," said Jakey.

"Go where?" asked the conductor mechanically.

"I got to go a piece up the road for a doctor. My little sister's sick."

"Get aboard the train. We're going to back up."

The engineer extended a hand to the boy and lifted him into the cab. As soon as he got him there he folded him in his arms and kissed him. Then he kissed him again and again until he heard the conductor say:

"Come; back up."

Jakey was put off at a station which was very near the doctor's house, but by this time the news of the narrow escape had spread among the passengers, and they crowded around the boy on the platform, impeding his progress. When they heard that a sick baby's life depended upon his further efforts they suffered him to proceed. When some twenty minutes later he passed the station with the doctor in the latter's car he was met by the conductor, who poured a hatful of money into his lap. Then followed by a cheer, the auto sped on to the baby.

When the doctor arrived he took charge of the little patient, but it was some time later, when the latter was sleeping, that Jakey told his mother how he had saved the train and showed her the pile of bills and gold and silver pieces that had been contributed for him by the passengers.

This was not all. The next day an official of the road came to see Jakey with a message from the president requesting him to come to the general offices in the city to be thanked.

The baby being out of danger, Jakey's Sunday suit was put on him and he took a free ride on the train to see the president. The boy was received by a multitude of employees as he passed to the office of the presiding officer and found himself a hero. After being officially thanked he was informed that he would thereafter be considered the child of the company, would be sent to school by it, and when he desired to enter the service of the road he would be educated to take an important position. Before he went back he was handed a check for $5,000, made payable to his mother.

Jakey is now a division superintendent on the road. He frequently rides over the bridge, or, rather, a new one, he crossed on that tempestuous night, and every time he goes over it the greater his horror at the risk he ran.

You'll be very apt to find—
Pathogenic evils ripe,
Typhus and its prototype.

Better let that dang'rous pin
Lie its unclean bed within.
Else prepare for other spheres
Where you'll not be moved by fears.
But, if after all we write,
Superstition holds you quite,
Should you choose to pick it up,
Douse in a carbolic cup.

Cigarette Smoking.

An average of four packages of cigarettes for every man, woman and child in Canada were consumed during July, August and September, according to the inland revenue statistics.

The total was 319,446,180, an increase of fifty millions over the same months of last year.

This establishes a record in cigarette consumption.

BURIED BILLIONS.

Romance of a Treasure Hunt That Has Fascinated Travelers.

For hundreds of years the belief has prevailed that gold dust and gems to the value of $5,500,000,000 lie buried at the bottom of the sacred lake of Guatavita in Colombia, a territory once occupied by Indian tribes renowned for their fabulous wealth.

The aboriginal Indians of that locality had a custom of casting all their vessels and ornaments of precious metal into the waters of the lakes as offerings to their gods, and the knowledge of this custom led to the belief that has been handed down through the ages that it was the burying-place of fabulous wealth.

For centuries, almost ever since America was first discovered, travelers and explorers have engaged in various expeditions in search of this territory, and many attempts have been made to drain the lake, without success.

The Spaniards were just on the point of succeeding in the task of draining the lake after years of hard work spent upon it; but when they were half-way through, the sides fell in and years of work were wasted.

In 1900 an English company undertook the work. They proceeded to drain it by digging a tunnel through the adjacent mountains, bringing it below the level of the surface of the water.

The lake was not emptied until, 1903, but it kept refilling on account of the heavy rains and the presence of springs. A certain number of jewels and ornaments found in the mud of the lake bed seemed to indicate that the search for the hidden treasure was to prove successful. Then the mud dried hard and fresh difficulty was thus encountered. Ever since the engineers have been continuing operations, but no further treasure has come to light.

After an outlay of some $65,000 it has been decided to abandon the hunt.

It remains to be seen whether anyone else will take up the search.

All Out.

A young preacher persuaded a fellow student to listen while he rehearsed a sermon. His subject was "Light." With a violent gesture with the right arm he said, "Blot out the sun!" With a similarly frantic movement of the left arm he roared, "Blot out the moon!" Then, with a combined gesture, made up of both arms, he bellowed, "Blot out the stars!" But it was enough. The auditor arose to leave, with a hoarse, cruel whisper, "Turn off the gas!"—Baptist Standard.

MOTOR TRUCKS SAVING MONEY FOR MONTREAL

Horses Being Eliminated From the Scene of Activities.

ALSO NEED LESS MEN

Expenses Decrease With the Power Driven Apparatus.

MONTREAL, Dec. 9.—An ear-piercing shriek echoing through the street, instead of the old time clanging of a bell, as the fire fighting apparatus is rushed along, marks the gradual elimination of the horse drawn vehicles in the Montreal Fire Department in favor of the motor truck.

It is the announced intention of the fire department to do away with all horses as rapidly as they can be supplied by the automobile. Already the central fire station on Craig St., is entirely equipped with power driven apparatus while all the district chiefs in the city use automobiles.

Chief Tremblay pointed out in his report to the City Council that the equipment of all fire stations with motor trucks will decrease the expenses and increase the speed and facilities for fire-fighting, as less men will be necessary to operate them. For an auto, he declared, a chauffeur is necessary to look after the machinery, whereas the horsewaggon needs a driver and stableman.

Already orders have been sent out for automobiles for the fire department. It is thought that by 1915 all the fire stations of Montreal will have motor trucks so that the city in future will be saving almost $20,000 every year.

CABINET FORMED

M. Doumergue's Galaxy Not Popular in Paris.

PARIS, Dec. 9.—Senator Gaston Doumergue succeeded in forming a new French Cabinet yesterday, but out of courtesy to the retiring Premier, J. Louis Barthou, and other members of the outgoing Cabinet, the official decrees appointing the statesmen to their posts will not be signed until to-night. This was decided because most of the Ministers who resigned with Premier Barthou were invited to an official dinner at the Austrian embassy last night, and desired to go there in their official capacity.

The new Cabinet is as follows: Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Gaston Doumergue; Minister of Interior, Rene Renoult; Justice, Bienvenue Martin; War, Jos. J. B. F. Noulens; Marine, Ernst Monis; Finance, Joseph Caillaux; Public Instruction, Rene Viviani; Public Works, Fernand David; Commerce, Louis J. Maloy; Colonies, Albert F. Lebrun; Agriculture, Maurise Reynaud; Labor, Albert Metin.

Under Secretaries of State: War, M. Maginot; Mercantile Marine, M. Ajam; Beaux Arts (to be announced to-day); Finance (suppressed).

The new combination comprises Radicals, Radical Socialists and Socialists, with the exception of MM. Lebrun and Renaud, who are regarded as Moderates. All except MM. Noulens and Malvy have served in former Cabinets.

The Paris press receives the announcement of the formation of the new Cabinet with disapproval and predicts a short life for it.

LOST HIS LIFE BY DROWNING

Native of Victoria County Met an Untimely End.

A Calgary exchange says: While driving from Paynton to Edam, Percy Parkinson formerly of Okotoks, and companion were drowned in the Saskatchewan River. The two men left Paynton, where they had been spending the day with Mr. Parkinson's brother, at 6:30 Sunday evening to return to Edam. Word came to Paynton at noon on Monday that there had been an accident at the river. Mr. Parkinson's friends wired to Edam and found that they had not arrived there. A search party went out. They secured the buggy, harness, robe and one of Percy Parkinson's gloves. The bodies of the men have not been recovered. The night was dark and apparently they drove into a hole while crossing the river.

Percy Parkinson was a former resident of Okotoks, Alberta, being the youngest son of Mrs. Parkinson and the late Wm. Parkinson of that place. He was born in Victoria county, near Lindsay, Ontario, 26 years ago, and came west in 1906. His companion, whose name has not been learned, leaves a wife and four children.

If you have a skeleton in your closet you are lucky if you can keep it there.

STUDENTS FEEL PINCH.

High Cost of Living Hard on the Poor College Man.

The high cost of living is being felt by students in Canadian universities this winter, and is giving considerable concern to young men who are getting an education on short allowance. In Toronto the cry is going up from the college men that everything is dearer.

Rooms that in old days went for $1.50 now fetch $2.50 or $2.75 per week. The same pea soup and lamb mint sauce that brought $2.60 per week a year or two ago is now $3.25 or even $4.00. The economic professors explain and explain, but the new prices stick.

These prices of $3.25 to $4.00 per week for board are in many cases prohibitive for students working their way through college. Take the theologs in Wycliffe. They work in the summer preaching for $25 a month and expenses. If they had to pay $5 or $6 a week for board and room they would be heavily involved before the end of their college days. The authorities of Wycliffe have come to the rescue by providing board and room for only $4 a week and free tuition.

Other students have not such kind authorities to look after them. They manage to get along by going into the restaurant business themselves in a small way. About 25 members have been found a convenient number for the scheme.

A woman is hired to cook for them and furnish a room in her home where they can eat. One of their own number is appointed buyer and he spends a part of every day down town picking up job lots of victuals at bargain rates. The board for the whole bench need not amount to more than $2.50 per week apiece and it has often been done for less. There are a great many of these clubs in operation between Avenue road and Yonge, above and below Bloor.

One thing that seems insurmountable is the rising price of rooms. One used to get a half decent single room for as low as $1.50 a week. Now it is a very plain room that can be had for two dollars and if it faces the north, the sun does not enter from one year's end to the other. A double room with any kind of comfort runs as high as $4 or $5 a week.

Students complain that private houses are hardly ever well heated and where there is a houseful of mixed boarders and only one bath complications are bound to arise. In the University residences that is impossible. There are showers and tubs in plenty and heat is supplied ad infinitum. The price at the University for a room ranges from $2.50 to $3.50. At Knox College it is about $5 per week for board and room and the same at McMaster.

No Wonder She Likes Aunt Mary.

The small daughter in a family where there are a number of brothers and sisters went on a visit to an aunt where there are no children. She was quite carried off her feet by the attention which she received, and when her mother arrived to take her home she was very unwilling to go.

"Why do you want to stay with Aunt Mary?" inquired the mother.

"She curls my hair three times a day," replied the child, "and she dresses me to beat the band!"

MEMBERS RECEIVED INTO SODALITY OF BLESSED VIRGIN

Sermon by Rev. M. McGuire of Douro—Bishop O'Brien Officiates

Yesterday, December 8th, was the Feast of the Immaculate Conception and it was celebrated in a very fitting manner at the Church of the Sacred Heart, last evening, by a reception of new members into the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

Some seventy-five members of the Sodality were present and when they entered the church, all dressed in white, wearing white veils, and carrying lighted candles, and slowly filed up the middle aisle singing "Mother Dear, O, Pray For Me," recollections never to be forgotten were impressed upon the congregation. When they had taken up the space reserved for them the Rosary was recited after which an eloquent sermon on the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary was delivered by Rev. M. McGuire, of Douro. His text was chosen from the First Book of Paralipomenon, 29, 1-2. The Work is a great work, for a house is prepared not for man, but for God.

King David's Desire

It had ben the earnest desire of King David to erect a temple of Almighty God. It was the greatest desire of his life to erect this temple but King David had been a great warrior and it was directed by God that this great temple should be built by a man of peace. He therefore chose Solomon, David's son, to erect it, and nothing was spared to make this temple a house of God.

King David, far from resenting, collected "gold for vessels of gold, silver for vessels of silver, brass for things of brass, and onyx—stones and stones like alabaster, and of divers' colours, and all manner of precious stones and marble of Paros in great abundance" to assist in fitting the temple. Since it was the expressed will of God that this temple be built, riches and art was lavished so when it was completed it rose as a vision of splendor such as the world up to that time had never beheld. It was the nearest to a perfect house of God but it was far from being perfect for we read in the Second Book of Paralipomenon, 2, 5-6. "Who then can be able to build Him a worthy house? If heaven and the heavens of heavens cannot contain Him."

Father McGuire established a parallel betwen the erecting of Solomon's temple and the selecting of the one who was to be the mother of God. All the time while this great temple was being built another house was being prepared for God, which was infinitely more sacred and infinitely more holy than Solomon's temple and the preparations were infinitely more careful and more prolonged. This house was Mary Immaculate. If from the first Almighty God had forseen the creation of man He had forseen the incarnation of God and to Mary was thrust unspeakable graces of heaven for it was she who was to carry in her arms the infant Jesus. No wonder, then, did God strain the forces of infinity to fashion to his likeness one so holy, one so pure. The preparations for her are set out in the Book of Proverbs, 8, 22-23. "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his ways, before he made anything from the beginning. I was set up from eternity and of old, before the earth was made."

Coming of the Blessed Virgin

The coming of the Blessed Virgin was made known by various prophets and patriarchs and was symbolized by a star. The Catholic Church teaches that the burning, unconsumed bush which Moses saw and the uncoruptible wood and purest of gold in the Ark of the Covenant, were signs of the perpetual virginity of this Immaculate flower of Israel.

All during the age of the prophets and patriarchs Almighty God was silently preparing this holy woman. He chose the Jewish race, the tribe of Juda and the family of David; all this was done so that the work might be perfect.

At last prepared and perfected she appeared. Men had almost begun to lose hope when one day, behold! she was in their midst, clothed with all the riches of heaven, spotless and immaculate, because she was the mother of God. When we reflect on the divine graces of His mother what an idea they must give us of God's divine purity and all sanctity. He knew she was all pure and all chaste and His wonderful wisdom and love for us is shown by giving her to us as a mother. She is truly immaculate and truly the mother of the human race for different from Eve, she brought life into mankind, not death.

Father McGuire's closing words were a supplication "Oh, Immaculate Mother in Heaven, cast your glance of tender love, pity and compassion on us here below tonight."

Act of Consecration

Immediately after the sermon the fourteen aspirants for the first degree stood along the sanctuary railing while Eileen Milloy read their Act of Consecration to the Blessed Virgin Mary. Then as they all knelt and His Lordship Bishop O'Brien assisted by Rev. J. J. O'Brien and Rev. J. V. McCauley, presented to them their white ribbon which is the token of the degree.

The aspirants for the second degree then came to the sanctuary railing. Following their Act of Consecration which was read by Marie O'Dette, His Lordship presented to them the token of their degree, namely, a blue ribbon and the Sodality medal.

After the Members' Act of Consecration had been read by the President, Miss Ada Meagher, His Lordship Bishop O'Brien spoke a few words stating that it was a great pleasure to be present at such a beautiful ceremony, for not only was it the commemoration of a great feast day, but also the occasion of so many young ladies joining the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin. The Catholic Church in order to stimulate her daughters with the beautiful virtues of piety, humility and chastity, hold before them the life of the Blessed Virgin, the image of piety, humility and chastity. His Lordship urged the new members to imitate her divine virtues, particularly her angelic purity, her profound humility, her blind obedience and her uncomparable charity and concluding he hoped that the presence of such a beautiful society would be a means of bringing graces and blessings to the Parish of the Sacred Heart.

The "Magnificat" was then chanted, after which His Lordship brought the ceremonies to a close by giving Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

THE OFFICERS FOR WHITE LILY LODGE A. O. F.

Wilfrid Miller is Chief Ranger and W. Head is Secretary.

The Juvenile branch of A.O.F. White Lily No. 86 held their regular meeting in the S.O.E. Hall, Hunter St., last night. There was a good attendance of members and a great deal of business gone into. According to reports from the boys they are advertising the branch and are striving to get new members. The following officers were elected:

Past Chief Ranger—Bro. Allan C. Boyce.

Chief Ranger—Bro. Wilfred Miller.

Sub. Chief Ranger—Bro. J. J. Ball.

Treas.—Bro. A. Laws.

Sec.—Bro. W. Head.

Sen. Woodward—Bro. J. Ball.

Jun. Woodward—Bro. Vincent Miller.

Sen. Beadle—Bro. L. Field.

Chaplain—Bro. A. Jackson.

Medical Officer—Bro. Amys.

A very pleasant evening was spent and a suggestion discussed regarding a concert to be held later. The members think that a good concert and entertainment would go a long way to make known their aim and object which is a good one for all boys from the age of five years to seventeen years.

A boy from 5 years and under 12 years pays 20c per month and receives $1.00 per week for 26 weeks and free medical attendance during sickness, besides funeral benefits. From 12 years to 15 years 25c per month and $1.50 per week. From 15 years to 17 years 30c per month and $2.00 per week sick pay. These are handsome rates and are a great benefit to the head of a home when sickness comes. The members will be glad to render any advice and information. They meet every 2nd and fourth Mondays in S.O.E. Hall, Hunter St., at 8 p.m., and are dismissed sharp at 9.30 p.m. Parents who have boys would do well to look into this and get their boys enrolled under such a good order as the Ancient Order of Foresters and with benefits such as they offer. The boys are being well looked after by a committee from the men's lodge and will have every opportunity of training that goes toward the making of good men.

THE PENNSYLVANIA DUTCHMAN BYRON H. STAUFFER'S LECTURE

A Pleasant Voyage on a Sea of Humor at George Street Church—Mr. Stauffer Eulogises the Mongrel

The George St. Methodist Church Epworth League invited Rev. Byron H. Stauffer of Bond St. Congregational Church, Toronto, to lecture last evening on "The Pennsylvania Dutchman." The reverend lecturer is famous in the Queen City as a preacher who announces his subjects in big letters outside of his church, and preaches sermons sixty minutes long. If his sermons are as entertaining as his lecture of last evening it is no wonder he can hold his congregation, for last night he spoke for upwards of two hours and a half and kept his audience interested and amused for most of that time.

Mr. Stauffer is a stoutish man with a large head, at least he has plenty of hair, though it is not so long as used to be the fashion with orators of his class. He is a typical American, has a Yankee drawl and the Yankee familiarity with his audience. But whatever of the Yankee narrowness he may have had he seems to have lost it upon becoming a Canadian, for he is whole-heartedly for the British flag and the Empire. He is a believer in the high destiny of the Anglo-Saxon race and holds that Canada ought to discourage the immigration of any but Anglo-Saxon people. "The Englishman is good enough for us," he said.

It would be difficult and perhaps impossible to do justice to the lecture or the lecturer in a newspaper report. The lecture was a series of anecdotes and sketches which could not be reproduced in print as the man and the manner was the chief source of their interest and point.

He began by saying that his Presbyterian Dutchman was a drop in the bucket of American civilization, a little sweetening or perfume. This Dutchman had not made much noise, but noise and power seldom go together. Niagara has been making a great deal of noise for, he did not know how many centuries, and has lit a few cities and driven a few street cars, while the Gulf Stream, that silent force which encircles the globe, had given us the beautiful climate of Pennsylvania and made the British Isles the centre of the world.

"My Pennsylvania Dutchman is a mongrel," said the Lecturer, "you need not despise him for that for you are all mongrels." He then told a number of stories about mongrel hens, and in passing said he was once a Methodist parson and had to move his hen-pen once every four years. He said he preferred mongrel hens and mongrel eggs. He said he once had a thoroughbred collie, not "coley" as some Canadians call it. "This collie had a pedigree that long," said the Lecturer, stretching out his arm. But one day he met with a mongrel dog, who was part hound and part collie, and parts of a number of other dogs, a mixture of all kinds of dogs, he was a mongrel. He could perform all sorts of tricks, he could even say his prayers. After seeing this mongrel he went back home and was disgusted with his thoroughbred collie. "A number of people are like that. Some Englishmen come out to this country with a long pedigree, they impress you so much with their importance that you would think they were going to get a Knighthood next week. We don't take kindly to that kind of immigrant. But the common English, Irish and Scotch are the mongrel folk, and that is the stuff of which our Empire has been built. It's the mongrel folk that are going to make the world the glory of the Anglo-Saxon race.

"My ancestors came across the seas from Holland and from Hull in England. The Pennsylvania Dutch people are a mixture of the Swiss, the Quaker and the Hollander, who settled side by side in Pennsylvania and formed an alliance and intermarried until you cannot tell one from the other, and they are all called Pennsylvania Dutch people. Their language," said Mr. Stauffer, is "a sort of short-hand German. They cut down their sentences to about half." One of the many instances he gave was about a girl calling her brother in to tea. "Come in, mother and father is already on the table and mother is half eaten." Mr. Stauffer spoke at length of the Dutchman's sense of humor, or lack of it, and told a number of stories showing the humor of various nationalities. He told one story about a Chinaman in Toronto, who was putting a bowl of rice on the grave of his dead friend. A Canadian who was putting flowers on a grave nearby, went up to the Chinaman and said: "When do you think your friend will come and eat that rice?" to which the celestial replied "about the same day when your friend will come and smell dose flowers."

The lecture was so discursive that it is impossible to more than hint at its trend, it had no trend. The lecturer would start out to describe something and before he got to the end of it he would wander all round the world and interlope little anecdotes until you did not know where one story began or the other ended. But he carried the audience along on a bright sea of humor and everybody seemed satisfied at the end of the two hours' voyage.

CHOLERA OUTBTEAK

Carload of Animals Held up at London Destroyed by Officials.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 9.—Eighty-four fine hogs en route from Cottam, near Windsor, to Gunn's Packing plant in Toronto, were killed here yesterday when Dominion Government inspectors found that they were suffering from hog cholera. Nothing was known of the outbreak until the car in which 84 hogs had been shipped was opened to feed and water them. Two animals were found dead and several others were very sick. Acting on advice from Ottawa the inspectors killed every animal and the 24 found suffering from cholera were at once made into fertilizer. As there is no general inspection here and much agitation has taken place for it by many doctors and citizens the affair has created a great sensation.

A special inspector has been rushed to Cottam to try and locate the origin of the cholera. The question of who will bear the loss is expected to cause a dispute.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1912, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,267 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 437 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto

TOOK CARBOLIC ACID

Wm. Hillman Died in Office of Chief of Police.

WOODSTOCK, Dec. 9. — William Hillman, aged about 45 years, died in the office of the chief of police yesterday afternoon as the result of carbolic acid, which he had swallowed before entering the office.

Shortly before three o'clock the man walked into the office and stood for a moment behind the chief's chair. The chief finished a few words he was writing and turned around, to be met by the odor of carbolic acid, which the visitor acknowledged having taken. A doctor was summoned, but before he reached the office Hillman was dead.

Little is known of Hillman locally, but it is believed he was the victim of despondency. He had been employed with the Thomas Organ & Piano Co. until Saturday morning last. That the suicide was premeditated was shown by a letter found in the dead man's pocket.

HIS MIND A BLANK

Young Man at Niagara Falls Can't Remember Name.

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y., Dec. 9.—With his mind a blank for more than twenty-four hours, a young man, who lost his memory when he fainted in the lobby of St. Paul's Church Sunday night, begged the nurses at the Memorial Hospital to do all in their power to learn who he is.

Yesterday he was questioned by Dr. Miller, but was unable to tell his name or where his home is. A picture of two children, a girl about five years old and a boy about three years old, a Toronto street car transfer, dated Nov. 28, and a Buffalo & Niagara trolley conductor's receipt, found in his pockets, were shown to the man, but none of them awakened his memory.

The man is about 26 years old, 180 pounds in weight, six feet tall, light complexion, well dressed.

Sculptor's Sudden Death.

ROME, Italy, Dec. 9.—Franklyn Simmons, a well-known American sculptor, died suddenly here yesterday while taking a hot bath.

Mr. Simmons was born at Webster, Maine, Jan. 11, 1839. Since 1868 he had lived mostly in Rome. His work included about 100 portrait busts in marble, some fifteen public monuments and numerous ideal statues. The sculptor was decorated three times by the King of Italy.

MEXICAN REFUGEES POUR OUT

Huerta's Military Commanders in the North have Deserted Their Post.

PRESIDIO, Texas, Dec. 9.—In the remarkable exodus which struggled for eight days over an 185-mile trail through the desert and endured great hardships for want of food and water were Gen. Salvador Mercado, Huerta's deposed military governor and commander of the Federal troops in the north; Gen. Pascual Orosco, Gen. Antonio Rojas, Gen. Marcelo Caraveo, Gen. Ynez Salazar, and a host of subordinate officers. They had deserted their posts in fear of Gen. Francisco Villa's rebel army, and virtually had surrendered to the rebels Chihuahua, the state capital, and the largest of the far northern cities.

Along with them came, burdened with what property they could carry, men, women and children, representing some of the richest families in the republic. Their flight with the army was in the face of reports that they might expect no mercy should they fall into the hands of the rebels. Luis Terrazan, a wealthy land owner, reputed to own half of the State of Chihuahua, was said to have brought with him a vast fortune in cash, fearing it might be looted by the rebels if he remained in the evacuated city.

Witnesses viewing the oncoming through from the hills at Ojinaga reported the refugees were scattered in a thin line for several miles into the interior, and that the dusty confusion of broken down wagons, disabled artillery and mingling of disheartened soldiers and famished civilians as they slowly moved over the desert presented a spectacle of universal despair.

The fear of being unable to keep pace with the escorting army, of being lost on the desert or caught by the rebels, added to the miseries of so precipitate a flight and kept the refugees in almost a continuous frenzy. Their arrival in a panic, but unmolested by the rebels, formed one of the most tragic incidents of the present revolution.

Huerta's Family Leaves?

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 9.—Provisional President Huerta's family is again reported to have left the capital. A report, apparently well founded, current here yesterday was to the effect that the members of the President's household had gone to Guadalajara, the capital of the State of Jalisco, from where it was said they would go to the Pacific port of Manzanillo, in the State of Colima.

Capt. Luis Fuentes, President Huerta's son-in-law, Mrs. Fuentes, and Miss Elena Huerta, another daughter, were in the party which left for Guadalajara. It was reported that the President's wife has also left the capital, but this is not confirmed.

BRITISHERS AROUSED.

Cornish Miners In Michigan Resent Murder of Jame Brothers.

CALUMET, Mich., Dec. 9.—Three hundred Cornish miners employed by the Champion Mine at Rainesdale in the copper strike district, aroused by the murder of Arthur and Harry Jame and Thomas Daly, Englishmen, Sunday morning, yesterday held an indignation meeting. The Western Federation of Miners was denounced and a demand was made for protection and law enforcement. A committee was appointed to inform the mine management that the protestants would not return to work unless the company agreed not to reinstate the strikers.

Rainesville strikers were not permitted to parade yesterday.

At Baltic strikers refused to obey the order of deputy sheriffs not to traverse mine property and a shot was fired at the officers. The latter charged with riot sticks and dispersed the crowd.

The murder of the James and Daly has been called to the attention of the British Government.

Can't Stop Exclusion.

ROME, Dec. 9.—The Government was interrogated in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday regarding the exclusion from the United States of illiterate immigrants, which special reference to what measures it intends to take in the way of remedy.

It was stated in behalf of the Government that intervention in the internal affairs of the United States was impossible. It was suggested that the only means to combat exclusion was through diplomatic influence and by establishing schools in Italy for emigrants.

He's Off For Europe.

HAVANA, Dec. 9.—Adolfo de la Lama, Minister of Finance in the Cabinet of Provisional President Huerta, arrived here yesterday from Vera Cruz on board the steamer Ypiranga. Senor de la Lama is going to Europe by way of New York.

The Mexican Finance Minister refused to make any statement with regard to the situation in Mexico. He said his purpose in going to Europe was to place his sons at Swiss schools.

Railroad Aids Temperance.

PORTLAND, Me., Dec. 9.—Action against illegal liquor traffic in this state was taken by the Boston & Maine Railroad yesterday. A rule was issued that shippers and those to whom liquors are forwarded over the railroad must sign a statement that the consignment is not to be received, sold or possessed in violation of state or federal laws.

Every guest who cannot play always tries the hotel piano.

TUNNEL NEARS END

C.N.R. Hole Through Mount Royal Will Be Complete To-night.

MONTREAL, Dec. 9.—At a point some 620 feet below the highest point of Mount Royal the two headings of the C.N.R. tunnel will meet this evening, almost exactly 15 months after the first heading in the tunnel was commenced, and on Wednesday the first train will run through the tunnel from the west portal to the Dorchester Station.

This establishes a new record for deep tunneling on the American continent and takes the record from the United States, while with the exception of certain of the Swiss tunnels, where the headings are much smaller and the rock softer, the achievement of the C.N.R. engineers is a world's record.

The tapping of the drills could be heard through the dividing rock yesterday.

SIGNS OF GOOD TIMES

High Cost of Living Indicates Expansion, Says Crothers.

HALIFAX, N.S., Dec. 9.—"To my mind, the high cost of living is an indication of the prosperity and expansion of this country," declared Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, in the course of an address on labor conditions in Canada at the business men's luncheon at the Queen Hotel yesterday.

"I do not profess to be an expert, but, in my opinion, the reason for the high cost of living is that there is a smaller percentage of people tilling the soil than ever before. The supply is not equal to the demand, and consequently the prices go up.

"If you want cheap living let's have a few years of hard times."

It's as easy to buy experience as it is difficult to sell it.

C.N.R. NO CRITERION

Counsel Objects to It as Standard for Rates.

OTTAWA, Dec. 9.—Isaac Pitblado, K.C., counsel for the Winnipeg Board of Trade in the western freight rates case, registered a strong objection during his argument yesterday afternoon against the proposal that the Board of Railway Commissioners accept the C.N.R. as the standard road in fixing a new schedule of freight rates for the west.

"There are a number of things the board should consider in connection with the C.N.R.," warned Mr. Pitblado. "Is there any water in the stock? I say if there is, the public will be asked to pay the interest on it. If that board is going to take this road as the standard road it cannot divest itself from the responsibility of making further investigation into the capitalization and financial standing of the company."

"Do you mean that the board should make a further inquiry?" asked Chairman Drayton.

"Yes, that is what I do mean if you adopt the C.N.R. as the standard road, as has been suggested. That is what the order-in-council specifies," answered Mr. Pitblado.

L. G. McPhillips, K.C., counsel for British Columbia, has deferred his argument until F. H. Chrysler for the C.P.R. has concluded his argument, which he began about 20 minutes before the board adjourned last evening.

Duluth Shipping Closed.

DULUTH, Dec. 9.—With the departure of the Squire yesterday with grain and the Lakeland with package freight and the arrival of the Muncy with package freight, the marine season for the year 1913 came to an end.

Whitewash Hid Thieving.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—During the fifteen minutes that Solomon Goldman was away from his jewelry store yesterday, thieves plastered the front windows and glass door with whitewash so that no one could look inside, opened the door with a key and stole watches, rings and jewels worth $3,000. The robbery occurred while crowds were passing on the sidewalk.

The police call it one of the quickest and boldest jobs on record.

Three Are Drowned.

EDMONTON, Alta., Dec. 9.—While crossing the ice on the Athabasca river near Pocohontas, on Saturday, three men, T. Leonard, C. Cantonio and L. B. Areo, broke through and were drowned. As yet their bodies have not been recovered. Cantonio managed to get out, but was drowned trying to rescue the other two.

There might be danger of another deluge if women could only weep for a purpose without getting their noses red.

The worst thing you can do for some men is praise them.

How He Would Celebrate.

BERLIN, Ont., Dec. 9.—It is definitely known that among the suggestions offered as to how to celebrate fittingly the centenary of peace by the United States and Canada in 1914 was one sent by a Berlin man to President Wilson and Premier Borden, in which he proposed that the Governments of the two countries set aside one-tenth of the appropriation for militia and defence to assist the laymen's missionary movement in their endeavor to evangelize the world in this generation. In reply, Premier Borden has promised the earnest consideration of his Government.

Naval Holiday Strongly Upheld.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—By an overwhelming vote the House yesterday passed the Hensley resolution, requesting President Wilson, so far as he can do so with due regard for interests of the United States, to cooperate with the suggestion of Winston Churchill, Lord of the British Admiralty, for an international naval holiday of one year.

Decide NOW for Good Roads—

DECEMBER - 1913 JANUARY - 1914 JUNE - 1914 JULY - 1914 AUGUST - 1914

Don't wait until Summer

YOU can't build roads in winter---but what you can do is to decide which roads shall be started next spring. Get an early start so that the roads will be ready for use in summer. If you wait till spring before deciding what to do you will find when late summer and early fall come around, that your roads are still unfinished—and that is the time you need them most.

Outline your road needs now, make investigations into the cost and type of construction, influence public opinion for highways that mean greater economy to every person in your community.

Start right now—get action on the improvement of your bad roads—begin the construction as soon as spring opens, and by next summer you will have roads over which you can haul a full load in less time than you could formerly haul only half a load.

Good Roads (not a makeshift of filling up ruts and mud-holes), besides marking the economic progress of a community, are an important factor in reducing the cost of living and improving the general prosperity. Insist on "good roads"—roads that will stay good for years to come, that kind is cheapest.

Investigate Concrete Roads

THEY are not only the "best good roads," but they are cheapest at the end of ten, fifteen or twenty years. Their first cost is comparatively the same as that of any good road, but their maintenance cost minimizes the original expenditure because the upkeep is practically nothing. This makes concrete the "economy road," and being free from ruts, holes, mud and dust, easy of traction, and open to traffic the year round, makes concrete the "road to satisfaction."

Every citizen owes it to himself, to his family and to his community, to use his influence for good roads because they have a bearing on his everyday life, which is of vital importance to his economic living and future prosperity.

Everyone interested can obtain the fullest information about Concrete Roads, free, by addressing

JUNGLE KINGS HAD RECORD SEASON

Hamilton Spectator.

The Tiger record is fourteen games played, thirteen won and one lost, the latter by a one-point margin in Ottawa. This is easily the best record ever established in one year by any Canadian team. It is to be regretted that even in spite of their fourteen games and their continued success the Tigers should be forced to hang up their harness without meeting McGill, Intercollegiate champions. Opinion is general that Tigers would beat McGill, but still the doubt is there.

And this reminds us that the Tiger record for the season is as follows:

Tigers	26	Winnipeg	1
Tigers	26	Regina	4
Tigers	25	Moose Jaw	1
Tigers	18	Calgary	2

ENGLISHMAN WALKED 4,000 MILES AND WINS WAGER OF $3,000

WINNIPEG, Dec. 9.—A four thousand mile walk, which was begun in August 23 last, was completed at the city hall when W. C. Browne, of the King's Own Scottish Borderers, arrived on foot from Providence, R.I., having travelled every mile of the distance on foot. Brown has averaged 42 miles a day since starting and wins a wager of $3,000 which was made in England and which was the cause of his trip. He left Providence, in accordance with the terms of the bet, with only $1 in his possession, and has arrived in Winnipeg, practically broke, but appears to be little troubled by his financial position, looking in the pink of health and spirits.

Browne this morning spoke from the balcony of the city hall and was congratulated by Mayor Deacon on his achievement. The mayor also presented him with a medal bearing the Winnipeg coat-of-arms. Browne carried with him a pack weighing 53 pounds and a rifle weighing 23. Browne is a native of Darlington, Durham, England.

COBOURG CLUB WANTS BIG END

Hockey Club Wants Sixty Per Cent. of the Receipts.

COBOURG, Dec. 9.—So far this season the Cobourg Hockey Club and the rink management have failed to come to terms, and the result is that the boys say there will be no hockey in Cobourg this winter. The team are asking for 60 per cent. of the proceeds of hockey matches instead of 50 per cent., and to this the management so far have not agreed. It is hoped that the matter may be amicably settled.

GUELPH, Dec. 9.—There is still a chance for the Maple Leaf Baseball Club to remain in Guelph for another year. In a long distance telephone conversation with Mr. Geo. Mahoney, that gentleman stated that he was open for a proposition from any body of reputable Guelph business men, when he would be pleased to come over to Guelph to talk the matter over. He stated most emphatically that he did not buy the club under instructions from anyone here, and had not fully made up his mind what he was going to do with it. He had the Erie proposition in mind, however, but would prefer chance.

NO TANGOING

Rideau Hall Will Not Witness the Merry Novelty.

OTTAWA, Dec. 9.—The tango, mild or otherwise, will not be tolerated at Rideau Hall. Not that there has been any definite instructions that the latest craze is unacceptable to Their Royal Highnesses, but it has been quietly but effectively made known to those members of society who have the honor of being invited to the dinner dances at Government House that the Duchess of Connaught disapproves of any of the many tango steps being introduced in the ballroom.

This politely-expressed ban has come as a sad disappointment to some society ladies in the capital. At Rideau Hall fairly broad views have been held by the duchess with regard to many recent social innovations, and society, spelled with a capital S fully anticipated being able to dance the very latest in the tango.

To prepare for this, and in order that their demonstrations could not be criticized from the point of view of inability, a number of Ottawa ladies formed a club early in the autumn and at very heavy expense engaged a New York lady who is an expert in every one of the 120 steps of the tango. With much zest these society ladies delved into the mysteries of the dance. But when it became known that the tango would be banned at Rideau Hall the zest somewhat faded away, and after a few desultory lessons the expert tangoist was sent back to New York, her services being no longer necessary.

Not that she had inculcated into the mind and feet of the ladies the whole of the tango steps, but what was the use when Rideau Hall barred all the said steps? The result of the unfinished lessons is shown clearly in the abortive and amusing attempts to dance the tango made by the great majority at the society dances in the capital.

WAYS THAT ARE DARK.

The Tigers Will Avoid Indian Buck Jumpers Hereafter.

Here is a story, current in the West, regarding the recent trip through that country of the Hamilton Tigers, who played the merry game of bucking the centre in various cities through that portion of the country. When jumping from one point to another the Tigers, of whom there was a good-sized party, were delayed by reason of a wreck ahead. The stop meant one of some hours and time hung heavy on their hands. One member of the party finally discovered an Indian roaming about the little station, and entering into conversation, said son of the soil finally volunteered that he would ride a bucking horse for them for a consideration. The hat was handed round and $25 collected, and Mr. Indian went in quest of the horse. Half an hour later he was back with a dilapidated specimen of horseflesh, upon which sat jauntily enough a very fine saddle. Lo wanted some money in advance, and was finally given $12.50, being promised the remainder of the $25 when he had finished his performance. However, it was at this point that the trouble began, for there wasn't a buck in that piece of horseflesh. There never had, apparently, been enough life in the brute to shake a child off its back, not to speak of the stalwart red man. Naturally enough the members of the Tiger team either wanted their money back or a real performance. But the Indian didn't see it that way. Finally one of the Tigers took the law in his own hands. He undid the saddle which was a fine specimen, and not at all in accord with the horse, and told the Indian that when he produced a real bucking horse he could have the saddle, and in addition the remainder of the money collected for entertainment purposes.

The Indian murmured, turned and went his way, the saddle in the meantime remaining in the possession of the footballers. For an hour or so they waited, but no Indian appeared. However, in the course of time another man did appear. He wore a broad-brimmed hat, top boots with spurs, a red coat and a pair of blue trousers, and on his shoulders were the magic letters, "R.N.W.M.P." He was business-like. He wanted to know the man who had taken a saddle, and he wanted to know right off. He wanted the saddle, and he also wanted the man who had taken it. The Tigers, one and all, tried to explain. They were merely keeping the saddle as a ransom. But somehow the fellow in the red coat was not appeased. The man who had taken that saddle was the receiver of stolen goods, and then came some light on the curious mix-up. The Indian in question didn't own a saddle, possibly never had owned one, and certainly had never owned so good a one as that now in possession of the Tigers. Poor Lo had, it seems, borrowed that saddle at a certain livery stable up the road when the owner was not about, and the lawful owner set the Northwest Mounted man on the trail to recover his property. The policeman had traced it to the Indian in question, and from him to the Hamilton Tigers, hence the descent upon the train. Unnecessary to state, the Tigers gave the representative of the law back the stolen goods, and made all necessary apologies and explanations, and left that section of country less their $12.50, and wiser to the extent of not trusting an Indian nor monkeying with that arm of the law known as the "R.N.W.M.P."

He Remembers.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Dec. 8.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, offerings this morning amounted to 1300 cattle, 600 sheep and lambs, 2000 hogs and 300 calves.

Owing to the continued limited supply of good cattle coming forward, a much stronger feeling has developed in the market since this day week and prices have advanced 25c to 50c per 100 pounds and in some cases more, and the prospects are that prices this day next week will be much higher for choice Christmas stock. There continues to be a steady demand from American buyers for common cattle notwithstanding the steady upward tendency of prices. A feature of the trade was the continued scarcity of choice steers. There were none on the market and there was considerable inquiry from both butchers and packers and they would have paid $8.25 to $8.50 per cwt. for such stock. The demand for other grades of cattle was good.

Small Meats Firm

There was no change in the condition of the market for small meats, but the feeling is very firm on account of the fact that the supplies coming forward are small, for which there is a good demand and an active trade is being done.

A weaker feeling developed in the market for hogs today, and prices, as compared with those paid last Wednesday were 25c per 100 pounds lower, which was attributed to the increased offerings.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $8.25 to $8.50, medium, $7 to $7.75; common, $5 to $6; canners, $4 to $4.25; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $6.75 to $7, medium, $5.50 to $6, butchers' cattle, bulls, $5 to $7; choice milkers, $90 to $95, common and medium milkers, $80 to $85, springers, $70 to $75; sheep, ewes, $5.25 to $5.50; bucks and culls, $4.50 to $5; lambs, $7.50 to $8.25, hogs, f.o.b., $8.75 to $9.25; calves, $6 to $20.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, Dec. 8.—Cattle—Receipts 25,000. Market steady. Beeves, $6.65 to $9.50; Texas steers, $6.70 to $7.80; stockers and feeders, $4.90 to $7.70; cows and heifers, $3.50 to $8.40; calves, $7 to $11.

Hogs—Receipts 43,000. Market active. Light, $7.30 to $7.85; mixed, $7.55 to $7.95; heavy, $7.55 to $7.95; rough, $7.55 to $7.65; pigs, $5.50 to $7.40; bulk of sales, $7.70 to $7.90.

Sheep—Receipts 36,000. Market strong. Native, $4.25 to $5.60; yearlings, $5.50 to $7; lambs, native, $6.50 to $8.

Trying to Corner Market.

OTTAWA, Dec. 9.—Officials of the Department of Agriculture are inclined to the belief that the proposed embargo by the United States on Canadian potatoes because of alleged "powdery scab," is being engineered by American interests, who hope to corner the market in that country.

DECEMBER SESSIONS OF COUNTY COURT PROCEEDING

John Godfrey Seeks to Recover $300 From Wm. Edwards

The December sessions of the County Court opened this afternoon before His Honor Judge Huycke. The Grand Jury was sworn in and their duties explained. In addressing this body, His Honor stated that he was pleased to see that there was no one awaiting trial either in jail or out on bail. This was a credit to the county for as a general rule there are criminal cases to deal with. Since there was an absence of such cases the duties of the Grand Jury consisted of the inspection and examination of the public institutions, etc. In referring to this, Judge Huycke reminded them that they represented the ratepayers and had full power to question officials and employees in order to ascertain if the institutions were in first class conditions and the inmates properly attended to. He then dismissed them, ordering them to return and present their report to him.

The first case was that of Mr. and Mrs. John Godfrey bringing action against Wm. Edwards to recover $300.00. The jury sworn in for this case were: Messrs. J. W. Boorman, Wm. Thompson, Thos. Harris, W. H. Harper, George Barrie, Albert McIlmoyle, John Halpin, Howard Tighe, Nicholas Bibby, George Curtis, T. E. Whibbs and Fred Finnie. Dumble and Johnston are appearing for the plaintiffs and G. N. Gordon for the defendant.

Mr. Dumble in addressing the jury, gave a brief synopsis of the reason for the action.. Mr. Edwards is a butcher on George Street and rents the rooms above his shop. In November of 1911 he rented these rooms to Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey at $6 per month. Mr. Godfrey worked out of the city and sent money home frequently and the rent was paid.

Went to Toronto

In September 1912 Mrs. Godfrey wished to go to Toronto to see a relative who was at death's door. She was behind a little in her rent and when she told Mr. Edwards where she was going and that she would be back in a few weeks, he stated that it was all right. When in Toronto she wanted the piano which was in her home so that her daughter could keep up her music. Mr. Edwards refused to let it go out of the rooms and soon afterwards she received word from her husband in North Bay that Mr. Edwards had notified him that he had seized the furniture in the house for rent.

Mrs. Godfrey came to the city and when she arrived at her home she found her furniture gone and other people living there. Mr. Edwards has sold some of the property and the steps he took were not legal. When Mrs. Godfrey acquainted a lawyer with the fact, the lawyer wrote to Mr. Edwards about it but never received an answer. As he had abused his rights and stripped them of their home Mrs. Godfrey brought action against him to recover $300.00.

The witnesses are being heard.

An Army Wedding

Two young Salvation Army workers will be wedded at the Temple, Wednesday evening. Adjutant McElheney will officiate. After the ceremony supper will be served in the Sunday School room.

MOTHER'S CLUB

Meeting Wednesday Afternoon at Three O'clock.

The Mother's Club will hold its regular monthly meeting in the Board Room of the Y.M.C.A. Wednesday, Dec. 10th, at three o'clock.

A paper will be given by Mrs. Hainsworth, on "Teaching Truth." After reading the little poem below you will understand why we should give his question careful study:

"The Really Reason Why."

Mamma, why is it that the sun
Shines only in the day?
Why does he shine so nice and warm
When he's so far away?
Why are the stars so very large?
Each one loks like a spark,
Why does the moon shine when it's light?
And never when it's dark?
Why are the summers always warm,
The winters always cold?
Why is it that each year must die
When only one year old?
And whycan't little children be
As big as their papas?
And when I ask you questions Ma,
Why do you say "Because?"
Why is it, mamma, when it rains
So cloudy in the sky?
I'd like to know 'bout lots of things
The really reason why.
And there's some other sorts of things
I'd like to ask about,
Only you always say: "Hush, hush,"
And so I can't find out.
The boys at school, they tell me tales
That don't seeme nice and clean,
I wish you'd tell me, so I'd know
What these things really mean;
Because, you see, I know, mamma,
You'd never, never, lie
So, if you 'splained it why, 'twould be
The really reason why.
—Mary Wood Allen.

Truth is fair, should we forego it?
Can we sigh right for a wrong?
God Himself is the best poet,
And the real, is His song.
Sing His truth out fair and full,
And secure His beautiful.

O brave poets, keep back nothing,
Nor mix falsehood with the whole;
Look up God-ward, speak the truth in Worthy song from earnest soul;
Hold in high poetic duty.
Truest truth, the fairest beauty.
—Mrs. Browning.

A vocal solo by Mrs. W. B. Hughes will be given and Mrs. Jas. Rollins will be present to give an outline of the work to be done in the Mother's Clubs, which are to be formed in connection with the Public schools.

All motehrs who have boys in the Y.M.C.A. are urged to be present. Visitors are welcome.

BREAK DOWN AT INCINERATOR

Garbage Consumer at London Ceased Operations.

The incinerator at London is giving trouble according to the London Advertiser which has the following to say:

At the plant today The Advertiser saw ample confirmation of its statements that the plant was giving trouble. One of the workmen employed there stated that the incinerator had been shut down Tuesday and Wednesday, while another told the reporter that the stoppage had been of more than 30 hours duration, and during this time there had been no disposal of garbage. The stuff had been hauled in as usual, and the receiving room was piled high with the accumulation, the last of which is being disposed of today.

Odor Exists Again.

The odor arising from this accumulation was, to put it mildly, not such as might emanate from a perfume factory, and was noticeable some distance from the destructor building. A fine line of smoke was drifting up from the mayor's pet smell factory, when the reporter hove in sight, and to say at that time, at any rate, that there was no odor from the plant, would be absurd. Just how the hospital authorities relish the aroma is a matter for conjecture.

The main trouble resulting in the shut down, The Advertiser learned, resulted from the breaks in the big fan which provides the draft necessary for the consumption of the garbage. Without this draft it is almost impossible to destroy the matter.

Firebox Doors Cracked

Another trouble lay with the firebox doors, all three of which are cracked and have had to be patched up by local mechanics. This, The Advertiser was told, was due to the absence of firebrick which has since been placed in front of the doors.

Ald. B. W. Bennett, chairman of the board of works, which has control of the system of garbage collection and destruction, states that The Advertiser's report of the shutdown was perfectly correct, and that no repairs for the incinerator are here, local contractors having received orders from Laurie & Lamb Company, the constructing firm, to go ahead with the necessary repairs.

"MOVIES" FOR CHARLOTTE STREET

Dr. F. L. Robinson to Have a Moving Picture Theatre.

Dr. Robinson, the well known livery proprietor, is renovating his building with the intention of starting a moving picture show. The present entrance to the light livery will be the portion set out for this purpose and when completed it will have a seating capacity of 1,000. The main office will remain at 226 Charlotte while the entrance to the hack department will be on Aylmer Street, one door north of Charlotte.

The light livery has been moved to the south side of Charlotte St., with an entrance on both Charlotte and Aylmer Streets.

The Review could not find out just when the theatre would be completed but it is expected to be ready for opening in the course of two months.

A NEW CHOCOLATE FUDGE

If you like fudge, and want a new treat in this delicious and easily made confection, just try the following recipe:

Mix 2 cups granulated sugar, two tablespoons FRY's Chocolate Icing Powder and a piece of butter size of a walnut. Stir in one cup of milk and boil very slowly from 20 minutes to a half hour—until it forms a ball when dropped into cold water. A few nuts make a pleasant addition. Remove from fire, beat until stiff, pour into pan, and when cool cut into squares.

FRY'S Chocolate Icing Powder makes fudge of an exquisitely delicate and rich flavor. Try it.

The Charitable Williams.

At the funeral services of an elderly darky of Richmond, Va., the following colloquy was overheard between two aged negroes:

"There ain't no use in talkin'," said Mose Barker: "Dick Williams, he was the most charitablest man dis town ever seen."

"I reckon dat's so," said the darky to whom Mr. Barker imparted this information. And he paused as if waiting for evidence on this point.

"Yessuh," continued Mr. Barker, "Dick Williams, he always owned a plug hat, and durin' my time I ain't never heerd that Dick ever refused to lend dat hat to anybody"—Judge.

It Is Economy to Use Our Milk
For the Reason That There is No Waste

Stop and think! If one bottle goes sour you lose the price of it. This loss is equal to the extra cost of our milk. If two bottles go sour you have paid more for your milk than ours costs, and then you have the annoyance besides. Many have found this to be true. Have you? : : : : : : : : :
